RICKENBACKER'S OWN STORY!

TELLS OF 24 DAY ORDEAL IN LIFE RAFT ON PACIFIC

Certain I'd Be Saved, Flyer Hero Says.

[By wireless to the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune.]

PEARL HARBOR, T. H., Nov. 21.—Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker's own story of his 24 days on a life raft in the Pacific, as told to two marine corps official war reporters, First Lieut. John W. Thomason III. and Sergt. Richard C. Seither, arrived here today.

The reporters said the World war ace and the six others of his seven man plane crew who were rescued were all in satisfactory condition and their health is improving. One member of the crew died in a life raft. The plane was lost at sea Oct. 21 and the marine corps reporters obtained their story from Rickenbacker himself Nov. 14, the day after he was rescued.

By Saturday morning, Nov. 14, the famed American flyer was "feeling great" after having responded better than any of the other survivors to one day of rest and medical care. The captain was asked how it felt to be at death's door.

How It Feels to Face Death.

"Yes, sir, I feel I can speak as an authority on that subject," he declared. "This makes the fourth time of my stormy life I have been very close to death. I know I came within hearing distance of 'the old fellow' this trip because his approach, always the same, is unmistakable."

"One hears beautiful, soft music and everything is extremely pleasant," he said, "just as heaven should be."

"What makes you thing you'd be going to heaven?" the captain was asked by a joker who sat by his bed.

"I guess that was presumptious of me, at that," Rickenbacker said.

His four narrow escapes from death were listed by Capt. Rickenbacker as "once in the early days when I was injured in the smashup of one of the speed automobiles I was driving in a race; once when the doctor yanked out my tonsils and left me bleeding almost to death; again at that plane crackup outside Atlanta, Ga., when I lay on top of a dead man for 18 hours before being rescued, and then this time, of course."

The flashing bulbs of Sergt. H. Neil Gillespie, photographer of the marine corps unit which manned this tiny South Pacific atoll, attracted the attention of youthful Pvt. John Bartek in the next room and he called "Good morning, Capt. Rickenbacker."

"Hello, Johnny boy, how are you doing this morning? The Doc [Dr. James T. Fuller, whom the survivors all seemed to idolize] told me how you're improving."

Blisters Pop Open.

"Hey, Mr. Rickenbacker, may I come in and have my picture taken with you? They've already taken some of me, but I want my mom to see me in one with you."

A few of the sun blisters on the captain's burned face popped open as his face lighted up, but before answering he pondered the condition of the youth who is probably the weakest of the survivors because he of them all was the only one who had drunk salt water. He weakened and drank the water during the last two days. Then, his decision made, Capt. Rickenbacker roared with a noise that was inversely proportionate to the softness of his eyes:

"No, you stay right there in bed or I'll get on one of my mads at you," he shouted to Bartek, who shut up like a clam.

Aside, Rickenbacker told of his "mads."

"Been getting mad like that at people all my life," he explained, "and I've become expert at it, too. I found I had to do it in my business to keep guys in line but never did the ability come in more handy than on this experience. We all got to bickering pretty badly among ourselves at times and if I hadn't got tough and shouted them down with my 'mads' I'm sure several of the men would have cracked completely."

"What Faith Can Do.

Upon setting foot on this atoll in the dark early morning hours of Friday, Nov. 13, Rickenbacker had turned to Pvt. Bartek who had carried a copy of the New Testament thruout the ordeal and said: "Better

TURKEY'S AWKWARD POSITION IN THE MIDST OF THANKSGIVING WEEK

M'NAIR ASSERTS SHIPS LIMIT AEF

U. S. Overtaxed to Supply World, He Warns.

Fort Knox, Ky., Nov. 21 [Special].—Lieut. Gen. Lesley J. McNair, commander of the army ground forces, warned tonight that our productive capacity is overtaxed by the job of supplying war material to "a goodly portion of the entire world."

Gen. L. J. McNair.

Addressing a graduating class at the armored force officer candidate school here, Gen. McNair told the new officers that they are going to have to do "much with little," and asserted economy in both personnel and material is essential.

He said shipping is a bottleneck which will probably prevent us from bringing our full power to bear against our enemies overseas. Realization of this fact, and of the fact that our man power is not unlimited, is part of a new phase into which the development of the armored force is passing, he said.

Recalls Lean Days.

"The development of the armored force rather particularly, and of all our forces in some degree, may be said to be leaving one stage and entering another," he said. "In 1940 we left the lean and hungry days when money for the army was very, very scarce, and entered a period when all bets were off and the sky was the limit. The armored force was denied nothing in the way of elaborate and costly equipment and fortunately took full advantage of the good going.

"The new era is based on the realization that our man power is not unlimited, shipping is a bottleneck, and that we probably shall be unable to bring our full power to bear against our enemies overseas. Even our war materials, heralded as inexhaustible, are proving inadequate in supplying a goodly portion of the entire world with all its needs and demands.

"Our tremendous productive capacity is overtaxed," Gen. McNair asserted. "All in all, the grim fact stands out that we must economize in both personnel and material.

Luxuries to Be Sacrificed.

"We must weigh carefully what will be included in cargoes going overseas and what will be omitted. Military luxuries must go by the boards. All must be eliminated that does not pay its way in fighting power.

"You are going to have to do much with little," the speaker told the graduates, "and the situation will require understanding and helpfulness on the part not only of the high command but of every echelon down to include you graduates and your platoon."

Tactics Still Developing.

McNair said the fighting in Libya and Egypt had established once more that "tactics may well be a more potent factor than mere military strength," and that the tactics of armored warfare still were developing.

"The armored actions in the great battle of Egypt in May and June were different from those in the battle now nearing its final phases," he said.

[A survey on page 11 shows shipping inadequate to transport and supply 10 million men in armed service abroad. A box score of warship and merchant vessel losses by the United States and her enemies to date appears on page 10.]

WILMINGTON GRANTED FEDERAL AID TO PAY SALARIES OF POLICE

The village of Wilmington, in Will county, received word yesterday of presidential approval for financial help in increasing its police force. Wilmington was notified that it will be granted $1,800 from the federal works office to maintain and operate additional police for the period to next May 1. Mayor A. P. Oswald said the nearness of Wilmington to the Elwood and Kankakee ordnance plants has increased its population and general need for more police. Wilmington now has two policemen, and with the federal grant will provide two more. The next job, said Mayor Oswald, will be to find new men.

HOOK TO SCALE WALL FOUND IN STATE PRISON

A new escape plot was discovered and frustrated yesterday at the Stateville penitentiary near Joliet when a hook, 30 feet long and designed to scale the prison walls, was found buried under a coal pile.

Warden Joseph E. Ragen, who made public the find, said that the hook consisted of three metal pipes, each 10 feet long. Each pipe end was threaded so that the pipes could be connected into one length. The end of the top length was fitted with a large, steel hook, which had been welded on.

The prison wall is 32 feet high so that the pipe hook, in the hands of one or more convicts, could easily have reached the top of the wall.

Ragen said he doubted the pipe was made in preparation for the escape Oct. 9 of Roger Touhy and six other desperadoes, who are still at large. They used guns.

On Nov. 9 Warden Ragen foiled another escape plot when he discovered that three convicts had sawed away the bars of their cell and replaced them with wood.

IGNORE DETROIT GAS CARD SIGNUP

166,000 Fail to Act as Rationing Is Rapped.

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 21 [Special].—It was indicated today that price administration officials in Detroit face a choice: Postponing the start of gasoline rationing, scheduled to begin Dec. 1, or risking curtailment of war production.

This problem arose as a result of the failure of about 166,000 automobile owners, many of them war workers, to register for basic "A" ration cards in the three day period ended last night.

A new opportunity to acquire the basic cards required of all motorists will not occur until Dec. 2, it was said by Edward T. Broadwell, a state gasoline rationing official.

Admits Problem "Serious."

Broadwell admitted that "this certainly looks like a serious problem," but reiterated that the Office of Price Administration has no intention of putting off the effective date of rationing.

OPA officials attributed apathy to the registration to civic protests against the rationing and to postponement of the effective date, originally Nov. 22.

Virtually all of the city's 546,000 passenger automobiles are used daily to get workers to and from jobs, according to a board of education survey upon which the OPA based its registration program.

Public Transit Hard Hit.

The situation is complicated by the fact the city's only public transit system already is taxed to capacity.

Civic leaders, led by the Detroit board of commerce and the Automobile club of Michigan, indicated they would intensify their appeal to Washington, D. C., authorities for a 90 day delay "until it is proven that we need" gasoline rationing.

Yanks Batter Japs in Buna, Solomons

Jap Ships Off Shore

ALLIED HEADQUARTERS IN AUSTRALIA, Nov. 22 [Sunday]—(AP).—Fierce fighting raged for the second day at Buna, New Guinea, between Gen. Douglas MacArthur's advancing American and Australian troops and Japanese forces with their backs to the sea, the high command reported today.

The allied air force reëntered the struggle after being checkmated by bad weather yesterday, when the heavy fighting opened for the decision which might be the most smashing land blow the Japs have suffered.

Ships Off Coast.

Japanese naval forces, still willing to risk punishment despite this week's loss of a light cruiser and a destroyer which got under the bombardment of allied planes, were reported again maneuvering off the coast.

Yesterday's communique told of the first appearance of Jap air units in force in some time, but today's reported the allied flyers back in action, continuously bombing and strafing enemy positions and shooting down two enemy fighters.

Bombers Raid Kavieng.

The heavy fighting continued all along the short strip of coast between Gona and Buna.

Allied bombers returned again last night to Kavieng, on New Ireland to the north of New Guinea, raiding the airdrome.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21 (AP).—The navy announced today that American troops on Guadalcanal Island had advanced their western flank well into territory formerly held by the Japanese.

A communique said the advance, made by army and marine forces, had carried the western peg of the American line to a point about five miles west of the air field on Guadalcanal and about one mile west of the Matanikau river, formerly the boundary of the American position.

Kill 35 Japanese.

Generally reflecting a new outburst of land activity on the island, following last week's naval victories, the communique also reported that American patrols had advanced an outpost line—on which flank was not stated—and about 35 Japanese were killed.

The advance to the west was made on Nov. 18, the advance of the outpost line was on Nov. 19, and on Nov. 21, which was yesterday, Guadalcanal time, ground forces were reported engaged in "minor activity."

Three More Planes Downed.

The communique also raised by three the number of enemy planes which had been shot down Nov. 18 when a group of army Flying Fortresses attacked Japanese cargo vessels at Buin on Bougainville Island.

This raised the total number of enemy planes destroyed in that action to 13 Zeros and two float biplanes.

Two U. S. Generals Swim Ashore From Burning Ships

BY E. R. NODERER.

WITH AMERICAN TROOPS OUTSIDE BUNA, Nov. 20 [Delayed].—Two American supply ships burned to the water's edge on Nov. 16, after an attack by 23 Jap planes at dusk.

Pvt. Phil Rosenberg [top] and Lieut. Leonard Milcarek.

Two United States generals peeled off their clothes and dived off the flaming ships, to swim more than half a mile to shore. One was the commanding officer of the task force entrusted with the recapture of Buna. The other was a brigadier general. Neither was injured, altho there were a number of casualties.

Nine Japanese bombers and 14 Zero fighter planes passed over this outpost, a few miles from Buna, at 6:30 p. m., and in a few minutes attacked the vessels, which were former Sydney fishing boats. Loaded with fuel and ammunition, they broke into flames almost at once under a barrage of incendiary shells from the Japanese planes.

Fights on His Back.

One general, ignoring the suggestions of his subordinates that he take cover in his cabin, called for a rifle and lay on his back firing at the Japs as they strafed the boats. Not a man abandoned ship until they were ordered to do so.

The general jumped over the side, leaving room in a single dinghy for those who could not swim. He hung on to the boat for a time, then let go and struck out for the shore.

On the way in the general asked an Australian captain if he needed help. The captain had been wounded in the leg, but made shore.

The attack lasted 15 minutes. The ships burned all night, rocked frequently by explosions.

Tanks Contact Japs.

Lieut. Robert Winkler of 2515 Terrace avenue, Milwaukee, Wis., fired at the attackers with a Garand rifle Later he jumped out of a dinghy and rescued a soldier calling for help.

Lieut. Leonard Milcarek of Chicago, Maj. Parker Habin of Charleston, Ill., and Lieut. A. F. Rogers of Milwaukee helped bandage the wounded by flashlight.

Others in the wound dressing squad were Sergeants Leonard Hart of Chicago and J. E. Quinn of Indianapolis; Pvt. Phil Rosenberg of Oak Park, Ill.

Capt. W. J. Schnedler, a chaplain from Huntington, Ind., who could not swim, stayed aboard and tossed out hatch covers, drums, and other objects that would float for men in the water to cling to.

How one of the generals who swam ashore from a blazing ship off Buna saved the life of his private secretary, Danny Herr, now a warrant officer, but formerly a reporter for the New York News, is told on page 8.

Two Wisconsin sergeants on shore distinguished themselves as heroes. They are Howard Weiss of Edgerton and John McGowan of Beloit. They launched boats from shore and went to the aid of survivors while the ships still were rocked by explosions.

LIVED IN OAK PARK.

Pvt. Phil Rosenberg, 26 years old, lived with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harold J. Rosenberg, at 425 South Maple avenue, Oak Park, before his enlistment. He is a graduate of Oak Park High school and worked at the Grusin Investment company, 105 West Madison street, his grandfather's firm, at the time he joined the army a year and a half ago. He has a brother, Mark, who is a high school student.

Lieut. Leonard Milcarek, who is 29 years old, lived with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Milcarek, 2430 North Lotus avenue. He is a graduate of Harrison High school and Loyola university medical college, and studied and taught surgery at the Chicago Postgraduate Medical school before joining the army medical corps June 25, 1941. He was stationed at Savanna, Ill., before his transfer overseas March 1. He has four married sisters.

REPORT WEYGAND HELD BY NAZIS AS GIRAUD HOSTAGE

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—Gen. Maxime Weygand, allied generalissimo before the fall of France, has been arrested as a hostage to replace Gen. Henri Giraud in Koenigstein fortress at the direction of Joachim von Ribbentrop, German foreign minister, according to reliable information from Europe.

Giraud escaped from the Nazi prison last spring, then went to North Africa where he joined American troops at the head of a Fighting French column when Algeria was invaded.

Ribbentrop, according to these advices, informed Marshal Henri Petain, French chief of state, that Giraud's departure meant he had broken a promise to Germany. Consequently, Germany would take Weygand into custody.

Weygand was arrested the night of Nov. 12.

BIZERTE - TUNIS BATTLE OPENS; CIRCLE ENEMY

Allies Smash Axis Dugouts.

TUNISIA WAR MAPS.

On page 5 is a new map of Tunisia showing the country's natural resources and topographical features. There is also a map showing the war developments in and around Tunisia.

LONDON, Nov. 22 [Sunday]—(AP).—A French assault on German dugouts in the hastily erected Nazi defense arc around Tunis and Bizerte, with the result still undetermined, and the capture by allied advance units of an important crossroads in the Tunis area were reported early today from North Africa, where powerful allied forces are moving rapidly to smash the beleaguered axis Tunisian troops.

Reports from allied headquarters indicated that the fighting is hourly growing in intensity, with the Germans and Italians bracing themselves for the imminent fight against the main body of British, American, and French troops.

A steady stream of men and materiel was moving eastward against the Germans and Italians, cut off from al lretreat except by sea or air.

Drive for Knockout Blow.

The allied main forces were progressing methodically for the kill, despite intense air attacks and violent air battles.

The German defense arc around Bizerte, with its three main airfields, and Tunis, with its important military airdrome, was believed to run somewhere east of Tabarka, on the north coast, to Hammamet, southeast of Tunis. At the nearest points the allied advance forces have been reported within 30 miles of both Bizerte and Tunis.

It was reported that the Germans have patrols constantly on the watch behind their contracting lines, apparently on guard against a French uprising in that sector.

Pro-allied French forces were said to be in control of Gabes, on the eastern Tunis coast, thus effectively blocking any connection between the Tunisian axis armies and Marshal Erwin Rommel's harried soldiers in Libya.

Nazis Lose 11 Tanks.

In a clash to the north, it was reported officially that the Germans lost 11 of 30 attacking tanks in a battle with the British, indicating the allies now are capable of dealing with the Nazi armored columns.

American and British planes were harassing German positions altho bad weather restricted air activity except at Algiers where the Nazi air force staged a night raid.

An official spokesman described Nazi losses in the raid as "considerable" from anti-aircraft batteries on ships in the harbor, from night fighters sent up to intercept them, and from ground defenses. During the first week of operations, an official spokesman said allied navy anti-aircraft batteries had shot down 23 axis planes, probably destroyed 10 more, and damaged an additional 18 craft.

Cut Off Escape.

That the Nazis' hope of establishing a rear door of retreat for Marshal Rommel in Libya already had gone glimmering was seen in a broadcast by the Berlin radio quoted allied sources in Spanish Morocco, that allied columns of Lieut. Gen. K. A. N. Anderson's British 1st army reached

U. S. NAVY QUICK TO LEARN, SAYS COL. M'CORMICK

Success in Night Battle with Japs Cited.

The American navy has learned, and learned fast, from the Japanese in the war in the Pacific, Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, said in a radio address last night.

After citing the lessons learned at Pearl Harbor and in the Philippines, Col. McCormick pointed to the surprise night naval attack in which the Americans lost three cruisers and the Australians one.

"That lesson was learned instantly," he said, "and a few nights ago American cruisers and battleships made a night attack, sinking many Japanese ships and preventing reënforcements from landing on Guadalcanal.

"The enterprise and courage with which our navy has recovered from its surprises and turned defeat into victory has not been excelled in military history."

The address was broadcast by W-G-N, W59C, and the Mutual Broadcasting system.

TEXT OF ADDRESS

The text of Col. McCormick's address follows:

"Of all peoples, in all times, the Romans were the most warlike. It was their boast that they were not afraid to learn, even from the enemy. Let me repeat, the Romans were not afraid to learn, even from the enemy.

It is a boast that not many people have been able to make. Military castes have been traditionally arrogant and many defeats have paid for this pride of opinion.

"But such a boast may be made by our navy and for our navy. World-wide opinion has looked upon Americans as the most original of peoples and the Japanese as the most imitative. However, in naval warfare the reverse has been true.

Considered Fleet Safe.

"Before Pearl Harbor our navy high command thought so little of air attack that it considered the fleet safe in Pearl Harbor behind a submarine net and no preparation was made to guard against torpedo planes and dive bombers.

"But following that terrible lesson and, equally the terrible lesson in the Philippines, where our airplanes were caught on the ground, and of the Java sea, where the American fleet was sunk under the command of a Dutch admiral—the navy learned and learned fast.

"As early as last Feb. 20 a naval attack was developed against Rabaul, and when this attack was detected and the carrier Lexington was assaulted by Japanese bombers the name of O'Hare became immortal when he shot down five of them.

Destroy Jap Squadrons.

"On March 10 American bombers and torpedo planes flew across the Bismarck range in New Guinea and destroyed two Japanese squadrons without the loss of a plane.

"In the Coral sea, made famous by Stanley Johnston, from May 4 to 8, planes from the carrier Lexington and another carrier sank two Japanese carriers and damaged one and sank a number of other ships, with the loss of the Lexington.

"Then came Midway, on June 3 and 4, in which both land and carrier planes attacked the great Japanese fleet and sank four carriers and other ships, with the loss to us of the Yorktown, and perhaps the greatest loss of flyers that ever happened; men who flew to certain death in inferior equipment to win our victory.

"We have beaten the Japanese at the game they have taught us, so that when the landing was made on Guadalcanal Island there were no Japanese carriers to oppose us.

"Then the Japanese pulled another rabbit out of the hat and by a surprise attack at night sank one Australian and three American cruisers without loss to themselves.

"Now, night attack is a very rare thing in naval warfare. The only night battles that I recall were the British attack on the armada, the Spanish armada, in Calais Road—in 1588—and the night attack of Nelson at the Battle of the Nile and that brings up an interesting comparison.

"Nelson attacked on both sides of the French fleet. His principal subordinate, named Saumarez—it is a strange name for an English captain—criticized afterward the fact that Nelson had gone on both sides of the French fleet, allowing the French to use both sides of their batteries.

Sides with Saumarez.

"When we attacked the Japanese recently you will recall that our admiral steered between two of the Japanese lines of battle so as to use all his guns. He seems to have sided with Saumarez and against the great Nelson.

"The Japanese lesson of night attack was instantly learned and a few nights ago American cruisers and battleships made a night attack, sinking many Japanese ships and preventing reënforcements from landing on Guadalcanal.

"The story tells us that our naval force was lurking to the south, beyond the range of Japanese reconnaissance planes. Now, either our reconnaissance, which reported the Japanese advance, came from Guadalcanal, or it came from a carrier, or from one of our extraordinary naval reconnaissance planes of extreme range of the type that caught the Bismarck and delivered her to the British navy.

Win Big Night Victory.

"Our victory in the night attack was great and drove back the entire Japanese squadron.

"A day or two later, as we learned today, the victory was made more complete, apparently by American aircraft carriers, because Adm. Halsey, the commander of the carriers, was promoted to the full rank of admiral Friday.

"We must all have noticed how much surprise there has been in this war. Beginning with the attack on Poland practically every success has been by surprise, but surprise is not unusual in war, even in walking war, such as we used to have.

Cites Other Surprises.

"Grant and Sherman were surprised by Beauregard at Shiloh, Hooker was surprised by Lee at Chancellorsville, Lee was surprised by Grant at Petersburg and Five Forks when troops could not move any faster than men could walk on foot. We in the last war surprised the Germans both at Soissons and at St. Mihiel by walking up our troops in the night time at three and a half miles an hour.

"In this war, with planes coming at 300 miles an hour and with ships converging at 50 miles an hour, surprise is extremely difficult to prevent. Methods will be devised to avoid surprise, but they have not been devised yet.

"Now, one more thing. Another Japanese specialty, landing boats, fast armored craft with which troops can be rushed ashore, have been taken up by our navy and used successfully at Guadalcanal. The enterprise and courage with which our navy has recovered from its surprise and turned defeat into victory has never been excelled in military history."

PRESENT 'MLLE. MODISTE'

Victor Herbert's operetta, "Mlle. Modiste," a favorite for its catchy tunes, constituted the musical part of the program. The stars were Marion Claire, Mario Berini, tenor, and John MacDonald, bass. Dramatic rôles were taken by Patricia Dunlap, Bret Morrison, and Leo Curley. The musical backdrop was provided by the W-G-N orchestra and chorus conducted by Henry Weber.

Lieut. H. L. Walter showing Miss Melverna Melville pictures he took at Guadalcanal Island.

Lieut. Howard L. Walter, 23 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Walter, 2918 North Kenneth avenue, after seven weeks on Guadalcanal Island where, as a marine flyer, he was credited with shooting down three and a half Jap planes, has a grudge against Japs, he reported in Chicago last night.

It isn't simply because their bombers forced him and his companions to live in foxholes. It isn't because that 1,000 pound bomb hit their tent and destroyed all their clothes and other belongings, either.

It's because Lieut. Walter, who said he hadn't laundered his clothes in three weeks, had just washed three complete sets that day. He had all three hanging on a line in the tent when the bomb struck while Lieut. Walter and his mates were trying to sleep in a nearby foxhole. After the bombing, all that was left was a crater, the edge of which was just 10 feet from the foxhole. Clothes had vanished with the tent. Clean clothes.

Lieut. Walter, a Northwestern university law graduate who enlisted in the navy air force in February, 1941, and later transferred to the marines, labels that bombing as probably his closest brush with death. He modestly describes his flying exploits as pilot of a Grumman Wildcat based at Henderson field on Guadalcanal, as "the same thing the other boys are doing every day."

"Giving your own blood is the final test of devotion, and the state and federal employés in Chicago have earned the undying gratitude of the American Red Cross and of the men now serving in foreign fields," said Joseph H. King, vice chairman of the Chicago chapter of the American Red Cross, yesterday in accepting an ambulance for Red Cross service.

The ambulance was given by workers in the division of placement and employment compensation and the United States Employment service. "Not all of us can be in the armed service, or in the WAACs or the WAVES," said King, "but we can all have our part. These people have given their time, their money, and their blood. It will not be forgotten."

Blood donations were paid for at the rate of $5 each pint. The money was given to purchase the ambulance which has been in service for two weeks. Speakers at the ceremonies in the Merchandise Mart included: Samuel C. Bernstein, commissioner of placement and unemployment compensation; Chester W. Helper, director of the employment service in Illinois, and Jerome H. Dray, president of local No. 121, SCMWA.

Panama Canal Defenses in 'Excellent Shape': Brett

PANAMA CITY, Panama, Nov. 21 (AP).—Defense facilities guarding the Panama canal are in "excellent shape," Lieut. Gen. George H. Brett, chief of the Caribbean defense command, declared today in his first public statement since his return from visiting all bases under his command. Brett said the submarine menace and combating it continue to be his paramount interests, and he remarked on the coöperation between the various branches of service in fighting submarines.

BONFIRES WARM 250 AT OPENING OF ALASKA ROAD

KLUANE LAKE, Y. T., Nov. 21. [Canadian Press].—In the glow of huge bonfires built to keep them warm, 250 persons gathered near here in the Yukon wilderness, watched the ceremonial cutting of a red, white, and blue ribbon yesterday.

This marked the official opening of the Alcan international highway to Alaska, pushed thru Canada's northwest wilderness by United States army engineers and civilian contractors. The highway was driven from Dawson Creek, B. C., 1,681 miles to Fairbanks in 7 months and 17 days.

Canada's pensions minister, Ivan MacKenzie, and Acting Gov. E. L. Bartlett of Alaska joined in slicing the ribbon.

One half of the scissors—used in the ceremony—will be sent to Prime Minister MacKenzie King for the Canadian archives and the other half to President Roosevelt.

Scores of speeches were made, but the hit of the ceremony was the address by Col. John W. Wheeler of Crown Point, Ind., officer in charge of the highway. It was a model of brevity: "The gang who built the Alcan highway, thanks a million."

Blast Out Last Rail Tunnel in Short Cut Into Alaska

Seattle, Wash., Nov. 21 (AP).—The final tunnel in the Portage Junction cut-off of the Alaska railroad was cut thru Thursday, the army engineers' office here was informed today. The report said the cut-off, put thru in record time, will save shipping time and costs to the interior of Alaska.

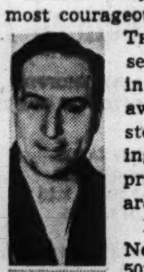
TRIBUNE'S HERO AWARD IS WON BY TWO IN OCTOBER

Policeman Seized Kadens; Fireman Saved Three.

Because they performed two of the most courageous acts in the 22 years THE TRIBUNE has presented a total of $27,000 in police and bravery awards, two heroes instead of one are receiving $100 Tribune hero prizes for October. They are:



A. A. Cafferata [top] and R. A. Nelson.

Patrolman Richard A. Nelson, 35 years old, 5011½ Maypole avenue, who deliberately grappled with and captured a crazed and cornered gunman rather than endanger others by gunfire; and Fireman Andrew A. Cafferata, 44, 1828 Estes avenue, who fought his way thru a flaming apartment to rescue three children.

Nelson and Cafferata are the 274th and 275th men to win the awards since THE TRIBUNE started them in 1920. Approximately 80 per cent of the winners faced gunfire of desperate outlaws and most of the others were firemen who braved flames and crashing buildings to carry trapped victims to safety.

Captures Crazed Outlaw.

Patrolman Nelson, of the Fillmore station, won his award by single handedly capturing Irwin Kadens, whose sensational, crazed career as outlaw and rapist made him the nation's "Public Enemy No. 1."

Nelson and two fellow patrolmen, Harold Metzger and John M. Doherty, answered a robbery call from the Family Loan company, 4806 Madison street, Oct. 19, and found the bandit and his victims still inside, with the front door locked.

While Metzger and Doherty searched for a rear exit, Nelson saw seven persons approach the front door in single file inside the office. The first unlocked the door and Nelson bounded inside, revolver in hand. He recognized Kadens as second in the line, but knew that if he fired some one in addition to Kadens probably would be hit. Without hesitation he seized Kadens' right wrist, and as Kadens reached for a gun in his belt and struck the bandit twice on the head with his revolver. The desperado fell and Nelson leaped on top of him. Kadens later was found criminally insane.

Honored Twice Before.

Nelson has received two earlier creditable mentions for capturing dangerous criminals. On Aug. 19, 1940, he outfought Dell Miller, ex-convict, James Eyre, and their woman companion, Grace Fox, in a gun battle that left a scar on Nelson's right hand. He has been a Chicago policeman for nine and a half years and is married and the father of a daughter, 4.

Fireman Cafferata, with Hook and Ladder company No. 3, 158 West Erie street, won his award at a fire in a third floor apartment at 218-22 West Chicago avenue on the night of Oct. 24. After finding the fire in a bedroom of the apartment and closing a door to block it off, he crawled and groped his way thru blinding smoke to find three children unconscious in other rooms of the apartment. He dragged them to a front window, kicked out the glass, signaled for a ladder, and passed the children out to safety

The children, sons and daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Fiest, were Frances, 5, and Harold and Howard Jr., 4 year old twins. Their parents were at work and their grandmother, who had been staying with them, had gone to a nearby store a short time before the fire.

Cafferata lay down, groggy, after his exploit, but said recently: "I wasn't much sick. I didn't miss any work." On Nov. 1, however, he suffered a broken ankle fighting another blaze.

Cafferata, a 210 pound husky, is married and the father of two daughters, 8 and 12. He has been a fireman seven years and won attention at an earlier fire when he rescued an elderly couple.

[TRIBUNE Photo.]

Frank H. D. Woodhall of the merchant marine in the United States Marines hospital. He served with a convoy out of which one-fourth of ships were sunk.

CONVOYS 'TAKING HELL OF BEATING'; NAVY IS BLAMED

A dramatic story of how enemy submarines stalked a convoy in mid-Atlantic for four days and nights and torpedoed one out of every four Liberty cargo ships in a small convoy was told last night by a veteran Chicago merchant seaman who was chief steward aboard one of the vessels which reached an English port safely in the last 60 days.

The steward, gray haired, 47 year old Frank H. D. Woodhall, 5477 Dorchester avenue, father of nine children and a sailor on the lakes and salt water since he was 15, was shipped back home with a bad heart and a broken right ankle, the latter suffered when he slipped on the deck of his ship after it had reached port.

Suffers Heart Strain.

From his bed in the United States Marine hospital in Chicago, Woodhall, breathing with difficulty because of a heart weakened by harrowing experiences, indignantly asserted that some of the lost ships might have completed the voyage if the convoy had had adequate protection thruout the trip across the sea.

Woodhall said other members of the crew aboard his ship sighted submarines before the first attack in which the first ship was sunk. A few hours before, in a heavy fog, two of the ships in the convoy collided and went to the bottom.

"One of the subs came to the surface for a moment off our starboard bow," Woodhall said.

"The next night the subs started picking away at the ships on 'Coffin corner' [the last of the line of vessels on the starboard or right side of the convoy].

"All we could see were the torpedo flashes and the distress flares that were sent up after a ship had been hit. All we could do was keep on our life jackets as well as our shirts and hope for the best.

"During the day we were told that the destroyers were out hunting subs and I guess they nailed a couple. That same night the subs got several more ships."

The convoy took its worst licking the next night, Woodhall said. At that time, he added, there happened to be fewer vessels escorting the convoy. "We felt a terrific explosion during the evening and supposed that we'd been hit, too," said Woodhall.

Woodhall said the captain of his ship became panicky and gave orders to his crew to turn out of the convoy and take another course to England. The captain told the crew he would "outrun" the submarines.

Compel Captain to Return.

"His first and second officers, and the crew, too, told him he was crazy and forced him to return to the convoy. I heard in England that another ship that left the convoy was one of those that was lost," Woodhall said.

The next day the escort was strengthened and the remainder of the voyage was made without further losses, Woodhall related.

"Frank Knox should start telling the people the truth about the protection given to the convoys," Woodhall declared. "The merchant seamen are taking one hell of a whipping in this war."

Two bandits took $480 and wounded Claude Dodd, 46 years old, 6150 Winthrop avenue, a clerk, in four liquor store holdups last night.

About 6:30 p. m., at 6470 North avenue, the pair threatened Joseph Gianatasio with guns and took $80 from the till. Gianatasio fired six shots at their dark sedan as they fled. A few moments later one bandit entered the liquor store at 5265 North avenue, the other apparently remaining at the wheel. Dodd dived for the counter as the bandit announced a holdup, and the outlaw fired one shot and fled. Dodd, slightly wounded in a hand and leg, was taken to St. Anne's hospital.

The bandits next appeared at 5612 Division street, where they took $300 from the till and locked the owner, Morris Seeder, in the ice box, from which he was able to release himself in a few minutes. The fourth robbery attributed to the pair was at 5743 North avenue, where they held up the owner, James Gagliardo, 6024 Bloomingdale avenue, and took $100.

One bandit was described as about 36 years old, 5 feet 7 inches tall, and weighing about 150 pounds. The other was reported to be about 23 and the same size. Both held handkerchiefs over their faces during the robberies and were reported to be carrying automatics.

U-BOAT ACTIVITY SLACKENS, SAYS AFRICA SEA CHIEF

RAF, British Navy Gave Subs a 'Good Knock.'

ALLIED FORCE HEADQUARTERS, North Africa, Nov. 21 (AP).—During the last 48 hours there has been a "definite slackening of axis U-boat activity in the western Mediterranean, Adm. Andrew Brown Cunningham, commander of the naval forces in the North African operations, declared today.

He said that the royal navy and the RAF had given the German and Italian submarines a "good knock."

In his first press conference since becoming naval commander of the allied North African operations, the British admiral said he thought there had been about 50 U-boats operating in the Mediterranean and in the Atlantic just off Gibraltar.

Losses Below Expectations.

Discussing the complete operation, he said that "in the approaching stage, the losses of merchant and navy ships were considerably below what I expected and I don't think the losses of ships were out of proportion to the results obtained."

The admiral said he regarded the estimate of two million tons of merchant shipping to be saved if and when the Mediterranean route was reopened as "conservative." If North Africa is cleared of axis troops, the Mediterranean sea will be opened to fast convoys which could get by the Sardinia-Sicily bottleneck, but some ships will have to continue around the Cape of Good Hope, he said.

Doubts French Will Aid.

Royal navy ships coöperating with troops entering Tunisia are being harassed by the luftwaffe, but damages have been minor, Cunningham declared.

The admiral expressed doubt that the French fleet at Toulon would ever join the allies.

The commander of allied naval forces praised the Solomon Islands victory by the United States fleet as "a very fine show" and said that as a result of the American navy's efforts in the Pacific against the Japanese and the obtaining of North African bases, "the allied naval situation is getting better every day, particularly in the Atlantic."

REDS TO STARTLE WORLD BY WAR IN WINTER: DAVIES

Russia's counterattack and initiative in battle this winter again will surprise the world, Joseph E. Davies, ambassador to that country from 1936 to 1938, said last night. Davies and his wife, heiress to breakfast food millions, were aboard the Sante Fe Super Chief en route to the west coast.

"Yes, sir," said Davies, "it was in Chicago a year and a half ago that I said: 'The world will be surprised at Russia's resistance.' Now I say it again, and make it more emphatic. The world will be amazed."

Davies asserted that Germany's "back is broken" already, but that she will continue to be capable of giving bitter battle while trying a "peace offensive."

ALLIED ARMIES OPEN FIGHT FOR BIZERTE, TUNIS

French Attack Dugouts; Test Axis Power.

Occupation of Hammamet by the investing forces would complete the encirclement of the Nazis on the landward side of the tip of Tunisia and leave them no alternative but to fight it out in the fast-contracting arc they had chosen to defend. The German radio also reported that a fighting French-American column was moving up from the south of Tunisia, aiming to strike the coast at Sousse, below Hammamet.

Squeeze Rommel's Army.

Striking swiftly beyond newly captured Bengazi, in Libya, the British 8th army squeezed Marshal Rommel's chastized Africa corps into the approaches of the El Agheila defile in a race to deliver a knockout to the hapless axis survivors before they could burrow into the natural defenses of that 30 mile wide coastal strip. It was the third time the British entered Bengazi in this war and the fifth time it had changed hands. The port was still blazing from allied air blows and Rommel's application of the torch.

British forward elements, now more than half way to Tunisia from their starting point at El Alamein in Egypt, caught up with the axis rearguard at Agedabia, some 70 miles from El Agheila yesterday. With the 8th army maintaining its average advance of 30 miles a day, it appeared that the showdown clash on the heretofore unbreached El Agheila line was only a matter of hours awy.

Rommel Position Perilous.

Rommel was believed already to have gotten the main body of his broken army into the El Agheila area.

With most of his tanks gone and with another opposing army behind him in Tunisia, his position was a perilous one despite El Agheila's strong points.

The Berlin radio told a far different version of the first Tunisian clashes from the one disclosed by the allies Friday, claiming that 12 allied tanks and 18 armored cars had been destroyed and a railroad seized near the Algerian border.

Unconfirmed enemy reports also described effective aerial blows. The German radio said axis planes bombed two big merchantmen off the Algerian coast and destroyed planes and hangars on allied airfields near Algiers and Bone. Three merchantmen were declared sunk in a U-boat attack west of Gibraltar. The German-controled Paris radio said that the axis aerial shuttle route between Sicily and Tunisia still was open and operating. The Berlin radio said the Axis forces "now possess considerable fighting strength," and claimed advances west and southwest of Tunis and Bizerte.

Claim Rommel Escapes Trap.

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—The German radio said today that Marshal Erwin Rommel's Africa corps had escaped entrapment by the British 8th army and that after receiving reenforcements of guns and tanks is "deployed in full fighting strength on thoroly prepared and strongly fortified positions of considerable depth."

This broadcast did not specify where Rommel had established his positions, but the reference to fortifications in depth might have indicated the El Agheila area.

"Detaching the axis forces from allied troops unnoticed by the enemy may now be considered successfully concluded," the radio said, adding that "all efforts made by the British 8th army to force the German and Italian panzer army to fight under conditions favorable to the enemy were frustrated."

U-BOAT STALKS SHIP 4 HOURS; THEN SINKS IT

An East Coast Port, Nov. 21.—A submarine crippled an American freighter with one torpedo last month off the northern coast of South America, stalked it four hours, and then sank it with two more torpedoes, survivors said today.

Three crew members were killed and the 51 others were rescued. Two of the survivors drifted on a raft for three days before a navy plane spotted them and took them to a Caribbean island.

The attack brought to 532 the number of vessels sunk in the western Atlantic area since Pearl Harbor, according to an unofficial tabulation by the Associated Press. The sinkings have cost the lives of 3,563 persons.

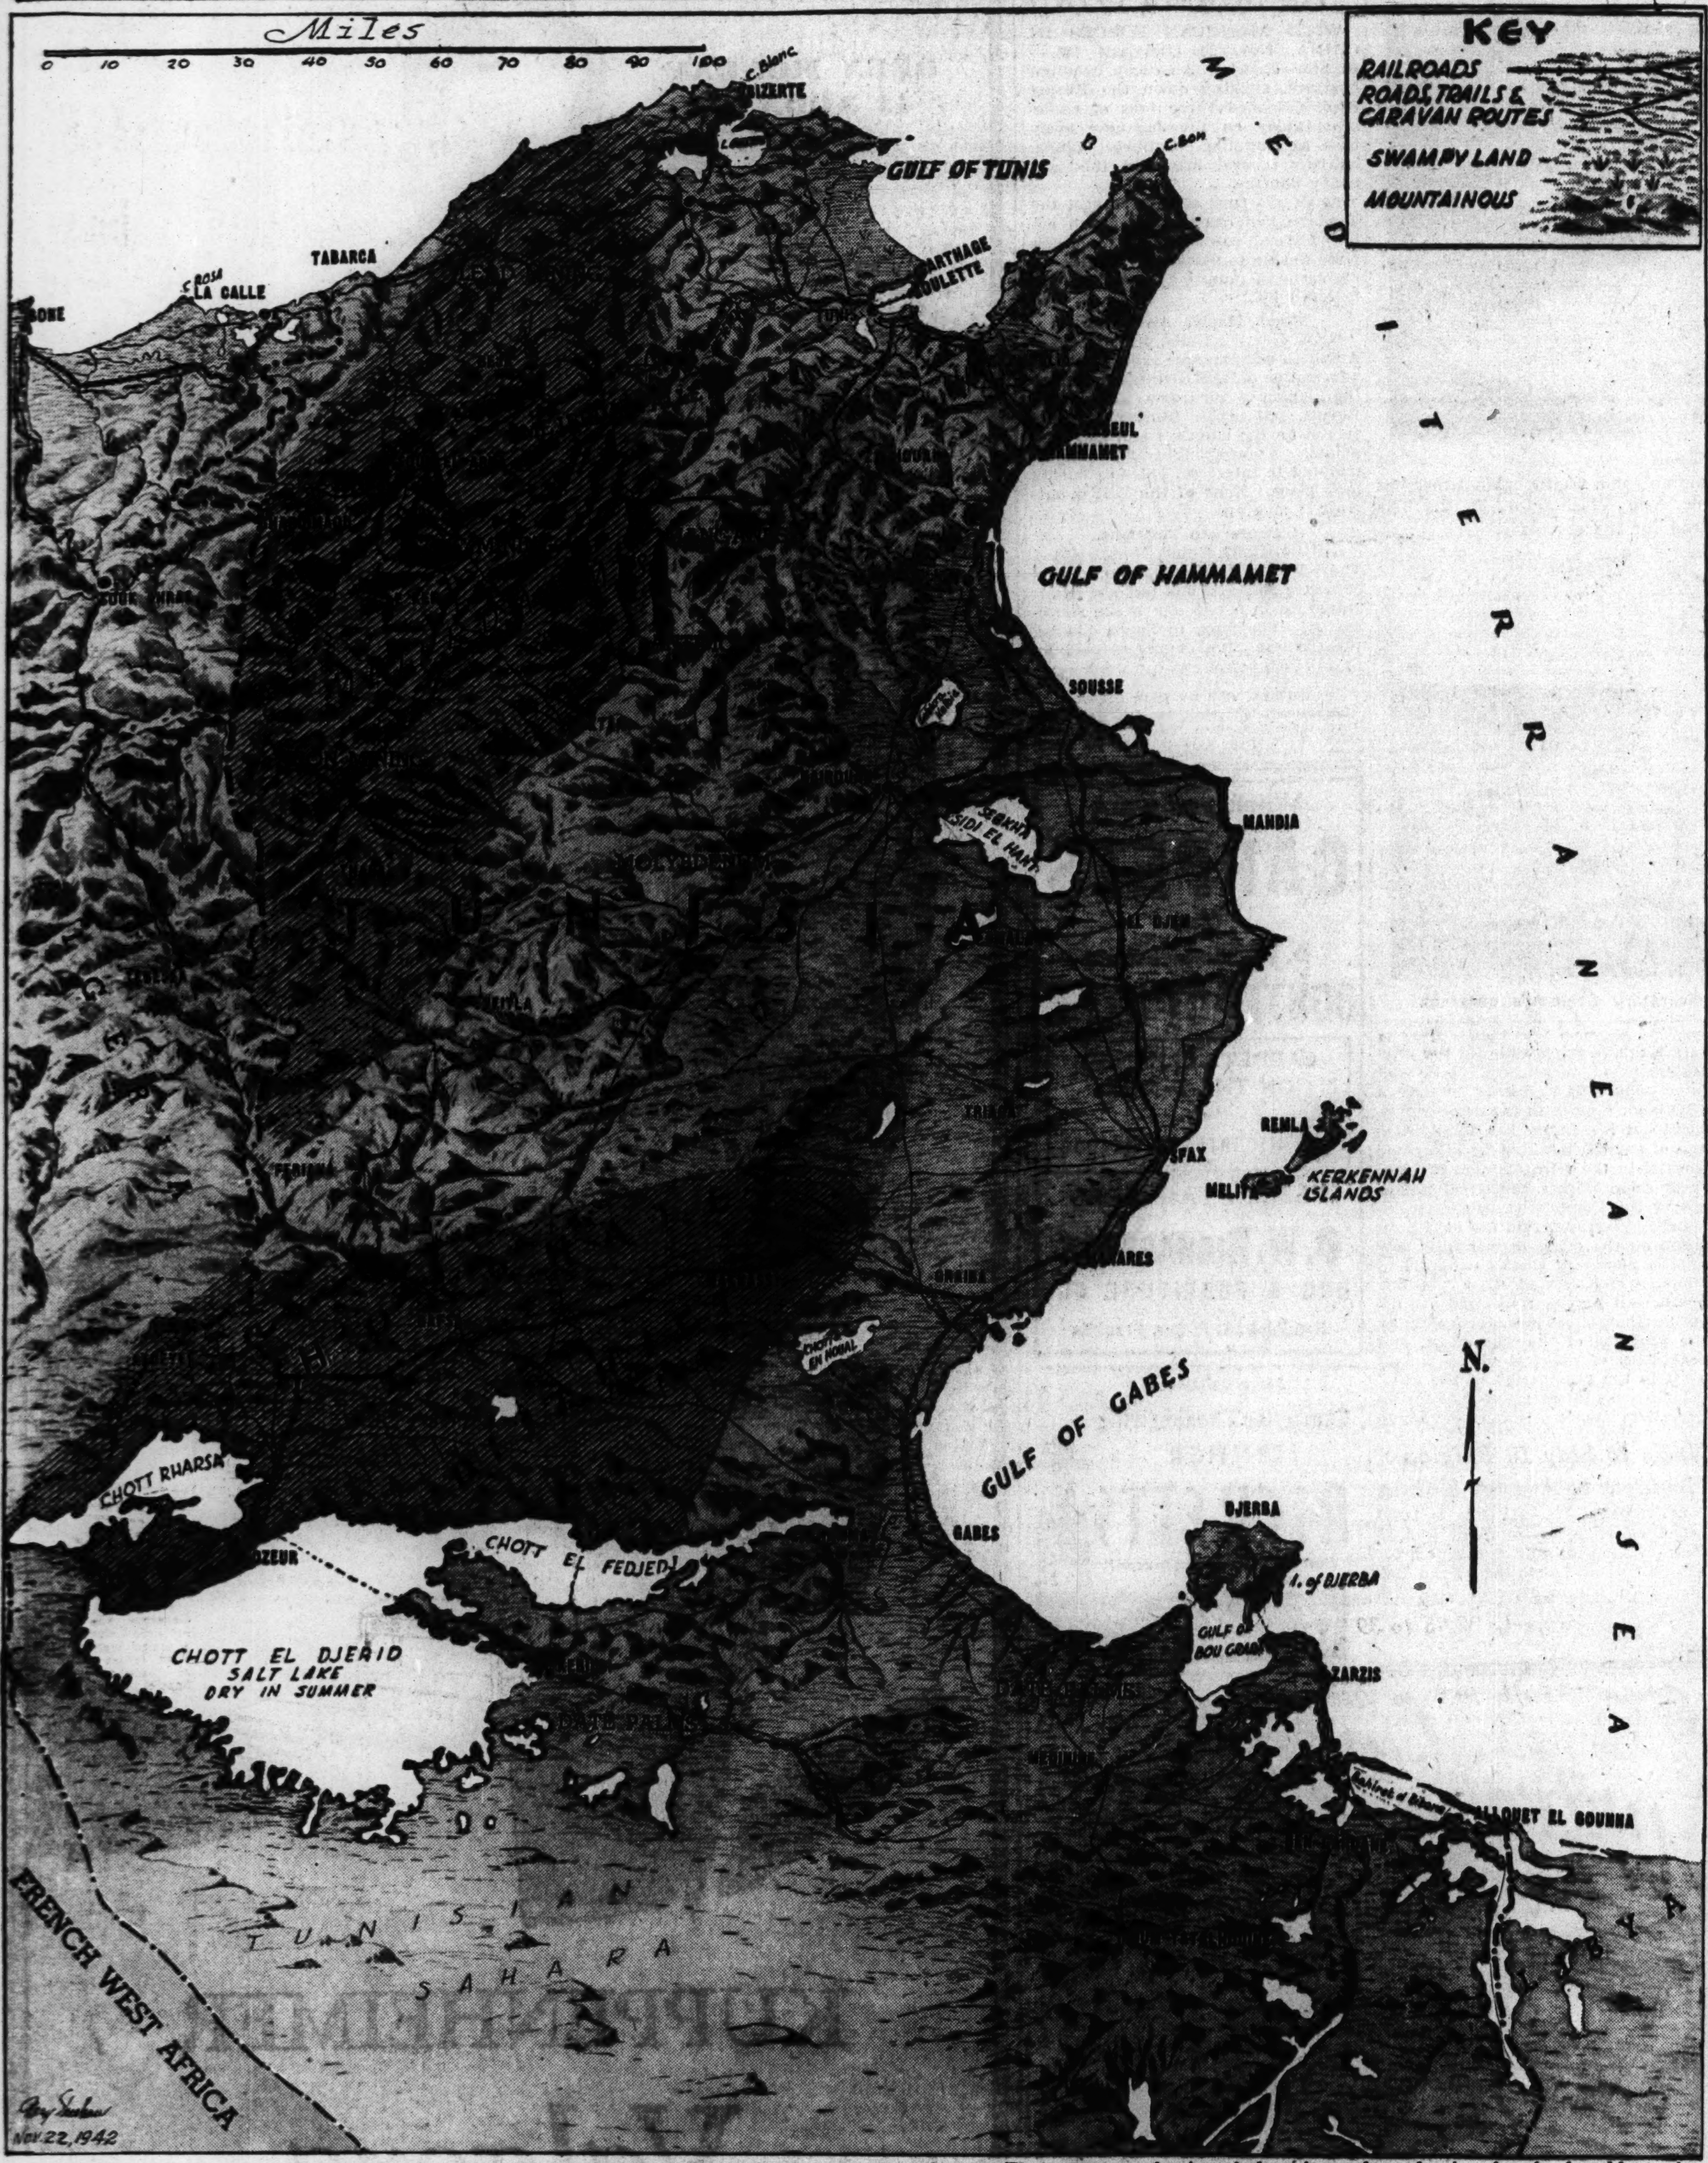
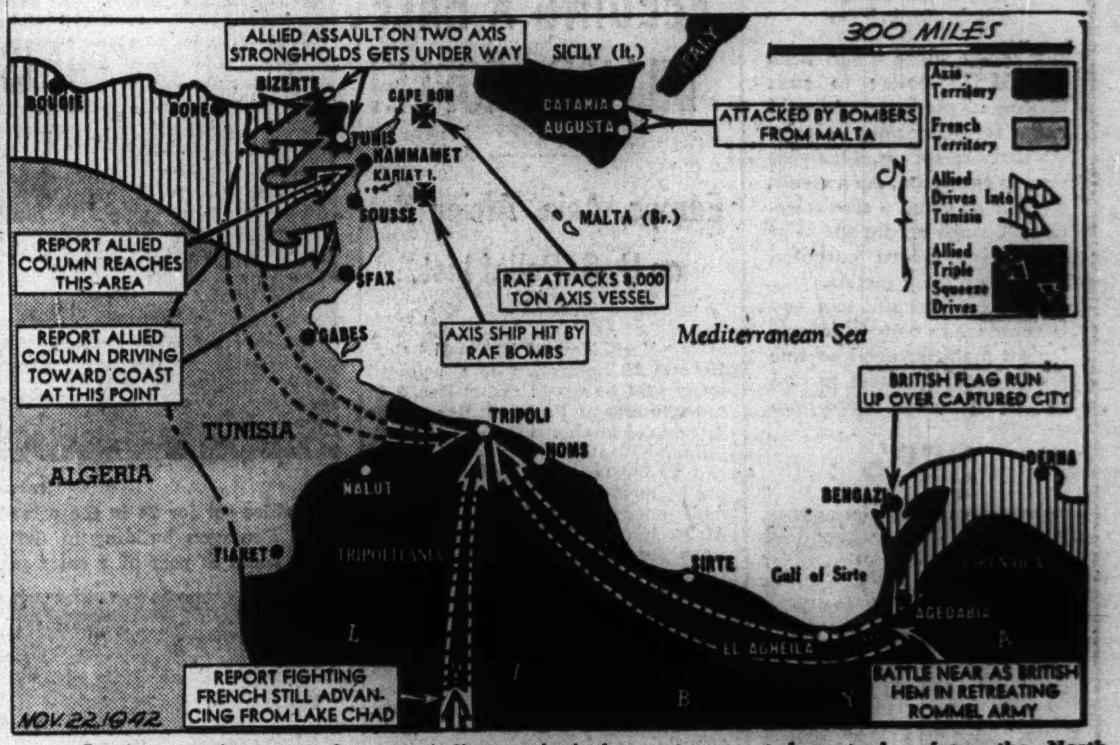
THE STRUGGLE IN NORTH AFRICA: AN ECONOMIC AND TOPOGRAPHICAL MAP OF TUNISIA; ACTIONS IN THE VARIOUS FIGHTING ZONES



The terrain of the embattled North African territory ranges from mountains to swamps to desert. The presence of mineral deposits and productive farmlands adds to its importance as a factor in the war. Strategically Tunisia is valuable because of its proximity to the Italian mainland.



Captions on the map and arrows indicate principal events reported yesterday from the North African fighting zones.

TUNISIA—RICH LAND OF FOOD AND MINERALS

No Barren Wasteland Is This Battleground.

No flat, barren wasteland is Tunisia, battleground of the Yanks and British for control of all north Africa. It has strategic value, being less than 90 miles across the Mediterranean sea from Italian Sicily. It is also an area of fertile agricultural lands, minèral resources and varied topography.

Tunisia, 300 miles long and 150 miles wide, contains 48,300 square miles. Of its two million civilian population, 108,000 are French and 94,000 Italian.

In northern Tunisia, the Majerda mountains extend from Algeria between the Majerda river and the sea almost to Tunis, with a high point of 4,125 feet near Ain Draham. Territory near Bizerte is mountainous to a height of 3,000 feet. From Bizerte to the Gulf of Tunis the terrain is hilly, fertile and attractive.

Tribesmen Inhabit Mountains.

The Kroumirs tribesmen, whose cattle raids across the Algerian frontier gave France an excuse to invade Tunisia in 1881 and establish a protectorate, live in the Majerda mountains.

A central plateau region extends from the Majerda valley south to Gafsa with an average elevation of about 2,000 feet. Cold and bleak in winter, and burned by the torrid "sirocco" winds from inland Africa in summer, this area includes much of Tunisia's mineral wealth.

An eastern coastal belt reaches from the Gulf of Hammamet south to Sfax and beyond, altho it narrows down. This region, called the sahel by Arabs, is 30 to 60 miles wide, flat, well watered, fertile and marshy in places with brackish water oozing from the ground.

Southern Tunisia, known as the Tunisian Sahara, is by no means entirely waste land, altho desert predominates. Vegetation and low junipers grow in mountainous country in the extreme southeast, called the Matmatas table land, backbone of Tunisia's "little Maginot line" of forts guarding the Libyan frontier.

Salt Lakes Cross Country.

The salt lakes of Djerid stretch across the country with only two short breaks.

Virtually inexhaustible deposits of phosphates and high grade iron ore have made Tunisia an important mineral center. The phosphates, used in fertilizer, are in the Gafsa and salt lake regions of the south. Production figures vary, but before the war Tunisia was credited with 2½ millions of the 8 million ton world production. Rail lines to Sfax and Susa and a modern highway built by the French in 1938-'39 facilitate exploitation.

Iron Southwest of Tunisia.

Iron ore is found in the mountainous Kef district, some 75 miles southwest of Tunis and farther west near Algeria. Pre-war production reached 500,000 tons and Germany is reported to have increased iron ore exports from Tunisia from 53,000 tons to 410,000 tons, 15 per cent of war needs, this year.

Zinc [12,000 tons yearly], lead [40,000 tons], manganese, cobalt, molybdenum, and antimony are available in central Tunisia in quantities to invite exploitation under war pressures.

Farming of the one and one-half million acres of arable land is not efficient, but Tunisia has been providing German controled Europe with 300,000 tons of grain, 19,000,000 sheep, and 400,000 tons of fresh vegetables annually. Barley, wheat, and corn grow in the central region while from the north and east coast lines come cork, oranges, lemons, wines, almonds, olives, and olive oil.

BELIEVE ALLIES WILL GET MUCH HELP FROM FRENCH IN ALGERIA

[By Wireless to the New York Times and The Chicago Tribune.]

ALGIERS, Algeria, Nov. 15 [Delayed].—Observers here believe the allies may receive important help from the French in the future. The French soldiers in Algeria are magnificent fighting material. The youth organizations also offer a wealth of future soldiers. Some youth groups have been Fascist inclined, but it is believed many of them soon will switch to the allied side, which offers them their best chance for advancement.

The French people here appear happiest about Washington's lend-lease promises. For two years they have been living poorly and the United States' offer of help sounds like a message from heaven to them.

ARABS REJOICE AT U. S. ATTACK: PREMIER OF IRAQ

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21 (AP).—The prime minister of Iraq, Nuri es Sadi, has written President Roosevelt congratulating him on the Anglo-American landings in North Africa and asserting this "lightning blow to axis pretenses in the Mediterranean now constitutes a threat to the weakest link in the axis chain."

"The whole Mediterranean scene," the prime minister said in a letter dated Nov. 18 and made public today by the White House, "has been changed in a few days and all the friends of the united nations and particularly the Arab races of North Africa and the near east are full of rejoicing and grateful to you as the originator of this great action."

The White House described the prime minister as a devout Moslem and a distinguished Arab soldier-statesman, as well as an outstanding personage in the Islamic world. He has been prime minister of Iraq six times and was associated with Feisal, the late king of Iraq, as well as with "Lawrence of Arabia," in the battles for Iraq freedom in the last World war.

REPORT GUDERIAN IN AFRICA.

LONDON, Nov. 21 [AP].—A Reuters [British] dispatch from Istanbul, Turkey, today said AFI, independent French news agency, had reported to Turkey that Col. Gen. Heinz Guderian, the German tank expert, had gone to North Africa.

WINS VC FOR 30 HOUR FIGHT OUT OF EGYPT TRAP

LONDON, Nov. 21.—For outstanding gallantry in leading his battalion of a rifle brigade while it was cut off from other British forces for 30 hours in the recent battle of Egypt, during which the battalion wiped out 55 of 90 German tanks that attacked his position, Maj. Buller Turner of Thatcher, Berkshire, has received the Victoria cross.

Maj. Turner's brother, the late Lieut. Alexander Turner, won the Victoria cross—the highest award within the gift of Britain for action in battle—on the western front in 1915. The Turner family now is the only one in Britain that can boast of two VCs. This is the second time in history that the Victoria cross has been won by two brothers. The first occasion was when Gen. Sir Hugh Gough was so honored in 1858 and his brother, Maj. Charles Gough, was similarly distinguished in 1859, both during the Indian mutiny.

Maj. Turner suffered a severe head wound, but continued to lead his men without rest or having his wound attended until contact was reëstablished with the British forces.

British Torpedo Planes Hit 2 Axis Supply Ships

LONDON, Nov. 21 (AP).—British torpedo planes bucked a heavy German fighter plane guard and anti-aircraft barrage over the North sea yesterday to score torpedo hits on two supply ships and an escort vessel in an axis convoy off the Dutch coast, the air ministry said today. Three British planes did not return. Of two which did, one had a shell punctured fuselage and the other's wingtips had been sheared off by a shell.

LEHMAN'S TASK: FEEDING A HALF BILLION PEOPLE!

Europe, Asia, Africa Put on U. S. Relief List.

New York, Nov. 21 [Special].—Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, who announced today that he would resign Dec. 3 in order to become President Roosevelt's director of foreign relief and rehabilitation, indicated his new job would involve feeding, clothing, and supplying of medicine to an estimated 500 million persons in Europe, Asia, and Africa by the end of the war. His work, he explained, will extend beyond the duration.

One of his first tasks upon going to Washington, he said, will be the creation of an organization to carry out the program. He gave no information on the size of the staff he would require. For the present, at least, the relief program will be an entirely American enterprise, financed by lend-lease funds, but will work in close coöperation with allied governments.

America's Contribution.

Lehman's appointment was announced by the White House this morning. The appointment, a statement said, was "a step in the President's program of mobilizing the available resources of this country in food, clothing and medical supplies and other necessities so that it may make an immediate and effective contribution to joint efforts of the united nations in the field of relief and rehabilitation."

The work Lehman is to perform will be similar to that undertaken by Herbert Hoover as chairman of the American Relief commission in Belgium.

Europe First on List.

Lehman's immediate task will be to work out plans for getting food to the occupied countries of Europe which have been drained of wheat and meat for the axis soldiers and the people of the axis countries. After the program for combating starvation is ready, Lehman will have to deal with problems relating to the rehabilitation of agriculture in the farm countries and of industry in the factory regions.

Nations to Tell Needs.

The exile governments of Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia, Belgium, The Netherlands, Greece, and Norway are already at work on memoranda about their countries' rehabilitation needs to be submitted to Lehman. He is expected to coöperate with the agricultural department in surveying the prospects for developing food pools that can be shipped to Europe as soon as it is open once more to commerce from this part of the world.

Lieut. Gov. Charles Poletti will serve as governor of New York between the time Lehman leaves and the inauguration of Govevnor-elect Thomas E. Dewey on Jan. 1. Poletti was a candidate for reëlection as lieutenant governor this fall, but was defeated in the Republican landslide.

CHARGES AGAINST KNOX PUT BEFORE DIES COMMITTEE

Accusation of Aiding Reds in Open Again.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21.—Charges that Navy Secretary Frank Knox yielded to pressure from communistic groups and reinstated 10 ship radio operators previously ousted on naval trial board findings that they were subversive, have been laid before the Dies committee on un-American activities, it was disclosed yesterday.

Fred M. Howe.

The accusations were made by Fred M. Howe, general secretary-treasurer of the radio officers' union, affiliated with the AFL. He denounced Knox for "buckling down" to the "well known Reds" of the American Communications association of the CIO, a rival union.

In a reply to Howe, Secretary Knox said the radio men were reinstated on the recommendation of Wayne L. Morse, a member of the War Labor board.

Morse Defends Bridges.

Morse, well known in west coast labor circles, hit the pages of the CIO News, official weekly publication, with a denunciation last July of Attorney General Francis Biddle's ruling against Harry Bridges, foreign born California agitator.

So anxious was Secretary Knox to please the Communists, Howe asserted, that one Leon Roux, notorious left winger, was reinstated despite the fact that he is probably dead, his ship having been missing since Dec. 23, 1941.

In a letter to Martin Dies [D., Tex.], chairman of the committee, Howe recalled that he had testified as early as April, 1940, that approximately 150 Communists were employed as radio officers on vessels of the American merchant marine.

A year later, congress passed an act which gave the navy the right to remove any radio officer believed to be subversive. Some 100 radio officers were removed from their vessels under authority of that act, nearly one-half of them, 47, being officials and members of the CIO union.

Hits at Labor Adviser.

"The CIO union protested the removal of their members in typical communistic fashion," Howe wrote the Dies committee. "Telegrams, letters of protest and resolutions from all of the known Red unions and communistic front organizations flooded the navy.

"Secretary Knox apparently became frightened and his assistant secretary, Ralph A. Bard, took up the question of reinstating some of these men. Secretary Knox informs me that Wayne L. Morse, member of the War Labor board, was consulted in reference to these men and their reinstatement to their ships.

"Personally, I believe that Edwin Lahey, a CIO labor adviser to Secretary Knox, is responsible for the reinstatement of these men. I do not know why it is necessary to have a CIO labor adviser in the navy department but Mr. Lahey has admitted to one of our officials that he interested himself in the reinstatement of 10 of these radio officers, consistent followers of the Communist party line."

Lahey yesterday said the navy's position on the question was fully covered in Secretary Knox's telegram to Howe, which stated that "in our opinion all parties reinstated are devoting themselves wholeheartedly to the progress of the war effort, and regardless of political views are an asset in the prosecution of the war."

Nazis to Slay 10 Belgian Hostages to Avenge Killing

LONDON, Nov. 21 (AP).—A DNB broadcast from Berlin today said 10 Belgian hostages will be executed for the recent fatal shooting of the Belgian Nazi burgomaster of Charleroi unless those responsible for the attack are discovered by Wednesday midnight.

YANKS RAID JAP INVASION BASE ON BURMA ROAD

WITH AMERICAN FORCES IN CHINA, Nov. 20 [Delayed] (AP).—Fighter escorted American medium bombers, striking down the Burma road, unloaded three tons of explosives today on the Japanese army base at Lungling, southwest China, starting several fires and inflicting heavy damage.

After two runs over the target the bombers had caused fires which billowed smoke so dense that the crews were unable to assess full results. A big cache of munitions, however, was believed hit.

Bomb Magwe Airdrome.

NEW DELHI, India, Nov. 21 (AP).—A British communique said today that a formation of RAF Blenheims bombed the Japanese airdrome at Magwe, Burma, last night. Bursts were observed on the runways and dispersal points. Enemy night fighters attempted to intercept, but no combats took place. None of the British aircraft is missing.

Capture Jap Positions.

CHUNGKING, China, Nov. 21 (AP).—The Chinese attacked and captured Japanese positions and inflicted heavy casualties in a two day battle southeast of Tsincheng, in South Shansi, the Chinese high command said today. Much booty was captured.

RAF SPREADS FIRE OVER ALL TURIN IN HEAVIEST RAID

Pilots Almost Unable to See Targets Amid Flames.

LONDON, Nov. 21 (AP).—A fiery raid on Turin, the royal air force's heaviest in its growing offensive against Italy, spread such a blanket of fire over the northern arsenal city Friday night that the raiders had difficulty finding clear spaces for targets, the British disclosed today.

Meanwhile, Britain passed its 15th consecutive day without a German raid.

Informed sources indicated that perhaps from 200 to 300 planes took part in the giant assault on Turin.

After giving Turin, home of Italy's Fiat, Caproni bomber, and other war works, only two nights of respite, a heavy RAF group returned in good weather.

Hard to Find Targets.

So thoro was the job, the air ministry said, that the RAF bombers ran out of target space and planes arriving in the later waves had difficulty picking spots to drop their bombs amid the explosions and fires.

The captain of one four engined Halifax which reached Turin about midway in the attack said he had to make four "dummy runs" before his bombardier could pick clear targets.

Three of the bombers were missing, a communique said, but the number sent out was not disclosed.

German fighters were aloft all the way from the French coast deep into southern France, the air ministry said, but had "little success."

Fourth Raid in 8 Nights.

The exact results of the assault could not be told, said a communique, because "dense smoke from many fires" clouded the flyers' observation. The Rome communique, however, said, "incendiary bombs in great quantities" fell in the center of Turin, caused fires, and killed 29 persons and wounded 120.

This was the fourth raid in eight nights on Italy and the 10th raid, including one in daylight, in which the RAF has smashed at such key centers as Genoa, Milan, Savona, and Turin since Oct. 22.

The planes lost Friday night raised to only 20 the total announced by the RAF as the cost of the month long offensive.

GEORGE T. SCHREIBER OF THE TRIBUNE IS PROMOTED BY ARMY

George T. Schreiber, former manager of the Chicago Tribune Press service, has been promoted by the army from major to lieutenant colonel, relatives in Chicago learned yesterday. Col. Schreiber went into service March 5, 1941, with the 33d National Guard division and a year ago was assigned to the 90th infantry division. The promotion, altho just announced, was made effective last Nov. 11, Lieut. Col. Schreiber's 43d birthday.

2 PRIZE ITALIAN LINERS RIPPED BY RAF'S RAIDS

LONDON, Nov. 21 (AP).—Two of Italy's prized trans-Atlantic liners, the 30,816 ton Roma and the 30,418 ton Augustus, were severely damaged in Royal air force raids on Genoa late in October, the air ministry disclosed today.

The Roma was being converted into an aircraft carrier, the air ministry said. The liner, which could carry 1,200 passengers, was one of the fastest passenger ships on the north Atlantic. She crossed between Naples and New York in eight days. The Augustus, which operated between Italy and Argentina, was damaged so much that she may not be worth repairing, the air ministry said.

DANNY WAS TOO GOOD A MAN FOR GENERAL TO LOSE

So He Tows Him Thru the Ocean to Buna.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Nov. 21.—Little Danny to his erstwhile mates on the New York News editorial staff, but Warrant Officer Dan Herr to others, is lying in a cot in some jungle field hospital near Buna, New Guinea, tonight with bullet wounds in both legs.

The story, as press dispatches tell it, is that Danny was aboard a trawler on his way to New Guinea on business last Monday when seven Jap Zero planes shot it up and sank it, leaving Danny, who can't swim, wounded and floating in his life belt in the water.

Also in the water was a distinguished general. [We know his name but the censor has a good reason for keeping it dark.]

The general was hauled aboard a dinghy and took a few pot shots with his automatic at the Jap planes, then dove overboard and started swimming for shore. En route he ran across Danny, who was not doing so well what with his wounded legs and all, and towed him to land.

They Hit It Off.

Danny's just 25 and the general, well, quite a bit older. But these two hit it off from the moment they met in a southern camp soon after Danny was drafted Jan. 15, 1941.

Somebody in the News office once said: "Danny weights 110 pounds dripping wet, but he's every pound a man." Maybe the general found that out.

His Rise Is Rapid.

Danny was inducted on Jan. 15, 1941, and assigned to Fort Bragg, South Carolina. Then he became a corporal, soon after that a sergeant, later, a master sergeant and private secretary to the general. After he reached Australia the general made him a warrant officer—the highest rank under that of a commissioned officer.

Danny, a Fordham graduate, was born in Huron, O., and came to the News in 1938. His mother, Mrs. Minnie Herr, 61, was in New York today when she received news that Danny had been saved by the general.

"He always writes me not to worry because he'll be with the general 'and generals don't get wounded,'" she said.

CENSORSHIP FOG LIFTS, LETS A BAD LONDON ONE THRU

[By Wireless to the New York News and The Chicago Tribune.]

LONDON, Nov. 21.—The first old fashioned pea soup fog since the war started settled down on London on Nov. 11, it now can be disclosed. So impenetrable was the fog that King George's car took an hour to creep from Buckingham palace to King's Cross station, normally no more than a 20 minute drive. Districts blanketed with the thickest fog had to clear all traffic from the streets and even pedestrians had great difficulty in finding their way. Arc lights and kerosene flares were set up at important intersections during the blackout, pointing boldly skyward. They cast a pale glow. The fog penetrated buildings, leaving a thin mist even in well sealed rooms.

Name Canadian Minister to Governments in Exile

OTTAWA, Ont., Nov. 21 (AP).—Brig. Georges P. Vanier, commander of the military district at Quebec, has been appointed Canadian minister to the governments of Czecho-Slovakia, Greece, Norway, Poland, Jugo-Slavia, Belgium, and the Netherlands in London, it was announced today in the Canada Gazette. Vanier was minister to France in 1939 and escaped from that country just before the German-Franco armistice in 1940.

REPORT AIRFIELD BUILDER HIRES TROOPS ON LEAVE

200 Hired, Army Told; Inquiry Ordered.

Mount Clemens, Mich., Nov. 21 [Special].—Reports that soldiers on furlough from Selfridge field, near here, are working as laborers for contractors engaged in enlarging the field tonight brought orders from Col. William T. Kolman, commandant, for a checkup to determine how men on furlough are spending their time.

The colonel denied that any furloughs have been granted to allow men to obtain employment with contractors, but said he has no way of knowing whether men on furlough have seized the opportunity to earn extra money for themselves by helping to alleviate the labor shortage here.

Jobs Pay $75; Labor Scarce.

Merchants here have said that many soldiers recently have been cashing checks issued by contractors. The prevailing wage being paid workers at the field is said to be $75 a week. According to the post public relations department, there are 2,700 civilians employed by the various contractors here. Labor is reported scarce.

Work on the enlargement project is going ahead at full speed, with crews working both night and day. The field is being enlarged to more than four times its former size thru the acquisition of 2,200 acres of farm land. This land is being leveled and graded. The project has involved moving 200 families from the land, wrecking homes and farm buildings, removing crops and eliminating wooded areas.

Report 200 Soldiers on Job.

When a report that 200 soldiers had jobs at $75 a week for a two week period was brought to the attention of Col. Kolman, he replied that furloughs are granted by squadron leaders and that he does not know where the men go.

"They can fish thru the ice if they please," he said.

Later the post public relations office said Col. Kolman had ordered an immediate check to determine whether contractors have been hiring service men. He refused comment on the situation pending completion of this inquiry.

EXPECT FEDERAL PROSECUTOR TO REPORT IN DRAFT

John M. Kiely, assistant United States attorney, who has been called a draft delinquent by draft board 55, 360 North Laramie avenue, is expected to report to the board tomorrow for possible induction.

Chief Clerk William McMullen said that if Kiely reports his recorded delinquency will be erased. The board will meet at 7 p. m. tomorrow on the matter.

Kiely is accused first of failing to report for physical examination and second to report for induction. He is 40 years old and a bachelor and has been in charge of prosecuting draft dodgers. It is said his draft board trouble arose from the fact that his superiors were at the same time seeking a deferment for him because of his work.

U. S. CENSORSHIP OF STORIES SENT ABROAD FLAYED

Holds It Keeps British in Dark About America

LONDON, Nov. 21 (AP).—The Sunday Dispatch tonight published on page one a report from Don Iddon, its New York correspondent, declaring the United States censorship of outgoing messages is preventing the British from getting a complete picture of America at war.

"There have been many important developments here which have appeared in the American press and have been read by millions of people which we have not been allowed to send to England," Iddon wrote. "There have been criticisms of the war effort and directions made publicly here in the press and over the radio which you have not heard because the American censorship has stopped us from sending them."

Price Doesn't Duck.

He asserted he was taking advantage of the declaration by Byron Price, director of censorship, at the recent British correspondents dinner that "you can say what you like about our censorship, that won't be censored."

Iddon added he was making a "protest against certain aspects of American censorship" on behalf of himself and other British correspondents.

Erroneous Impression Given.

He declared that in some instances an erroneous impression had been given in Britain regarding the output of certain war factories and efforts of British correspondents to correct the impression had failed because the messages were stopped.

The newspaper prefaced the story with an editorial note that "this important statement . . . brings into the open a problem which no British newspaper has yet tackled, altho it is well known to all of them."

U. S. HAS NO COMMENT.

In Washington, D. C., the Office of Censorship had no comment on the Iddon report. United States authorities consistently have drawn a clear distinction on matter which may be printed in the United States but which they do not want printed abroad.

REDS HURL BACK NAZI ATTACKS ON CAUCASUS FRONT

Repel New Enemy Assaults in Stalingrad.

MOSCOW, Nov. 22 [Sunday]—(AP).—German assaults intended to better the Nazi position in the Caucasus after the smashing Russian victory before Ordzhonikidze have been consistently hurled back by Russian units and at least two companies and a battalion of the enemy have been annihilated or dispersed, the Russians reported early today.

German attacks in Stalingrad appeared to have dwindled considerably, the Russian war report indicated as the 90th day of siege opened.

"In the factory district of Stalingrad our troops repelled attacks of small enemy groups" the communique said. "In other sectors our artillery engaged the enemy in duels. During the day 300 of the enemy troops were killed, and six guns and eight mortars were destroyed."

Repel Attacks Near Mozdok

The soviet midnight communique announced that in the Mozdok area of the Caucasus [in the same general sector where the Geramns were beaten] one soviet unit in one day repelled three enemy attacks, "annihilating some two companies of enemy infantry." The communique added that "soviet artillery and mortar fire dispersed and partly annihilated about a battalion of German infantry."

Take Forts in Tuapse Area.

Fighting continued in the sector southeast of Nalchik, where the German apparently took their worst beating in the action before Ordzhonikidze. Reports yesterday said the Germans appeared to be reforming their shattered lines in this area for a new blow at the Russians.

One Red guard unit "wiped out more than 700 enemy officers and men" in that area, the communique said, and two enemy tanks were disabled and four burned out. "Six German trucks were destroyed as well as six heavy machine guns," it added.

"Northeast of Tuapse on one sector our troops pressed the enemy back somewhat and captured several fortified positions," the communique said, reporting on the fighting in the Black sea area of the western Caucasus.

Claim Russians Repulsed.

BERLIN, Nov. 21 [from German broadcasts].—The German high command communique today admitted that the Nazis were on the defensive in Russia and were opposed by strong forces.

South of Stalingrad, the communique said, another soviet unit "started an attack with strong forces supported by tanks." The attack was wiped out by German armored forces, it said.

"Also on the lower Don," it added, "violent defensive fighting of German and Rumanian troops is continuing. An attempt made by the enemy to cross the Neva river [at Leningrad] with many boats failed in concentrated German defensive fire."

Say Reds Torpedo Prisoner Ship.

VICHY, Nov. 21 [from French broadcasts]—(AP).—A soviet submarine torpedoed a cargo ship transporting 1,000 soviet prisoners in the Baltic today and about 200 of the prisoners were killed, dispatches from Stockholm said today.

Win Navy Wings

Corpus Christi, Tex., Nov. 21 [Special].—Two Chicago men have been awarded their navy wings of gold and commissioned ensigns in the United States naval reserve, at the naval air training center here.

They are Joseph B. Raba, 5451 Corneuu avenue, and Arthur Bonnet, 1127 Farwell avenue.

Raba is a former student of Woodrow Wilson Junior college. Bonnet attended Brown university.

HITLER'S ANSWER TO GEN. WINTER—COTTON UNIFORMS

And Only a Few Nazis Get Them, Say Russians.

MOSCOW, Nov. 21 (AP).—Some of the German army's winter equipment has appeared on the eastern front and, tho it is better than that of last winter, when the Nazis were caught completely unprepared, it still is insufficient to cope with the rigors of the Russian climate, front line reports said today.

A dispatch to Red Star, army newspaper, said some German troops in the Leningrad sector had winter uniforms, but many divisions have received no winter outfits.

Winter clothes issued to one German division were said to consist of wicker wrappings for the feet, with artificial rubber soles, padded cotton jackets, and cotton caps. The padded caps were given only to sentries, Red Star said, other troops being provided only with wool cloths to wrap around their heads.

Become Camouflage Suits.

In the 540th German special battalion, the dispatch said, only troops on active scouting operations have winter outfits.

The German winter uniforms are described as lined with white cloth so they can be turned inside out for camouflage in the snow.

Shivering German prisoners are quoted as saying they are not warm.

Those Germans who already have been thru the first winter campaign in Russia, the prisoners said, started a "self-collection" among the people of the towns they occupied, taking for themselves felt boots, fur lined coats, and fur hats with earlaps.

Reds Step Up Production.

Meanwhile, the soviet clothing industry has renewed the Red army's supply of winter uniforms.

One Russian family sent fur mittens and socks to a son at the front and received the package back with a letter from the boy saying:

"Don't bother to send me warm things. I have everything I need."

British Glider Troops in Norway Slain, Say Nazis

BERLIN, Nov. 21 [from German broadcasts]—(AP).—Two British planes towing troop filled gliders landed in southern Norway for purposes of sabotage and all the occupants were annihilated, the German high command said today. "On the night of Nov. 19-20 two British bombers, each towing a glider, flew over south Norway," the communique said. "One bomber and both gliders were forced to land. Sabotage troops on board were attacked and exterminated."

327 JAP SHIPS LOST TO 86 U. S. SINCE WAR BEGAN

Tabulation Shows Heavy Losses for Enemy.

BY WALTER TROHAN.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21.—THE TRIBUNE today presents the box scores of the United States and her enemies in 11 months of global warfare.

The box scores are based on communiques and official announcements of the united nations. They give the most complete compilation of available data.

In the Pacific the Japs have lost 327 vessels to 86 for the United States.

Of the Jap losses the navy has accounted for 213 ships and the army for 114. The American navy bagged 91 combat ships and 122 noncombat ships.

U. S. Loses 86 Ships.

In turn the American losses were 86 ships, including 13 merchantmen. Of the 73 combat vessels sunk the navy department communiques reported 57 men of war sunk and 9 demolished, largely in the Philippines, to keep them from falling into enemy hands. The loss of the merchantmen in that theater of the war was reported both from Washington and naval districts in the Pacific.

Loss of seven additional American naval vessels was reported by communiques other than those issued by the navy department. Damage to 15 American men of war was reported in navy department communiques.

Comparative Tables.

The following table shows comparative American and Jap losses in the Pacific:

	Japan.	United States.
Battleships	*2	1
Battleship or heavy cruiser	1	0
Aircraft carrier	6	4
Cruisers	32	6
Destroyers	44	21
Submarines	19	4
Transports	72	6
Merchant ships	101	13
Gunboats	8	5
Minesweepers and layers	7	8
Patrol craft	5	2
Auxiliaries	5	1
Plane tenders	2	2
Torpedo boats and launches	2	6
Submarine tenders	0	1
Oilers	0	3
Converted carrier	1	0
Miscellaneous	20	3
Totals	327	86

*Includes Haruna, which was set afire in the Philippines, but may have reached port.

The American reports of damage are of little value, because the navy conceals damage of its vessels from the enemy. Rarely has damage to American vessels been admitted, and when disclosed it has frequently been followed by acknowledgment that the damaged vessel later sunk.

In the Atlantic the United States had not fared so well. According to a compilation prepared from united nations and neutral announcements of merchant losses, the enemy submarine campaign box score is as follows:

Ships sunk	527
Subs sunk	?

The majority of the 527 ships sunk were of American registry or foreign vessels seized by this government in American ports. A considerable number of the vessels were merchantmen flying the flags of allied or neutral nations. An accurate breakdown of the losses by nations is not available.

Submarine Sinkings Secret.

Only on rare instances has the navy department reported the sinking of axis submarines, so what progress is being made in the extermination of the undersea boats is unknown. This policy was adopted in the belief that the concealment of sinkings would shake enemy morale.

In casualties the United States armed forces have lost 48,956 men since Pearl Harbor, excluding the African campaign. No casualty lists have yet been released on the African operations.

The American casualties are as follows:

	Killed.	Wounded.	Missing.	Prisoners.
Army	1,069	1,531	29,668	161
Navy	3,854	1,190	7,972	460
Marine corps	734	103	1,190	728
Coast guard	37	11	*126	0

What the enemy lost in the areas where American men were killed, wounded, or taken prisoner is unknown. This enemy box score probably will not be filled in until after the war.

Jap Naval Losses.

Jap naval losses in the Pacific as compiled from naval communiques lists a total of 421 ships sunk, probably sunk, and damaged. The list follows:

JAPANESE.

	Sunk.	Probably sunk.	Damaged.
Battleships	1	0	9
Battleship or heavy cruiser	1	0	0
Aircraft Carriers	6	1	7
Cruisers	21	3	42

Tenders	1	1	5
Others	16	2	14
Total combat ships	91	20	115
Fleet tankers	14	0	8
Transports	36	7	19
Cargo and supply ships	65	7	22
Miscellaneous	7	2	8
Total noncombat ships	122	16	57
Grand total all ships	213	36	172

American Naval Losses.

The navy department suggested that caution be observed in perusal of damage figures, because the same ships may be included a number of times in the various categories. A damaged ship is repaired and may be damaged again and again.

The above table does not include Jap vessels sunk by the army or those announced by Gen. Douglas MacArthur in Australia. The table was prepared solely from navy communiques. The grand total of all sinkings was given in the first table.

UNITED STATES.

	Sunk or overdue.	Demolished.	Damaged.
Battleships	1	0	1
Aircraft carriers	4	0	0
Heavy cruisers	4	0	1
Light cruisers	2	0	2

The box score for the battle of the Solomons is incomplete because the battle is still on. It includes the Jap losses of 28 ships in the latest round of that struggle.

STASSEN NAMED AID FOR RELIGIOUS EDUCATION GROUP

Gov. Harold E. Stassen, of Minnesota, has been appointed president of the International Council of Religious Education, it was announced yesterday by Dr. Roy G. Ross, executive secretary of the council which represents educational interests of 41 denominations. He succeeds James L. Kraft, Chicago industrial leader.

In accepting his appointment, Gov. Stassen outlined reasons for promoting the interests of the council. "We must make sure," he said, "that world-wide freedom is based on the religious concept of personality, adding that respect for the right and liberties of all peoples and races is a resulting factor of the religious basis for freedom."

SPEEDER IS SHOT FLEEING POLICE; WANTED BY FBI

Norman Lynch, 27 years old, of 6700 Chappel avenue, who told police he was sought by the Federal Bureau of Investigation for check forgeries and stealing from the mails, was shot in the left arm yesterday morning while attempting to escape after being arrested for speeding in Summit.

Lynch, overtaken while speeding in Archer avenue by a police squad in command of Policeman Charles Rachine, was told to follow the squad car to the station.

Lynch first complied, then suddenly swung his car about and speeded away. He was halted at 5330 South 73d court, when one of the policemen's bullets struck him.

BEATS HIS WIFE, BUT FINE IS CUT ON HER APPEAL

Paul Sancek, 45 years old, 4144 North Leavitt street, stood before Judge Erwin J. Hasten in Racine avenue court yesterday on charges of beating and wounding his wife, Margaret.

"You're lucky you're not in court for murder instead of disorderly conduct," the judge told him. "I'm going to fine you $200 and costs—the limit."

Sancek's wife, her head swathed in bandages, interrupted the judge: "O, no. He's the finest man in the world when he's sober. That's too much!"

"Very well," said Judge Hasten, "I'll make it $10 and costs. But you can thank her that you're getting off so lightly."

10,000,000 AEF? ALL ALLIED SHIPS ARE NOT ENOUGH

Estimate 5 Million Most Can Get Abroad.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21.—If the United States should attempt to utilize in the various theaters of war the 19 million men planned for the American armed forces in 1943, the entire allied merchant fleet is not large enough to carry and supply them, a survey of military and shipping plans disclosed today.

Under the mobilization plans disclosed last week by President Roosevelt the United States will have 7½ million men in the army, 1½ million men in the navy and 700,000 men in the marine corps, coast guard and other auxiliaries by Jan. 1, 1944.

Gen. George C. Marshall, army chief of staff, told congress that this country will never require more than two million men for defense of the western hemisphere. He had originally told congress that an army of 400,000 men would be large enough for defense purposes.

Need Staggering Fleet.

To transport and supply the entire army of 7½ million men would require a fleet of staggering proportions. It is generally conceded that the largest number of armed forces this country will maintain abroad is 5 million men. This number may be revised upward, but at present is considered the maximum.

Brig. Gen. R. W. Littlejohn, quartermaster general of the American forces in the British Isles, has estimated that each American soldier in England requires 10.5 tons of original shipment and 1.5 tons of supplies each month. This means that each man in the field in the British Isles requires 28.5 tons of supplies in his first year abroad. In combat action supply needs rise sharply, it is said.

On Trips of 3,000 Miles.

Gen. Littlejohn's is the only available official estimate on the shipping need. Another estimate widely used, which is not official, fixes the transportation requirements of each man at 17 tons of shipping and the amount of shipping for supplies at 3.4 tons of shipping in constant operation.

On the basis of the general's estimate 4.6 million tons of shipping would be required in constant operation for each million men during the first year of expeditionary operations. This estimate assumes a supply line 3,000 miles long and six round trips a year for each ship.

On the basis of the estimate of 17 deadweight tons of shipping for the transportation of each man and 3.4 tons for supplies, shipping needs would approximate 6.2 million tons for each million men during the year. In the first 11 months of the war, the United States has reported 800,000 men overseas but a large number of these are in American outposts or bases far from active fronts.

This means that for 5,000,000 men abroad at a distance of 3,000 miles, the allies would need from 23 million to 31 million tons of shipping.

Altho the greater number of American forces abroad are expected to serve in Europe at the front which Prime Minister Winston Churchill has said will be opened in Belgium or northern France, many men will be sent to other theaters.

Australia is 7,500 miles from San Francisco, Egypt is 14,000 miles from New York by way of the Cape of Good Hope. India is 12,000 miles away from New York by the same route. Siberia is 2,400 miles from Seattle. Murmansk is 5,400 miles away from New York. French Colonial Africa is more than 3,200 miles away by the most direct route from New York and distances expand if the approach is by way of England, as it was in the invasion, or from South America.

Some Go 5,000 Miles.

Experts assume that equipment and supplies may have to be transported between 4,500 and 5,000 miles on the average. This would mean, it was estimated, that if the United States is to send and supply 5,000,000 men abroad, some 33 to 45 million deadweight tons of shipping would be required, or more than the united nations may have on hand for all purposes.

Exactly how much shipping the allied nations possess is a military secret. It has been estimated that the united nations had a total of about 25 million gross tons of ocean going shipping last spring. Since that time the allied nations have suffered heavy submarine losses. At the same time the allied ship construction program has been stepped up.

The United States shipbuilding program calls for 24 million tons of construction in 1942 and 1943. Even if this program should be reached, and the submarine menace ended, the united nations would have no more than 50 million deadweight tons of shipping available by the end of 1943.

Materials Take Some.

All of these ships would not be available for moving troops or supplies. They are needed to keep raw materials moving, shipment of lend-lease supplies and maintenance of other allied forces than those of the United States.

Experts see little chance of sending and maintaining 5 million men abroad in 1943. For that reason, experts believe, there is little use in building the army up to 7,500,000 men, particularly since the army high command has told congress that about 13 weeks of preliminary training are enough for soldiers, particularly the youngest draftees, before they are sent to war zones.

Allied nations now need all the shipping they have for various purposes. Experts are extremely doubtful that the required 33 to 45 million tons of additional shipping in 1943 can be obtained because at present shipping is the most serious bottleneck of the war.

CANADIANS FIND THEIR LIBERTIES SHELVED BY WAR

Jailed Without Trial, Free Speech Curbed.

BY WILLIAM FULTON.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

TORONTO, Ont., Nov. 21 [Passed by Canadian censor.]. — Canada today is a country where citizens are imprisoned without trial, where private property is seized by the government, and freedom of speech sometimes is denied.

Camillien Houde.

Civil liberties, the cherished rights of democracy, have been shelved for the duration of the war. Fears are expressed that the burocrats will not return these rights easily to the people after the smoke of battle clears.

An unknown number of citizens, aside from leaders of the Canadian German Bund, Japs, or alien "fifth columnists," have been jailed without trial. Best known among the prisoners is Camillien Houde, mayor of Montreal. It was alleged that he uttered subversive statements, but he never has had a day in court in his own defense.

Civil Rights Up to Provinces.

The dominion of Canada has no constitution or bill of rights safeguarding the individual's freedoms. Its government instrument is the British North America Act, enacted by Queen Victoria and the British parliament in 1867. That measure left civil rights up to provincial governments, which have no constitutions.

Before Hitler invaded Poland in September of 1939, the Canadian citizen depended on the ancient customs and usages of British common law to protect his rights. This prop was pulled out from under him after the outbreak of war. Today he can only hope that the men administering the laws will not do so capriciously, politically, or cruelly.

Canada's 11,500,000 inhabitants are being governed by orders in council, which are tantamount to law and become immediately effective upon proclamation by Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King's cabinet. Parliament handed over this power to the cabinet shortly after the war began. It was reënactment of a 1914 law.

Rule Called Absolute.

Measures need not be submitted to parliament for ratification, altho under the Canadian system the house of commons may vote down a government proposition. In that event, a general election would be called to return the old government to office or form a new one. Since the present régime enjoys an overwhelming majority, an election is an obscure possibility.

One western newspaper editor described the government's rule over the Canadians' individual lives as being so absolute "that the cabinet has the power to do anything except change a man into a woman and a woman into a man."

Houde, while mayor of the country's largest city, made a statement opposing national registration in the summer of 1940. He claimed this measure amounted to conscription, breaking the promises of the heads of the government never to impose conscription in any form.

Houde Guesses Wrong.

It is said that Houde, a colorful Huey Long type of politician, gambled he would get a jury trial if any action was taken. However, the police tucked him away in an internment camp. He's still there.

Better luck befell Rene Chaloult, a member of the Quebec provincial legislature who similarly gambled with fate. He was formally charged and tried for an alleged demand that the federal government not impose conscription for overseas and reputed statements that Canada should keep her troops at home to defend her own soil, as England was doing.

Chaloult was acquitted on his own defense that he had spoken in good faith in the belief that if the government attempted to draft French Canadians for overseas service, rioting would follow, as it did in 1917. The Mackenzie King government has not yet had the temerity to put the overseas draft into effect, altho it has the authority.

Communists Being Released.

With the recent release of Chaloult, Mrs. Houde, the mother of three children, demanded that her husband be restored to her. She inveighed against two weights and two measures of justice in Canada.

Approximately 100 Communists have been jailed without trial in Canada since the war started, but they are being released.

The Reds were incarcerated under a government order-in-council issued in the summer of 1940. Thirty-four organizations and societies were stamped as illegal. Their members and leaders were declared to be violating the defense of Canada regulations, which is about the same as treason.

Outlawed groups not only included the Communist party and its window dressing front organizations, but also took in Jehovah's Witnesses, the Tower Bible and Tract society, the International Bible Students' association, and Technocracy, Inc., the latter being a visionary economic scheme. One Technocrat here in Toronto has been fined $200 for being a Technocrat. The religious groups have been quiet and relatively undisturbed.

Church Schools Safeguarded.

On the question of religion, the British North America act contains a specific provision safeguarding denominational schools. New sects, such as the Jehovah's Witnesses, do not have the same protection as the old, established denominations.

In practice the government's treatment of the Communists has tilted one way and then the other according to Russia's position in the war. The Reds ran afoul of the law when they attacked the "imperialist" war in Europe during the lifetime of the nonaggression pact between Germany and Russia. After Hitler attacked Russia, the Canadian Communist branch came out in favor of the war and the heat cooled off.

When the Reds were on the wrong side of the fence, Timothy Buck, national secretary of the party in Canada, was a fugitive. Several weeks ago Buck and 13 of his comrades surrendered but soon were released from jail.

Buck May Run for Office.

As soon as Tim Buck was relaesed, he began crying for a second front like his counterpart across the border, Earl Browder. Now Buck is talking of running for the office of controler in Toronto and may win.

When the police picked up members of Ukrainian societies in the west, allegedly Communistic, they seized their meeting halls and turned them over to rival groups.

Internment of an individual without trial is done on the unanimous report of a committee of three, comprising one representative each from the departments of labor, immigration, and external affairs, the last being the equivalent of the state department in the United States. The police may present their evidence, but the accused may not.

Some time after the person has been in prison, an advisory committee headed by a judge may hear his case in private. A few prisoners have been clapped back into internment camps and others released by these committees. But the cases never get to a jury.

The Dreiser Case.

The denial of freedom of speech in Canada was pointed up by Theodore Dreiser, the American novelist. He was quoted in an interview in Toronto as saying he "would rather see Germans in England than those damn aristocratic snobs there now."

This was on Sept. 21. A few hours after he said it, Dreiser was fleeing across the border. The Hon. Louis St. Laurent, minister of justice, had issued an order prohibiting Dreiser from making any public address or issuing any statement for publication anywhere in Canada, and forbade any proprietor of a public hall or meeting place to permit an address by him.

Back in the safety of the United States Dreiser said he had been misquoted.

Growing anxiety over the future of civil liberties in the dominion has been voiced in Toronto within the last few weeks by two citizens, one a well known industrialist and the other a prominent leader of the Conservative party.

Fight to Last of Red Tape.

James Duncan, president of the Massey-Harris Company, Ltd., an aircraft firm, told a meeting of cost accountants and industrial engineers that individualistic Canadians were prepared to accept a regimented economy only until peace is attained. But he warned against any illusions. He said:

"Our present burocracy will not voluntarily or tamely relinquish their new found authority. They will, in fact, fight to the last spool of red tape to preserve this thing so sweet to small minds."

The second expression came from Col. George Drew, counsel for the opposition in the investigation into the downfall of the Canadian garrison at Hongkong. The government started to prosecute Drew when he criticized the exoneration of military authorities from any bungling in the affair. The charges against Drew were withdrawn, but a detailed letter he wrote on the situation was suppressed by the censorship.

"Why" Speech Is Curbed.

Speaking before the young men's section of the Toronto Board of Trade, Drew asserted that one of the most convenient explanations for restricting the freedom of speech and of the press is that discussion of military matters will assist the enemy.

"What more convenient device could there be for restraining embarrassing criticism than to have a charge laid under the defense of Canada regulations?" he asked.

It was one of the oldest devices used by those who sought to evade an accounting for their conduct, according to Drew. He added that the last war was nearly lost because of restrictions which barred public comment on the shortage of munitions.

Must Assert Right to Speak.

"If you believe that we are fighting for democracy; if you believe that freedom is a fact and not a meaningless word; if you believe that government of the people and by the people can work," said Col Drew, "then it is not merely your right—you have no higher duty than to exercise your right of free speech and demand that immediate steps be taken to assure efficient control and adequate reënforcements for our fighting forces when they go into action."

It was admitted by the government that some of the men in the detachments sent to Hongkong shortly before the Japanese attacked had not even completed their basic training and that vehicles for the troops never arrived. It was Drew's letter giving more details on the mistakes and inefficiency of higherups at home in connection with the Hongkong debacle that the government refused to let the newspapers print. The newspapers asserted freedom of the press was jeopardized, but the government refused to alter its course.

The Haggis Makes Its Entrance

STEAMING HAGGIS PIPED TO FEAST AS SCOTS CHEER

1,500 Hail 97th Year of St. Andrew Society.

Fifteen hundred Scotsmen gathered last night in the Palmer House to celebrate the 97th anniversary of the Illinois Saint Andrew society.

The cutting of the haggis, a pudding concocted by steaming hearts, livers, and other organs of lamb with suet and oatmeal in a sheep's stomach, is the highlight of each St. Andrew society dinner. Borne high on a tray carried on the shoulders of kilted highlanders, the haggis was piped into the ballroom last night by a highland bagpipe band, led by Robert H. Sim, pipe major.

Potatoes Become Tawties.

Many a Scotch burr sounded in the room as guests told Scotch stories and recalled tales of the land of Robert Burns. The menu was in keeping with the names of McCracken, Wallace, and the other guests of Scottish birth or descent.

Instead of potatoes, waiters served Ayrshire Tawties. "Auld reekie stringbeans" were revealed to be creamed. The "Flaughtering Cream wi' Drambuie Sauce" was merely a pseudonym for ice cream topped by whipped cream, and a "Trinklin' o' Java" was a cup of coffee.

Alex G. Shennan, president of the society, welcomed the guests and introduced the toastmaster, Robert E. Lee Hill, director of alumni for the University of Missouri.

Major and Professor Talk.

Speakers were Maj. Norman A. Imrie of the army air forces and the Rev. James W. Clarke, professor of homiletics in the Presbyterian Theological seminary.

A musical program was provided by Margaret B. MacDonald's Highland dancers, by Lilias Sims, a winner in the Tribune's Chicagoland Music Festival, and by Templeton Moore, singer of Scottish tunes.

BY CLAUDIA CASSIDY.

Two Verdi operas and several debuts held the Chicago Opera stage Saturday—"Aida" in the afternoon with Dusolina Giannini in the title rôle, George Czaplicki as Amonasro, Kerstin Thorborg, a new Amneris, and Jan Kiepura singing the first Rhadames of his career, and "Il Trovatore" in the evening with Rose Bampton returning to the company as Leonora, with Giovanni Martinelli and Richard Bonelli also in major rôles.

The repetition of "Aida" was an interesting performance with a good deal of vocal dynamite. Mr. Kiepura's dashing experiment proved far from foolish. His tenor has the range and brilliance to enjoy the high tessitura of the score, and his singing in the triumph and Nile scenes had tremendous impact. But his voice was too white to project the splendor of "Celeste Aida," and his singing of the final duet was too bathed in bathos to be bearable.

These things are matters of tradition and style. If Mr. Kiepura cares to go thru the discipline to acquire the requisite line and demeanor for the rôle, he should find it more than rewarding.

Coldly Cruel Princess.

Mme. Thorborg proved an acquisition in major operatic terms. She is tall, strikingly handsome, and blessed with a voice both beautiful and unusual in quality. Her Amneris was a coldly cruel princess, vividly reptilian in menace, not quite so effective in the groveling of despair. There were times when her top voice failed to fling out the bold fury of Amneris tone, but on the whole it was a richly sung performance by a woman who looked like a goddess in spite of some strange costumes.

Mme. Giannini sang an exceptionally good Aida for two acts and a part of the Nile scene. Her voice had plangency without the metallic timbre that can give it unpleasant edge. It had gleam and fullness and a crackling quality of attack. Like her performance, it had character—a touch of the inimical quality of the savage at bay. It was not quite so good in "O Patria Mia," and it lacked the blandishing loveliness for the Nile scene and tomb scene duets with Mr. Kiepura. But that early brilliance fairly bristled with excitement.

Rôle Superbly Sung.

Mr. Czaplicki's Amonasro continues to be his best rôle, a superbly sung piece of operatic characterization from the top shelf. From this same place of honor came Mr. Lazzari's high priest, rich of voice and quietly secure of style. Mr. Peroni's conducting was capable, and no one minded much when a premature curtain disclosed the stage director still hard at work.

'IL TROVATORE' IN EVENING

"IL TROVATORE."

Opera in four acts and eight scenes with music by Giuseppe Verdi, libretto by Salvatore Cammanarco, based on the Spanish drama by Antonio Catteerea. Presented in Italian by the Chicago Opera company at the Civic Opera house Saturday evening, Nov. 21, 1942.

THE CAST.

Leonora	Rose Bampton
Azucena	Coe Glade
Inez	Ruth Clarson
Manrico	Giovanni Martinelli
Count di Luna	Richard Bonelli
Ferrando	Douglas Beattie
Ruiz	Joseph Folmer
Conductor	Dino Bigalli
Stage director	William Wymetal

Despite several notable voices and some of the company's most effective stage settings, "Trovatore" was not a good performance. It suffered from inadequate rehearsal which Mr. Bigalli was unable to cover up from the orchestra pit, and from the serious miscasting of Coe Glade as the heroic gypsy, Azucena. Her voice, beautiful in the right score, sounded hollow and shrill because it was overtaxed.

I never have become quite reconciled to Rose Bampton as a dramatic instead of a mezzo soprano, for the purely selfish reason that I considered that vanished mezzo one of the loveliest voices in existence. But each season finds her nearer her dramatic goal, and while her Leonora lacked the final edge of Verdian triumph in range, at its best it was superb in texture and tone.

Mr. Martinelli's Manrico was its usual masterpiece of style, tho it lacked some of its usual luster. Mr. Bonelli sang with the debonair ease of a beautiful baritone ideally cast, and Mr. Beattie's Ferrando was good enough to have deserved some rehearsal.

Rehearsing for Opera Tomorrow

OPERA REJOICES; STAR IS HEALTHY, READY TO SING

Grace Moore Appears in 'Faust' Tomorrow.

Members of the Chicago Opera company were breathing sighs of relief yesterday when Grace Moore, celebrated soprano, appeared at the Opera house in good health to rehearse her rôle of Marguerite in tomorrow night's performance of "Faust."

Lily Pons and Gladys Swarthout, both famed prima donnas, because of illness, had to cancel their performances with the company, the members of which now regard Miss Moore with anxious eyes and take every precaution that she, too, will not replace an operatic rôle with a case of laryngitis.

Chicago Her Second Home.

During pauses in an enthusiastic rehearsal of the Gounod opera, the soprano disappeared backstage to renew her acquaintance with the wardrobe mistress and to declare her love for Chicago.

"It's my second home," she avowed. "I love it, even on its windiest days."

Chicago's love for Miss Moore was recently confirmed when her appearance last summer during the Grant park concerts was chalked up as the record breaking performance in the park's concert history.

Dressed in a black corded faille suit and wearing a small black velvet hat perched atop her blonde curls, the singer sat on an upright piano as she expresser her views on the effect of the war on music.

"People in every country turn to music in time of war," she said, "and that is proving true in this country."

Music Good for Morale.

Having just returned from performances in Montreal, Quebec, Canada, Miss Moore observed first hand that Canadians are declaring that music is a top flight morale builder.

"Music in America has always been treated with a touch of snobbery, but during the war I think it will be given to the masses. Americans will soon accept music, like spaghetti, as part of their lives."

Giovanni Martinelli, artistic director of the company, said, "Grace Moore is in the best of voice, but, more important, she's in very good humor." Martinelli was taking part in the rehearsal in the place of a missing tenor.

Appearing with Miss Moore, who will appear for the first time in Chicago in the rôle of Marguerite, a part she has not sung in eight years, will be the following singers:

Armand Tokatyan, tenor, will sing Faust; Alexander Kipnis, bass, will be heard as Mephistopheles; Richard Bonelli, baritone, will appear as Valentin, and Margery Mayer, mezzo-soprano, will sing Siebel.

Fausto Cleva, director this season for the first time with the Chicago company, will conduct. Cleva is popular among operatic stars for his forceful direction of the scores.

WOMAN'S CLUB HOLDS SERIOUS HARVEST PARTY

A harvest festival, the annual all day party of the Chicago Woman's club, was held yesterday at 72 East 11th street. Festivities were sombered somewhat, this year, members said, because of the war work to be done.

Instead of the usual style show which has been an annual highlight, a "uniform show" was presented. Two women from each of the war services appeared in uniform and spoke on the nature of work done in their branches.

Officers of the army, navy, air force, marines, and coast guard, from the Chicago area, also participated to spur the war bond selling campaign sponsored by the club.

CITY HAS A HEART FOR NEEDY, FUND COLLECTORS FIND

The numerous little acts of generosity, many of them bordering on personal sacrifice, that mark the progress of Community fund collections, have convinced Charles Y. Freeman, general manager of the fund, that Chicago is a city with a heart.

Freeman yesterday cited the act of Mrs. Violet Sanabria, 1463 Winnemac avenue, who donated an entire week's income from her war plant job to the fund, as indicative of the city's warm heartedness.

As another example, he pointed to a money order upon his desk sent by a 15 year old Chicago boy now serving as a page in the United States senate. The order was for $5.20—20 cents a week for 26 weeks. Freeman said that $3,006,464 of the quota has been attained, leaving $750,000 to be raised by the time the campaign closes Dec. 3.

SHELDON CLARK ASKED TO AID NEW SERVICE BOARD

Sheldon Clark, Chicago sportsman and business man, has been asked to serve as vice chairman of the joint army and navy committee on welfare and recreation, the war department announced yesterday. The chairmanship has been accepted by Arthur W. Page of New York City, vice president of the American Telephone and Telegraph company. The joint committee was organized to advise the secretaries of the army and the navy on leisure time services inside and outside military and naval establishments.

The struggle for freedom of speech has marched hand in hand in the advance of civilization with the struggle for other human liberties. History teaches that human liberty cannot be secured unless there is freedom to express grievances.
—ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

THREE REASONS FOR CENSORSHIP.

Censorship has three purposes, but the President referred to only one of them in his radio speech last Tuesday. He mentioned the one legitimate reason for news suppression: To keep information from the enemy.

The second purpose is to cover up the blunders of those in power. This is the principal use of censorship. It is the same with burocrats everywhere. Those who read "Suez to Singapore," the record of Cecil Brown's experiences as an American reporter, know that the incompetents of Singapore were just as anxious to use the censorship to cover up their failings as are bunglers in Washington or anywhere else. The attitude of these men is, typically, that which Brown found among Singapore officialdom: "We shall tell you nothing and how dare you criticize anything we do!"

Vanity is a strange thing. It is most prevalent often among those who have the least excuse for indulging in it. Men in authority come to think that infallibility is vested in them because of the positions of power they occupy. The Singapore Straits Times observed that the artisans of disaster in Malaya invariably displayed "an autocratic attitude which declines to admit the possibility of error and regards criticism as an impertinence."

The autocrats of Singapore succeeded in concealing the inner rot that led to collapse, and the fruits of their achievement are now to be gathered in Japanese concentration camps. The same disposition to hide weakness and incapacity is to be found among all men who occupy high official station and enjoy the sense of importance it gives them. It is almost a universal rule that those who have resort to censorship are trying to hide their own incompetence from themselves as well as from the rest of the world.

The third reason for censorship is to keep the people ignorant so that the government can dominate them. This reason is as old as the appetite for power and it is very much in evidence at the present time. A people that is denied information of every nature has no recourse but blind reliance.

It is every one's duty to resist the misuse of censorship. The independent character of Americans makes them the least susceptible of all peoples to the abuses and disasters that spring from the suppression of the facts they have a right to know. Nobody has yet succeeded in killing off public opinion as a controling force in this country and as long as the people remain resolute no one ever will.

SILVER GETS READY TO WORK.

Sen. Green of Rhode Island has drafted a bill to end the silver scandal. It will permit the government to sell silver out of its 100,000 ton hoard at an average price of 50 cents an ounce for any war use certified by the War Production board. The bill has been approved by the senate committee on coinage and by the treasury department. Now all that is necessary is to pass it.

There should be no delay about that, but any one who is familiar with the restrictions upon the use of government silver will wonder why this legislation wasn't enacted long ago. Probably Sen. Green's bill will be resisted to the last ditch by the dozen silver senators, whose obstructionist tactics have so long been successful. But congress, if it has the national interest and success of the war at heart, will finally have the gumption to put these men in their place.

The silver is in great demand for war uses. It is, for example, indispensable for brazing joints which must be proof against vibration, corrosion, or leaks, as in submarines, airplanes, tanks, torpedoes, and bombs. It is a prime conductor of electricity and as such is needed in war plants. Nothing but silver will do in airplane engine bearings because it permits pressures—that is, speeds—which are impossible with tin-bronze bearings. There are pounds of silver in the recoil mechanism of every field artillery piece and anti-aircraft gun.

The silver senators are going to object that the Green bill violates the provision in the monetary silver buying act that not an ounce of silver can be sold at less than $1.29. They will assert that the government has not fulfilled the provision that our silver hoard be brought up to 25 per cent of our gold holdings. They will say that a previous legislative authorization releasing some of the government stock pile confined that which might be used for war purposes to silver not needed for currency backing, and that, in any event, the silver was to be lent, not sold.

It is true that all of these provisions are part of existing law. It is still truer that none of them ever made sense. The whole shameless record on silver is a study in legislative irrationality. There was no more excuse for the passage of such acts in time of peace than there is for maintaining them in time of war. Fortunately, the war provides a valid reason for wiping the whole mess off the statute books.

THE MAN WHO SAVED RICKENBACKER.

It develops that a young flying lieutenant from Evanston, W. F. Eadie, rescued Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker after he had been lost for three weeks in the Pacific. No flyer could have brought home a more valuable passenger. Thanks to Lieut. Eadie, the captain lives to serve his country.

Lieut. Eadie is one of many young American airmen who fly the lonely patrols. The assignment requires vigilance and devotion to duty. Those qualities enabled the flyer to sight the life raft bearing Rickenbacker and two comrades. The feat is the more remarkable in that it apparently was accomplished at night. Flares had to be dropped to bring the plane to a skilful landing. Eadie and his radioman showed courage in taking the survivors off the raft. There was room for only one in the cockpit; so Rickenbacker and another officer were lashed to the wings of the plane. Lieut. Eadie taxied his plane 40 miles to his base to bring them in.

Lieut. Eadie's performance was expert. We are glad that America's greatest military flyer was there to witness it and commend it. Maybe we're prejudiced, but it does seem that a disproportionately large number of the men who have distinguished themselves in this war come from out our way, from the middle west.

WE DO OUR BIT FOR DEMOCRACY.

THE TRIBUNE has a little plan for the encouragement of democracy both in England and here. It will not stand comparison with the more prodigious proposals of high moonshine content, but it is our bit, a small thing, but our own. We've resolved to cease using titles of nobility in our columns wherever the use can be avoided.

American and British forces are working together in North Africa and it must be embarrassing to a British Adm. Sir John and Gen. Sir Henry to be so dressed up for the company of the plain American Adm. John and Gen. Henry. Somebody looks silly and we trust it is not the American.

Some Englishmen say that England must be a very different sort of isle after the war. The common man must be able to recognize his century. The Lord seems to have loved the plain people of Britain as elsewhere if making a great many of them is, as Lincoln thought, evidence of affection. However, it is true also in England that a duke is made to be contemplated and not criticized. Candidates for honors will gladly settle for lesser rank, dukedoms having a high priority rating. Orders of nobility do not require the quality implied. Birth is enough in some instances and affluence will do in others if a percentage is placed in the right quarters.

What the century of the common man is to contain for Britain we in America cannot know. There are things which cannot be transferred under lend-lease and even Mr. Churchill, altho plain Winston, doesn't want some of them for Christmas or any other time. Mr. Churchill is inclined to be conservative. The noble orders are woven into the tapestried history of England and may grace an abbey or a minster. In modern life they create false distinctions between men, are indifferent to quality, are irresponsible to character, are rewards usually without merit, and create fraudulent values. Time can honor them if they are monuments of the past. The sirs at Singapore did not save that bastion, and to some observers before Dec. 7 it seemed inevitable that they would not.

So sterling a statesman as Stafford Cripps will not miss the sir before his name. It's unlikely that he failed in India because ultra plain Gandhi had stripped himself of his mahatma as well as most of his apparel, while Mr. Cripps was Sir Stafford all over the place and the viceroy was every inch of that. Or did the British caste system prove its incapacity for getting anywhere with the Hindu caste system? The world might say: "A plague on both of them." Bertrand Russell's moral metal and scholarly worth would not be improved if he unreefed his distinguished family title and appeared in lecture hall and drawing room as Earl Russell. If we saw that in print we'd think that the proofreader had passed a mistake. We know his name is Bertrand, not Earl.

It may be a small thing we do for democracy and nothing the London papers will immediately copy, but regardless of that we'll try it. Hereafter in the columns of THE TRIBUNE Adm. Sir Horatio Hornblower will be Adm. Horatio Hornblower, nothing more and nothing less. There may be some slips. Copy from abroad is peppered with tabu titles. The copyreaders may find that their work is as tedious as picking bird shot out of a prairie chicken. And there will be problems as well as slips. What, for instance, to do with Halifax? Mr. Halifax? Citizen Halifax? Or just Halifax? Troubles beset even the moderate progressive. Let the prodigious planners take heed. The ladies also will make difficulties. Lady Bath as Mrs. Bath is an evident problem. However, an earnest effort will be made. If you find us forced to compromise remember the four freedoms and the Atlantic Charter.

WARTIME CONTROLS AND THE COURTS.

The Canadian department of justice is considering methods of preventing the collapse of the dominion's whole system of wartime controls, which has been endangered by a series of judicial opinions. One judge has overruled regulations issued under the selective service act and another has quashed a conviction for selling a tire without a permit. Rent and gasoline control measures have also been successfully attacked in the courts. The department of justice is working to close the loopholes that have appeared, either by appealing to higher courts or by statutory amendment where that is necessary.

Court attacks on wartime measures appear to be more frequent in Canada than they are in the United States. All that this marks is the fact that Canada has been at war for two years longer than have we and that its people have had that much more time to detect faulty and unwise provisions in wartime restrictions and regulations and, where such faults have been found, have followed the traditional course of appeal to the courts to correct the evils.

The right of appeal against arbitrary action, whether by the legislature or the executive, is as great in war as in peace, and in the United States as in Canada. The fact that there has been virtually no recourse to this right as yet in this country should not deceive the regimenters and burocrats into believing that they can impose any rule they see fit without protest by the people and correction by the courts.

As a matter of fact, a number of their acts as well as some of the statutes on which they pretend to base those acts would probably be found unconstitutional if a citizen felt himself sufficiently injured to complain to the courts. That there have been so few complaints is due less to a lack of arbitrary intention on the part of the administration than to a determination on the part of the people to coöperate and to waive constitutional rights in smaller matters.

Editorial of the Day

THE PLIGHT OF PORTLAND.
[Hartford Courant.]

Whatever the cause may be, Portland, Ore., is faced with the prospect of a continuous and unbroken series of meatless days from now until the end of the year. The packers blame the OPA, saying that it failed to take into consideration the city's large number of new war workers in decreeing its proper allotment of meat. The OPA blames the packers, saying that they should have rationed the city on a more careful, month to month if not a week to week basis.

What no one denies is that the 1942 quota is just about exhausted. Nor can any one deny that the packers are powerless to help. If they should take pity on a meat famished Portland populace, the fines imposed on them might be enough to force them out of business. There is thus no man or agency capable of rescuing the poor Portlanders but one, the OPA itself. The question is, therefore, whether or not its officials will see fit to exercise the discretionary powers vested in them.

So far they have not done so. In fact, they have not even betrayed any inclination in this direction. As far as they are concerned, the people of Portland may well live on bread and cheese, or lobster, or turkey for the remainder of the year. The citizens of Portland doubtless will make every effort to make themselves heard all the way to Washington. Others may perhaps be permitted to suggest that a little common sense would do no harm, even in Washington.

NOTES FROM BRITAIN

BY LARRY RUE.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON [By air mail].—American soldiers over here are being paid in sterling instead of in United States dollars in accordance with the adoption by the united nations of the general principle that governments overseas make payments to their troops outside their own countries in the currency of the country in which they are stationed.

Periodical payments by the United States government are made to American paymasters in Britain, one British and one American bank, in the form of dollar credits. Special arrangements have been made with the Bank of England for the conversion of these dollars at the fixed rate of 4.03½ to the pound. Official quotations between the two countries are not affected.

British banks have for some time been buying dollar bills which American troops did not change with their paymasters at 4 shillings 10 pence [about 90 cents] to the dollar.

It is pointed out that owing to the creation of credits involved, and the supplies of such credits from overseas, the presence here of troops from America and other countries has added considerably to currency circulation here. Not only are the American troops important in numbers, but their scale of pay is high compared with the British.

When the war is over there will be a straightening-out of the position between Britain and other countries. Short of an actual pooling of resources, each country [says the Daily Telegraph] has given to the other just what assistance has been required either in goods or services, with a full recognition that, as allies, they are engaged in one common cause.

Women who are now working with the British navy, manning boat crews for harbor work, would have a perilous job to add to their present duties if their naval establishment should be bombed. They would take casualties to hospital by water while a raid was still in progress. In the blacked-out harbor, feeling their way among the vessels in port, these WRNS [Women's Royal Naval Service], straining their ears for the sound of ship's engines amid the din of the anti-aircraft guns and the crash of bombs, will bear the wounded to safety in their launches and pinnaces.

If the black disc, which signifies "gale blowing," dangles from the harbor flagstaff, it will make no difference. The WRNS are expert signalers. If they have a collision at night, or run into a mud bank, they can send out an S O S.

Most of the boats are manned by three girls—coxswain, bowman and stern sheetman. Only the jolly is manned by one girl alone, who cleans, paints, overhauls and runs the boat. Another of her duties is to take the officer in command of her naval establishment out to captains of warships escorting convoys.

Many of these sailor girls sailed their own yachts in prewar days, so that their sea training has not taken long. They wear flannels, the white shirt with square neck braided in the blue of the navy, bell bottom pants, and reefer coats.

That Britain has an abundance of food stored to meet any emergency is disclosed by the announcement that Food Minister Lord Woolton has no fewer than 8,000 food caches hidden in such a variety of places as castles, racing stables, racetrack stands, old mine workings, quarries, prisons, art galleries, churches, golf clubs, movie halls, skating rinks, pool rooms, swimming pools, dance halls, film studios, caves, and hide-outs in the Welsh mountains.

All these storehouses are controled by the warehouse division of the food ministry, which was set up when the British Isles were being intensively blitzed by the luftwaffe. Two million tons of foodstuffs can be stored.

Quantities of Britain's food are also stored in private warehouses, railroad stores and on the premises of manufacturers and traders. Britain will not starve.

Except that tuberculosis has increased 13 per cent, Britain is standing up so well to wartime conditions and rationing that Minister of Health Ernest Brown said recently "The nation's stubborn good health continues."

In the ministry of health's annual report, just published, the minister says that during the last year there was "no major epidemic and no falling away from nutritional standards." In fact, the report disclosed, investigations in some districts have shown that the health of the people has actually improved, and in no area was any serious setback discovered.

The spread of tuberculosis, however, is rather disquieting. The Medical Research council, which has a special committee investigating the problem, has recommended mass radiography in the armed services and among men and women entering war industries and certain other occupations. It suggests that a single mass X-ray examination should be carried out, where practicable, upon those already employed in munition factories, and that, "as an extension of this proceeding, X-ray examinations should be repeated at intervals upon certain groups of the population including [a] employés in factories which contain large numbers of young adults; [b] nurses and medical students, and [c] merchant seamen."

"Rationing and the ministry of food's excellent advertisments have created," says the official report, "a new and practical interest in a balanced diet and the methods of preparing and cooking foods so that the maximum of their content of vitamins and salts may be retained." Unofficial health observers, however, have noted a growing distrust of so-called vitaminized food.

Other findings of the health ministry's report:

Birth rate—The birth rate in 1941 rose to 14.2 per 1,000 compared with 13.6 in 1940. It was 14.9 in 1939.

Death rate—Deaths in 1941 out of an estimated population of 41,460,000 from all causes, including enemy action, were 535,180. The death rate was 12.9 a thousand, that from disease alone being only 11.7 a thousand, a whole point below 1940, and only 2 above 1939.

Women were moved to tears at a tea party at London's Mansion house the other day when discussion turned to the alarming increase in Britain since the war of baby farming, which Sir Norman Birkett, judge of the King's bench and father of a grown-up son and daughter, described as a menace.

Birkett demanded the immediate passage by parliament of an act prohibiting baby farming. He told of an item which appeared in a Scottish newspaper recently advertising an unborn baby for sale. "Premium, no after claim," said the advertisment. "This makes me deeply indignant," said Sir Norman. "In peacetime cases of baby farming were rare; now they amount almost to an industry."

Lady Caldecote, chairman of the National Children Adoption association and wife of the lord chief justice of England, declared: "There is nothing to prevent a woman hawking a baby around until she finds the highest bidder. An increasing number of women are adopting babies, some as a means of avoiding national service.

LOW PRESSURE AND LENGTH OF DAYS.

THE invention of the blood pressure machine may be regarded as both a blessing and a curse. It called our attention to the fact that some of us have readings which are quite too high [hypertension], while others present levels which are low [hypotension]. Thus many have become pressure conscious.

Now, the verdict that the "pound" within the arteries is too forceful or lackadaisical—as the case may be—can be rendered fairly only after a large number of checks. A single test may be 30 or 40 points out of line. For example: intense excitement may push the column of mercury figuratively beyond the horizon.

Those who register somewhere around 110 systolic, and 70 diastolic, are the most favored among men. From a quarter to a third of our citizens fall within this range. While they may not be as energetic as those whose totals are higher, they have a longer span of years to look forward to. As a rule, they represent the best in circulation. The heart is not overworked and the tissues are adequately nourished.

Many of these persons complain of lack of vitality. As some one has said, voicing the sentiment of this group, "Low pressure takes so much joy out of life that its victims would gladly change places with those who are existing more dangerously."

But there are compensations to be put into effect. Exercise is required if we would keep well. We cannot expect muscles or the nervous system to function unless something is demanded of them. There is no reason why those with low levels should not be as physically alert as the high pressure patients—that is, if they will work at the job. They can force themselves to become active and, in consequence, develop stalwart physiques with great capacity for hard labor.

Now and then, however, this condition may be associated with fainting. In young people, these attacks may occur almost without warning altho, when quizzed closely, the victim may admit that insufficient food has been eaten. This is similar in some respects to the dizziness which may appear when one rises from a prone to a sitting posture. In other words, the adjustment of the circulation to the brain is not quick enough. It takes the blood a few seconds too long to get to the balancing apparatus.

If a firm, snug binder is adjusted about the abdomen, this manifestation will vanish. Sometimes benzedrine is helpful. This drug may be prescribed for those who collapse easily.

No, there is nothing about hypotension which will interfere with vigorous health. But it may mean that the sufferer will need to push himself to the point where exertion will demand vital fluid which the body's pump will certainly supply.

While there is every reason to attempt to hold a mounting tension within reasonable limits, no one should assume that he is ill because his readings are not up to average. The only danger comes with the one who is likely to be a sitter—becoming more sedentary as the years advance.

BREATHLESSNESS.

Mrs. K. T. writes: I am approaching my seventh month of pregnancy and have trouble getting my breath. What can be done?

REPLY.

Mild exercise [walking] in the open air will be helpful. Make certain that the ventilation within the home is adequate. Ask your physician about an abdominal support.

HEART STRAIN.

E. P. writes: If the heart muscle is strained, what can be done to correct it?

REPLY.

There are few, if any, examples of heart strain which will not correct themselves within 24 hours. Dilatation [overstretching], however, is quite another matter and may require digitalis, prolonged bed rest, or both.

MIDNIGHT SNACKS.

Mrs. X. writes: Every time my husband opens the refrigerator he sneezes. What is the explanation?

REPLY.

This should teach him not to rob the ice box at night. He carries his own burglar alarm because his nasal passages are sensitive to cold.

HOW TO CREATE A SHORTAGE

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Writers should confine themselves to 200 or 300 words. Give full names and addresses. No manuscripts can be returned. Space for letters is obviously limited. Incoming mail far exceeds it. If a letter is not printed, attribute it to lack of room. Address letters to Voice of the People, The Tribune.

THE USE-LESS IDEA.

Plainfield, Ill., Nov. 15.—This program of rationing, and the use-less idea as a whole, is not the American way! It is the European way, and we are getting too much European procedure lately to suit us. The use-less theory is a New Deal carryover from the days of plowing under cotton and killing pigs.

The American way is to produce more, not to use less, which reduces our ability to work longer hours and endure fatigue. Of course, there are a few things we cannot produce, but not many, and for the few, we can produce substitutes.

But this can be done only if the administration is forced to quit persecuting the farmer—beating down the price of what he raises, in comparison with labor costs, making it difficult for him to get machinery parts, and denying him the right to build necessary tenant housing. Some of these wrongs would adjust themselves if food production were correctly classified as "war production," which it is not, as yet.

It is now reported that we face a butter shortage, and rationing. We need no ships to bring us butter! And every farmer in the midwest knows that we could step up butter production under the right conditions.

What we need is intelligent thought and fearless action on the part of congress—to put these un-American policies into the discard. GRACE S. HERON.

THIRD PARTY?

Columbus, Ind., Nov. 14.—The writers of this letter all are Republicans from a long line of Republican ancestry. We are readers of the CHICAGO TRIBUNE, and we approve its policies. We like the way you stood by Sen. Brooks, and the way you trounced Mr. McKeough. In fact, we like all your good works.

Now we have read the enclosed editorial from your Nov. 14 issue: Mr. Roosevelt and 1944. We think that not only will Mr. Roosevelt run again in 1944, but that the sad probabilities are that he will be reëlected.

How can this be done in the face of the failure of his war program, and of the failures of his administration generally? Well, he won't use the same methods that he did the last time. He won't use our money to buy the votes of his legion of shovel leaners, and his countless other alphabetical idlers, and all the parasites and leeches.

This time we think he will use Wendell Willkie. He already has been using Mr. Willkie as his tool, whether the latter is aware of it or not. So Roosevelt will maneuver Mr. Willkie into running on some kind of a third party ticket in order thus to split the Republican vote, and throw the election.

FOUR REPUBLICANS.

COUNTY SLOW DELIVERING BONDS.

Chicago, Nov. 14.—I am a county employé and buy one $25 bond every two weeks, and pay $18.75 cash. The county now owes me three bonds. I cannot get any results or even find out the reason for the delay. When I do receive a bond it is dated a month after the purchase. What are they doing with the money in the meantime?

HER BOY.

Chicago, Nov. 10.—Tho he is only 9 years old, to me he is one of Uncle Sam's fighting men. When the all-out order came for scrap iron and rubber, he was one of the first to do his duty. He only weighs 65 pounds, but he has carried iron and rubber three times his weight, not with a wagon, but by pulling and dragging. Rain or shine, every one can see Jimmie doing his duty every day.

He told me the other day that he cannot let a day go by without taking something to school, in order to help knock out the Japs on this side. Last Friday he was given a victory emblem made out of cardboard. If they had given him one of gold it could not have made him any happier. The principal of the school calls him their Gen. MacArthur, and does it thrill him! His room leads the entire school in the scrap drive. After almost a year of buying war stamps, he received his first war bond last week, and it made him very happy. He is 100 per cent an American boy.

Do you wonder why I call him My Boy? I am one of the happiest mothers to have such a dear son.

MRS. THERESA JONES.

SALESMEN AND WAR JOBS.

Chicago, Nov. 11.—Many people are asking what is going to happen to the salesmen. This is what happens.

Daily I have seen newspaper articles relative to the shortage of man power. What kind of man power? Within the last six months I have made 12 applications for war work, starting at Washington, D. C., and going on down to taking a training course at 45 cents an hour, and up to this time I have not even been granted an interview.

When my applications were received, stating that I had been a salesman drawing from $8,000 to $10,000 annually, that was all they wanted to know, whereas if they had taken the time to read further they would have found that it had been a part of my duty to answer any questions and solve all mechanical problems put to me by some of the most skilled mechanics in the country, also to make detailed drawings and layouts for mechanical and electrical equipment which I sold.

Many members of my association, who are very capable and willing, report similar experiences and have simply settled down to loaf for the duration.

EX-SALESMAN.

THERE'S A LIMIT.

Wheaton, Ill., Nov. 12.—When I was a small girl it was my mother's idea that if any of my playmates especially admired a toy of mine it was to become that child's property. It was her idea of teaching me to be unselfish.

But the story got around, and finally I had practically no playthings left. Then my father stepped in. He sent the juvenile grafters home and put a stop to the whole thing.

It seems to me that what this country needs is a father with a little common sense and his feet on the ground.

FRIEND OF THE PEOPLE

The volume of Legal Friend mail necessitates printed statements on common questions. No copies or records of the letters or answers are kept. Hence follow-up letters should be complete in themselves. If questions are based on some previously printed problems a clipping of the article should accompany. Most of the replies are mailed. Letters bearing no name and address are disregarded. A self-addressed envelope will expedite handling.

TAX SALE.

Chicago, Nov. 13 [Legal Friend of the People].—1. How long does it take for the county to sell property for back taxes? 2. How is it done? F. R.

1. There can be a tax sale immediately upon default but it would not be conclusive.
2. A tax sale can be held immediately upon the taxpayer's default. The bidder who offers to pay the taxes for the smallest penalty receives a certificate and if there is no redemption in two years he receives a tax deed. While in some other states, notably Wisconsin, a tax deed is a good title, in Illinois it is ordinarily merely a cloud on the title. The cloud is serious enough so that a real estate purchaser can be expected to insist that the title be cleared. A Torrens registration is often the simplest and cheapest procedure where court action proves necessary. Illinois Revised Statutes, chapter 120, section 411, says that where the grantee doesn't take possession, or fails to keep the taxes paid, he must accept a tender of his advances plus 7 per cent plus penalties and costs, and must reconvey. Nevertheless, the penalties mount rapidly and it is, in general, advisable to keep taxes paid.

If there is no bidding at the tax sale, the result is a "forfeiture." In either case, the owner can obtain an estimate for redemption from the county clerk.

NO OBLIGATION.

Chicago, Nov. 12 [Legal Friend of the People].—Will you kindly advise me [1] whether the wife of a soldier must room or support her mother-in-law or sister-in-law. The wife is employed, the mother-in-law is separated from her husband but not divorced, and the sister-in-law is of age and employed. J. D.

1. No.

TOO MUCH NOISE.

Chicago, Nov. 12.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—I rent an apartment. 1. The people on the floor above make so much noise that I cannot stand it. 2. If I move, can the landlord hold me to the lease? Y. T.

1. There is no express time limit in our statutes or ordinances but noises amounting to legal nuisances can be enjoined or if the facts amount to disorderly conduct can be stopped by the police. In determining whether a noise amounts to a nuisance the previous character of the neighborhood must be considered. 2. Yes.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

A BULGING HOUSE.

Chicago, Nov. 6.—[Friend of the People.]—The house next door is badly in need of repair. The foundation as well as the building itself is bulging toward our side. Because there are no gutters on the house, in the winter a sheet of ice forms in our gangway. Can the owner be compelled to take care of the matter? S. H.

The receiver of the premises complained of has been notified to repair and make safe the concrete foundation of the building, repair loose siding, and do all other work necessary to maintain building continuously in good and safe condition. If this work is not done at the expiration of time allotted in our notice, we will proceed according to law.

PAUL GERHARDT JR.,
Commissioner of Buildings.

ASKED FOR MORE TIME.

Chicago, Nov. 10. [Legal Friend of the People].—I loaned a sum of money for which I obtained a receipt. When the date came for payment, I was asked for more time. 1. Does this note hold good until it is paid or [2] must a new one be made out? L. V.

1. A receipt is not a note. It is not clear which you mean. The Illinois limitation period on a written contract is 10 years from the time that the money should have been paid. 2. No, in the sense that your only hold on them is to bring suit on the instrument that you have.

RICKENBACKER'S OWN STORY OF ORDEAL AT SEA

Certain I'd Be Saved, Says World War Ace.

thank God for your testament, son. You see now what faith can do for you."

So the interviewers asked the captain if he was a religious man.

"No, I'm not, not formally," he answered, "but I did have faith enough to hold me on this experience. I can truthfully say I never doubted for one moment that we'd be saved. I do have my own religion; I hold to the Golden Rule, and I believe most firmly that if a man just follows what he truly knows and feels in his heart then he can't go wrong and is possessed of religion enough to get by in any man's land."

Capt. Rickenbacker, while equally as loquacious [all the survivors chattered a lot, sometimes almost to the point of delirium], talked more of subjects other than his 24-day ordeal at sea than he did of his most recent escape from death.

Rickenbacker said he knew of the planned American landings in Africa because he knew his "dear friend, Jimmy Doolittle, was going to be in charge of the air supporting forces."

Ate Sea Gull Raw.

A medical corps man who cared for the survivors reported that one evening during the long wait for rescuers a sea gull alighted smack on Capt. Rickenbacker's head.

Rickenbacker corroborated the story, but he added, "I didn't eat much of the raw bird nor the raw fish we caught."

In this connection he said that it was his dislike of the taste of the raw meat and not fear of the food turning his stomach that made him abstain.

"All the others ate them when we could catch them and they did not get sick," he explained. "As a matter of fact there were no disturbed stomachs after the first two or three days and the reason is simple enough; no one had anything on his stomach."

Pilot Dislikes "Junior."

At this point Pilot Bill Cherry Jr., who asked several times that the "junior" be appended to his name in the news releases, interrupted to relate another of his many anecdotes which kept the sick boy entertained.

"Don't say no one had anything on his stomach, captain. You know I ate that fish eye," he announced.

The survivors laughed. Cherry elucidated.

"We were going to use this fish eye for bait when some one dropped overboard our last fishhook, so I ate the eye before the others thought of splitting it seven ways."

Capt. Rickenbacker again laughed heartily, and said of Cherry:

"He's a fine boy, and while we're linking him with the subject of fish I think you should know that Cherry ate fish so fast that they were still flopping when they hit his stomach."

Lieut. Thomason's story of his interview with Rickenbacker and the others, including Lieut. James C. Whitaker, Lieut. John J. de Angelis and Staff Sergt. James W. Reynolds, who were on a life raft 22 days before they reached a south Pacific island where they were discovered by a Kingfisher flying boat, follows:

"The army's iron man," Lieut. James C. Whitaker who was 41 on the date of this interview—Nov. 14, says he has something to tell the people who call the "States-Australia" ferry run a snap.

Finally Sight Land.

After 22 days at sea in a 4x7 foot life raft, Whitaker and his two companions sighted land early Wednesday morning [Nov. 11] and the lieutenant started to row for land. From 8 in the morning until 2 in the afternoon Whitaker rowed the cumbersome raft toward the shore. When the water of the island's barrier reef became too shallow for rowing Whitaker and Lieut. De Angelis picked up the bow of the raft with their companion in it and dragged it the 150 feet to shore despite the fact that they had had only half an orange apiece to eat in the 22 days.

Drag Raft Across Atoll.

"We got to shore all right," said Whitaker, "but we had landed on the windward side of the island and so we dragged the raft 150 yards across the atoll to the leeward side and rested there out of the wind." It was a relief to be under trees. The lieutenant found some coconuts which he and his companions managed to open. For the first time in 22 days the three had some sort of shelter The sheltering palms were a blessing.

"But then," Whitaker smiled ruefully, "damned if it didn't rain and we spent another cold night."

The next day Whitaker, strengthened by the coconuts, took the raft and rowed about half a mile down the beach to a deserted hut, but found nothing and came back. Friday morning found the three still in the brush wondering whether the island was in Japanese hands. That day a plane came over and dropped a note at the far end of the island telling, it turned out later, the natives to watch for the shipwrecked flyers. That afternoon Whitaker rowed his companions up to the deserted hut and it was then that he spied the first men they had seen on the island.

Natives were out searching for the lost fliers in canoes and the lieutenant saw them. Twenty-two days adrift in the South Pacific does not help ones eyes and at a distance the lieutenant at first thought the canoes were destroyers. On the chance that they were allied ships he rowed out toward them.

"That native in the first canoe sure looked like a Jap to me," he said. "I thought I'd get a blast of machine gun bullets next."

But the natives were friendly and that night Lieut. Woodward of Lieut. William F. Eadie's "Kingfisher" squadron flew help in the form of food and a doctor over to the survivors. Lieut. Eadie was assisted by Radioman Lester Soute.

In the radio compartment of a PBY which carried Whitaker back to a modern hospital on another base in the South Pacific, the lieutenant sat in the starboard gun blister taking it all in. There were two other PBYs in the formation with four of the survivors, Rickenbacker, De Angelis, Adamson, and Cherry, aboard.

"I'd better keep my eye on those other ships to see that they don't go down," Whitaker laughed from his seat in the blister. "We might have to throw 'em a raft." This 41 year old lieutenant who has been called "the army's iron man," is already on his feet and ready to go again when the doctors let him.

A carpenter's mate in the United States navy in the last war, Lieut. Whitaker left the navy in 1920 and joined the army air corps about a year ago. "I think I'll get in the marines for the next war," he now says. And the marines who defend the advance base where he was rescued figure they'll be proud to have him.

Knew He'd Come Back.

Most of the survivors in the Rickenbacker party are suffering badly from salt water sores but the lieutenant has only two on his feet. He's a little annoyed that any one should have given the party up as lost. "Why, everybody knows that Rickenbacker always comes back," he explained, "and I figured that my wife thought the same thing about me."

Whitaker has a brother and a son in the navy stationed, he thinks, at Pearl Harbor. The navy and marine corps have his vote today and he considers the report that PBY's picked him and his companions up as a blow to the officers and men of Lieut. Eadie's scouting squadron who fly Kingfishers: light, two seated inshore patrol planes.

"Those planes are seaplanes but they aren't meant to land on open sea," he remarked. "That chap [Lieut. Eadie] who picked up Eddie and the colonel [Adamson] and then taxied 40 miles back to the base over open sea: He had what it takes. And while we're talking about those boys, I want to tell you that Lieut. Woodward is another one to whom we owe our lives. Well, maybe not mine—our boat made land—but Cherry and Eddie and the rest owe theirs to him. He and his radioman sighted Cherry and he flew the doctor over to us. Yes, he has what it takes."

Taxis 40 Miles on Sea.

After he had been carried here by boat late Friday, the lieutenant came ashore under his own power, shook hands with Capt. Rickenbacker in the hospital here and said, "Hello, Eddie, hear you've been sick."

He was the only man for whom hospitalization was not absolutely necessary.

Lieut. Eadie showed his mettle Thursday evening. The scouting plane because of rain squalls had been unable to direct the surface craft to the raft containing Rickenbacker, Adamson and Bartek. It was feared that in the darkness the raft would be lost.

Eadie landed in the water by the raft, taxied up to it and proceeded to carry the survivors in to land in his plane, some 40 miles of taxiing over the open sea.

By superhuman effort he and his observer, Radioman Lester Soute, got Col. Adamson into the rear cockpit and lashed the other two, Rickenbacker and Bartek, onto the plane's wings. The load made it impossible for the light scout to get off the water and it was necessary to taxi.

After about an hour one of the surface craft made contact with the plane and the two survivors on the wing were taken off. Col. Adamson seemed to be in too bad shape to be transferred and the plane continued to taxi the remainder of the 40 miles to the island.

Casualties

Four men from the Chicago area—two marines, a bomber pilot, and a sailor—have been listed as lost in action, their families were notified yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. William S. Eldridge of 3907 Dakin street were notified yesterday that their son, Lieut. Don H. Eldridge, 23 years old, co-pilot of an American bomber based in England, had been reported missing while on duty. Mr. Eldridge, an engineer for the Comonwealth Edison company, said that his son was a graduate of Beloit college and Carl Schurz High school.

Reported killed in action in the southwest Pacific area was Corp. Arthur Altman of the United States marine corps, son of Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Altman, 219 Washington boulevard, Oak Park. Another son, Martin, is stationed at Camp Gordon, Georgia.

The second marine casualty reported was Pvt. First Class George Wilbert Bermes, whose parents are Mr. and Mrs. John G. Bermes of 2348 Wilson avenue. Several weeks ago they received a letter from their son, who was then with the fighting forces on Guadalcanal.

Pvt. Bermes, who was 22, had been in the marine corps for one year and was a graduate of St. George's High school in Evanston.

Paul Lieberman, 40, a seaman 1st class, was killed in action while on a ship near Africa, his sister, Mrs. Alfred Salnik, of 3734 Pine Grove avenue, was informed.

Lieberman, a graduate of Senn High school, was a nephew of Nathan Lieberman, 429 Roscoe street, who received the distinguished service cross in the last war.

Close Schools as Typhus Hits Ireland Coast Area

DUBLIN, Ireland, Nov. 21 (AP).—Thirteen cases of typhus, one fatal, have been reported in a coastal area of County Galway where all schools are closed in a 175 square mile area as a precautionary measure.

RACIAL DISPUTE SENDS GUARDS INTO SHIPYARD

Union Factions Wrangle Over Jobs for Negroes.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 21 (AP).—Sixty-four coast guardsmen patroled the Bethlehem-Fairfield shipyards today on orders of Com. C. H. Abel, captain of the port of Baltimore, because of a dispute between factions of the CIO Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America over union policies. The company builds Liberty ships and other vessels.

Lucien Koch, port director of the union, said the dispute was caused by the resentment of one union group to the employment of Negro workers.

"All available forces of labor must be used at the present time," Koch said.

Expulsion of Five Reported.

Sam Fox, publicity director of the union, said five men had been expelled from the union last week on charges including incitement to race hatred, especially toward Negroes and Jews. Fox said the men had friends who had been trying to provoke stoppages at the yards and that the union had condemned them and asked the company for their dismissal.

Commander Abel said the guardsmen were assigned when officials of the shipyards told him of the dispute and suggested it was "desirable for me to bring in coast guardsmen."

"Their assignment was purely a precautionary measure," he said. "The officers of the detail reported no disturbances. No doubt the reported difficulties, which we are told are definitely not between labor and management but purely between union factions, can be settled among the workers themselves in their own way. The number of men assigned to this detail undoubtedly will be reduced.

"Unpleasant Action" Feared.

"J. M. Willis, vice president and general manager of the shipyards, concurs with this statement."

Abel authorized publication of the following statement from Willis:

"Due to the possibility of unpleasant action taking place between different factions within the local union [local 43], it was thought advisable by Commander Abel to bring in coast guard reserves. Insofar as the trouble is within the union, every effort is being made by the union to have the differences ironed out at the headquarters of the union and outside the yard to make certain there is no disruption of operations."

Koch said national union leaders are expected to come to Baltimore to "iron out the matter," adding that the differences were not expected to be serious.

PREDICT CHICAGO TO TOP QUOTA IN BONDS FROM PAY

The drive to bring the weekly purchase of war bonds by the average Chicago worker to the 10 per cent mark finished its first week with encouraging results. At the first six meetings of industrial representatives who will have charge of the drive in their plants, the majority assured treasury representatives that they could better the 10 per cent quota.

The meetings of industrial representatives will be resumed tomorrow at 2 and 4 p. m. in the assembly hall of the Commonwealth Edison building, 72 West Adams street.

Mrs. Edward R. Fifield, chairman of the theater committee of the woman's division of war bond sales, announced that Chicago theaters have sold 11 million dollars in war savings stamps and bonds since May 31. More than 300 booths are maintained in theaters.

Another group, composed of 350 women employés of Swift and Company, have sold $147,000 worth of war bonds since June 1. They have pledged to triple their highest week's sales in the drive next week, which is to be known as Woman's National War Bond week.

COST OF WIRING MONEY TO, FROM SOLDIERS, IS CUT

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21 (AP).—The Federal Communications commission announced today that members of the armed forces within the United States, and persons sending money to them, would receive a 50 per cent reduction in telegraph money order rates for sums up to $25.

Rates to members of the expeditionary forces were reduced July 23 by amounts varying as to location.

The FCC said that telegraph companies now handle about 250,000 money orders each month to and from persons in military service.

The new rates provide a flat charge of 50 cents for orders of $10 or less and 65 cents for money orders up to $25. The reduced rates will not apply to orders for more than $25.

Mr. Autoist: Here's Where to Send Soldier's Suitcase

Pvt. First Class Ardell J. Dassow of Milwaukee, who hitchhiked here from California, missed his suitcase after arriving in Chicago yesterday. He had left it in the back seat of a car that dropped him off at the intersection of Higgins road and route 42A. Now Pvt. Dassow wants to thank the unknown driver for the lift, and to request him to forward the suitcase to him at 2306 North 66th street, Milwaukee.

Gov. Green Expected Back for Canvass of Election

Progress of the army aviation cadet recruiting campaign.

FATHER OF TEN JOINS ARMY ON DARE BY HIS WIFE

Family May Get $180 a Month Support.

Eugene Pinkerton, 151 Francisco avenue, the father of 10 children, was recruit of the day at Camp Grant yesterday, where the Associated Press reported him as joining the army "on a dare." The dare was by his wife, Alice, 35.

Pinkerton, 34, listed the 10 children for army authorities. They are: Darrell Loyd, 14, Charles Eugene, 12, Georgia May, 11, Richard Le Roy, 10, Robert Wayne, 9, Doris Jean, 6, Shirley Ann, 4, James Donald, 3, William Nicholas, 2, and Alice Fay, 9 months. Pinkerton, a construction worker, probably will receive $152 a month from the army, which allows extra pay for dependents.

Recruit 200 Mechanics.

Recruiting conducted for six days by the Chicago Automobile Trade association, 100 East Ohio street, ended yesterday when the goal of 200 mechanics needed to form the 559th heavy maintenance company which had been requested urgently by the army was reached.

"We got the men from the garages of Chicago altho they also were needed here to keep war workers cars in repair," said Edward G. Cleary, assistant manager in charge of recruiting.

At the army aviation cadet examining board in the United States courthouse postoffice building, 15 Boy Scouts yesterday came to the aid of the recruiting staff, which had fallen behind on its work. The staff had received the greatest number of air corps applications ever made in one week.

The scouts worked all day stapling papers together, folding and mailing forms, and the important task of "rubber-stamping." Another detail of scouts was used to place new posters in office buildings thruout the loop.

Sixty-four prospective cadets qualified yesterday at the examining board, bringing to 13,174 the total number of army air corps recruits that the board has secured in the Chicago area since the drive for 20,000 men started Sept. 1, 1941.

ARMY ENGINEER AREAS ALTERED EFFECTIVE DEC. 1

The war department announced yesterday a reorganization of army engineer districts which will give the Great Lakes division of the service, with headquarters in Chicago, jurisdiction of military construction in Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin.

The Great Lakes division formerly had charge of such work in parts of Minnesota, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and New York, as well, its area covering the Great Lakes watershed. The reorganization was ordered to make the engineer divisions coincide with the nine army service commands in the United States, the war department said, and becomes effective Dec. 1.

Col. L. D. Worsham, Great Lakes division engineer, said the new order covers only military construction.

NAVY INSPECTOR SCHOOL TURNS OUT 150 GRADS

The first class graduated from the navy department's new material inspection school here concluded its course yesterday and the members were ordered at once to duty under naval officers at war factories in the vicinity. The class included 150 men and women who will hold their jobs as civil service workers.

The school was established to furnish assistants who could do routine inspection on naval procurement. Thirty-eight of the graduates were from Chicago. Women graduates were urged to do an especially good job by Lieut. E. M. Savage, officer in charge of the course, because upon their success will depend an expansion of the training program for women. Other classes are already under way at the loop school.

FRENCH WAR VET GROUP PLEDGES FAITH IN F. D. R.

The Camarades de Combat de Chicago, French war veterans association of Illinois, disclosed yesterday they had telegraphed President Roosevelt a renewal of their pledge of confidence.

"The presence of the fighting forces of the United States of America on French territory and the indisputable coöperation of France with the valiant soldiers reaffirms the deeply rooted friendship existing between these two great nations," the telegram said.

"Every one in France and every one of French descent here in America is deeply grateful to you for the course you have pursued in North Africa and for your expression of friendship and loyalty to us."

R. R. HOSTLER DIES AT WORK.

Clem Mashake, 58 years old, 234 West 46th street, a hostler at the Chicago and Western Illinois railroads yards at 51st and Wallace streets, died at work yesterday. He had been employed at the yard 32 years.

SHOW POSTWAR HOME BUILDING POSSIBILITIES

Glenview Has Preview of New Heating Methods.

BY AL CHASE.
[Real Estate Editor.]

Postwar possibilities in heating, ventilating and other developments in home construction are being given an informal preview in Meadowbrook village, a new 20 acre residential development in Glenview sponsored by Howard M. Sloan, of the H. M. Sloan Realty company of that suburb. Twenty homes have been built and all but three are occupied.

[TRIBUNE Photo.]

In seven of these new residences visitors may see the world's newest [and oldest] systems of heating—solar and radiant, and in two of them the louvre system of ventilation, a new idea in keeping a house supplied with fresh air.

Has Two Types of Heating.

The residence of T. A. Tenhune, an official of National Coöperatives, Inc., at 500 Hunter road, Glenview, is the only one of the 20 homes which combines both solar and radiant heating and louvre ventilation. It was designed by George Fred Keck, Chicago architect, who used the possibilities in solar heat [warmth received from the sun's rays] during the erection of his "House of Tomorrow" at A Century of Progress world's fair in Chicago.

Sloan used solar heat for the first time in this area, and perhaps the entire country, in a home designed by Keck and built in 1940 at 825 Glenview road. Since then it has been used extensively thruout the country.

Floor Becomes a Big Radiator.

In the Tenhune house solar heat is supplemented with radiant heat which consists of warm air ducts every two feet embedded in concrete beneath the floor. This concrete floor becomes a huge radiator from which the heat radiates, warming the walls and ceilings to approximately the same temperature as the floor.

"This system of heating, while new to present day type of construction—there being only some 400 installations in the United States—isn't new at all," said Sloan. "In fact, it's probably the oldest known method of heating a whole house at once. The Romans used it to warm their villas and the Chinese and Japanese have used it for some four thousand years. In modern times radiant heating has been in use in England and some parts of continental Europe for about 30 years.

Advantages Are Listed.

"Some of the advantages of this type of heat are the absence of cool air currents across the floor, absence of dust and dirt on the walls and ceiling, absence of radiators and air ducts, giving greater freedom in placing furniture; more perfect type of heat for children and babies playing on the floor, and a remarkable saving in fuel costs."

Solar heat, which is used as an auxiliary in the Tenhune home during cold, sunny days, helps reduce winter fuel bills. The house is oriented so that most of the windows catch the sun's rays during the cold months, and the prevailing southwest winds during the summer.

New Method of Ventilation.

Another feature incorporated by Sloan when he built the Tenhune residence is the new method of ventilation. The glass in the windows is fixed and tightly sealed, the air coming into the house thru louvres below the windows.

"This type of ventilation allows one to have complete ventilation without the worry of rain coming into the room, also to have the shades drawn and still have a perfect circulation of air," explained Sloan.

"These louvres are well screened, and therefore the view thru the windows above is never marred by screens in summer. The air that comes into the house on a hot summer's evening is the cool air off the grass, as the air close to the ground always is cooler than that higher up."

Use Double Panes.

Some of the windows have two panes with a dehydrated dead air space between, forming a partial vacuum, thus doing away with the use of storm windows in winter. This double pane also keeps out the heat in summer.

In one of the homes in Meadowbrook village, recently completed, large sheets of 4 by 8 foot waterproof plywood, such as is being used in airplanes and boats, was used on the exterior.

"After the war we're going to find a large percentage of homes employing such plywood because of the economy of construction," said Sloan, "and also because this plywood, being glued together with plastics, is absolutely windproof, waterproof, and makes for a much stronger construction."

All of the homes in Meadowbrook village have gas fired heating units.

BUYS STORAGE SPACE.

Chicago Flexible Shaft company bought the one and two story building at the northwest corner of Christiana and Gladys avenues, containing 25,000 square feet, from the National Ice and Fuel corporation for $40,000. It will be used for storage.

At the Realty Boards

John Schrik of John Schrik, Inc., 5200 West Chicago avenue, has been nominated to succeed Laurence J. Laurion as president of the west side real estate board. He heads the only ticket in the field and unless an opposition slate appears tomorrow, he will be elected. He is now treasurer of the board. Other nominees are: David Horwich of David Horwich & Co., first vice president; Nick Forte of Nick Forte & Brothers, second vice president; Max Adamowski, Paragon Realty & Mortgage Company, Inc., secretary; James E. RATIONING HALTS SALE OF COFFEE TODAY FOR WEEK inch Grows on Butter, Meat, Fuel Oil, Gas.

Wartime rationing halted all sales of coffee at 12:01 a. m. today and the web of federal restrictions closed tighter on four other items—butter, meat, fuel oil, and gasoline—important factors in the diet, comfort, and transportation of the nation.

As coffee joined sugar today on the list of restricted goods, rationing officials here and in Washington gave this summary:

COFFEE—All sales halted from 12:01 a. m. today until 12:01 a. m. Nov. 29 to permit grocers to stock their shelves, after which sugar book coupon No. 27 will be good for one pound of coffee until Jan. 3, a ration of one pound for five weeks per individual over 15 years of age, or about one cup a day. John C. Weigel, regional OPA administrator, declared that "selfishness" of hoarders "has deprived many families of their just share of available coffee."

Some Limit Butter Sale.

BUTTER—The War Production board's order freezing 40 per cent of the butter supplies in cold storage warehouses had little immediate effect on consumers, altho the trade generally believed shortages may ensue. Purchases are limited in some Chicago stores.

FUEL OIL—Users of fuel oil will be able to purchase oil for another week without their ration books, OPA Director Michael F. Mulcahy said. The purchase of oil by signing "promissory" notes with dealers to be redeemed for ration coupons when the purchaser gets his ration book was due to expire tomorrow, but the extension was granted without explanation. It was believed that delay in processing fuel oil applications in parts of the middle west caused the postponement.

Meat Ration Due Jan. 15.

MEAT—"Both butter and meat are in pretty bad shape," an OPA spokesman in Washington said yesterday. Meat is expected to be rationed Jan. 15 when the new "universal ration books are due to be issued. Hoarding of meat and butter is not expected to be a factor because these products do not keep well in ordinary civilian facilities.

GASOLINE—Officials proceeded with plans to ration gasoline thruout the nation Dec. 1 as a tire conservation measure, despite increasing clamor in congress against the program. The value of the basic "A" gasoline ration in 16 east coast states was cut from four to three gallons yesterday, taking most of the "family" driving out of the gasoline tank.

Share-the-Coffee Plan.

Weigel, who said that "hoarders" have been responsible for a depletion of coffee stocks, called for a "share the coffee" plan this week among the "haves" and "have-nots."

"In many instances," Weigel said, "families will be without coffee during the freeze period, while others, the hoarders, will have more than their share."

Suggesting that those having coffee surpluses share it with less fortunate neighbors, he reminded the public that when they register for war ration book No. 2, they will have to declare the number of pounds of coffee in their possession as of midnight Nov. 28.

Coffee buyers rushed to stores yesterday, and grocers lucky enough to have stocks were kept busy from early morning until their stocks became depleted.

Ban Cup of Coffee Order.

After this week, consumers should buy coffee only as needed and there will be plenty to fill their rationed needs, Weigel said. Many Chicago restaurants already have eliminated the "cup'a coffee" order, requiring purchasers to buy food, and all of them probably will follow in the near future, D. F. Kiesau, executive secretary of the Chicago Restaurant association, predicted.

Large Chicago warehouses handling butter reported they were halting all deliveries until the full text of the WLB order arrives by mail. The freezing order applies to 40 per cent of all butter in warehouses in 35 principal storage centers, including Chicago, either on Nov. 6 or as "of Friday."

Butter Lags Behind Demand.

Altho butter production this year has been at a rate well above average, vast demands for the armed forces and lend-lease, with increased consumption despite higher prices, have cut down reserves. While the butter freeze does not necessarily mean butter rationing is in the offing, OPA officials said it permits increased government buying.

Persons who already have received fuel oil ration books, are using them, Mulcahy said, and do not have to resort to the "promissory" note method which is only a stop gap until books are in their hands. The dealer tears out the proper number of coupons for oil purchased since the inception of the ration period in canceling the "promissory" notes.

It was said a proposal for rationing butter and cheese, and in some larger cities, fluid milk, drawn by Secretary of Agriculture Wickard, is now before the food requirements committee of WPB in Washington. Months ago, housewives were urged to buy more cheese, but decreased production and increased lend-lease shipments have changed the picture, Washington sources said.

TROLLEY AND TRUCK COLLIDE.

Passengers on a Milwaukee avenue street car were shaken yesterday when the car collided with a truck in front of 516 Milwaukee avenue. A. C. Christman, 6444 Yale avenue, the truck driver, was cut slightly.

JEFFERS DENIES INTENT TO SLUR CONGRESS BLOC

Holds Attack Aimed at Private Group.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21.—William M. Jeffers, rubber administrator, assured a group of congressmen today that he meant no reflection on them when he protested that opposition to nationwide gasoline rationing was being financed "by people who should know better." Jeffers at the same time gave no assurance that he would delay the program beyond Dec. 1 for further study.

Rep. Lyle H. Boren.

The official was quoted as saying his charge was aimed not at congressmen, but at a private organization which was circulating cards attacking rationing.

La Guardia Fights Delay.

Meanwhile in New York, Mayor Fiorello La Guardia said he had asked the nation's mayors, particularly those in the east, to protest to Washington against any delay in rationing. La Guardia, president of the United States conference of mayors, explained:

"This is just in keeping with the action taken recently at the conference of mayors of the eastern states seeking to protect the health and safety of our section and with our willingness to share the burden of war equally with the rest of the country."

The mayors called on June 26 for rationing in the middle west, and La Guardia appeared before the house banking committee on that date, advocating the change as a way of allowing the shipment of more oil east.

Speech Creates Wrath.

Jeffers was called before the committee today after members of the antirationing bloc angrily protested his speech in New York yesterday assailing opposition to rationing. Jeffers declared then:

"The opposition is organized and is supported by funds furnished by people who should know better. It is strong because there is no shortage of gasoline in the west, and the public still doesn't understand that the purpose of the rationing is to save the rubber on their tires."

For two hours today Jeffers was closeted in executive session with the committee. Upon emerging he was asked by newsmen:

"Did you succeed in pouring oil on the troubled waters?"

"There was no need for pouring oil," he replied. "Our relations were amiable."

Find Him "Courteous."

Rep. Jed Johnson [D., Okla.], in whose office the session was held, agreed that Jeffers was "courteous and gave us a lot of information."

Johnson reported that Jeffers "has assured us that he meant no possible reflection on members of congress" and said that committee members were satisfied with the explanation. He quoted the administrator as saying that he was referring "to some organization" which had postcards printed protesting the nation-wide order.

Johnson said that Jeffers had expressed willingness to coöperate with the committee in its gasoline study, "but we got no assurance out of him that he would agree to a postponement of gasoline rationing."

The committee called in representatives of the Office of Defense Transportation, the Petroleum institute, and other groups. Chairman Clinton Anderson [D., N. M.] said that the group was attempting to build a factual case against the order.

Hint Plea to White House.

"For presentation at the White House or for a basis for possible future legislation?" he was asked.

"Both," Anderson replied.

Jeffers was called in after Rep. Lyle H. Boren [D., Okla.], said in a telegram to Jeffers that "If you meant to assert that any member of congress opposing nationwide gasoline was receiving a financial consideration in support of that opposition, then I must brand the insinuation for what it is—completely false and without foundation."

Likelihood that the bloc would appeal to the White House for a delay increased even as the chance that congress would pass the delay legislation diminished.

First Built on Lakes

Manitowoc, Wis., Nov. 21 (AP).—The submarine Peto, ready for immediate war duty, was accepted formally by the United States navy today.

The first modern undersea craft built on the Great Lakes, her commissioning was a triumph not only of the Manitowoc Shipbuilding company workers—many of whom never have seen salt water—but also of thousands of other Wisconsin factory hands whose work went into her machinery, controls, and instruments.

The Peto was accepted by Commander R. F. Hans.

The ceremony was simple. The crew was assembled on deck. Commander Hans read his orders and then handed a receipt for the vessel to John E. Thiell, vice president and secretary of the company.

Lieut. Commander W. T. Nelson then took over as skipper. As the company's band played the national anthem, the colors were hoisted to the mast, followed by the pennant of Rear Adm. Frederick Daubin, commander of the Atlantic fleet's submarine division.

The Peto, launched here April 30, will be taken to tidewater by way of Chicago and the Illinois and Mississippi rivers.

Acceptance of the Peto accomplished, attention here turned to ceremonies scheduled tomorrow when a sister submarine, the Puffer, will be launched.

The ship will be sponsored by Mrs. Ruth R. Lyons of Ottawa, Ill., granddaughter of Christ Jacobson Sr., 81 years old, oldest employé of the shipyards.

ORLANDO WINS VOTE FRAUD STAY FOR U. S. APPEAL

Sam Orlando, Democratic precinct captain sentenced to 1 to 10 years in prison for vote frauds in the 1939 judicial election, was granted a 60 day stay of mandate yesterday by the Illinois Supreme court.

The court's action will permit Orlando to remain at liberty pending an appeal to the United States Supreme court. The state Supreme court previously upheld his conviction and refused to grant him a rehearing.

Orlando was convicted by a Criminal court jury May 23, 1941. During the trial state witnesses testified that Orlando had forged signatures on voters' application blanks in his precinct, the 52d of the 11th ward.

He was previously tried and acquitted of election stealing in December, 1939, and again tried and acquitted on charges of bribing the jury.

FOUR U.S. EXPERTS TO MAKE RUBBER STUDY IN RUSSIA

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21 (AP).—Four American rubber and chemical experts were reported today ready to leave shortly for Russia to study synthetic rubber processes.

William M. Jeffers, rubber director, arranged the mission in line with the Baruch committee report criticizing Washington's failure to ask Russian aid in setting up this country's synthetic program, said an official who cannot be quoted by name.

The mission will be headed by E. C. Pittman, president of the Inter-Chemical company and formerly a consultant in the office of Arthur B. Newhall, WPB rubber coördinator. Other members of the group were not named.

MORE DICTATOR POWERS VOTED FOR ROOSEVELT

Junking Immigration Law O. K.'d by House Group.

BY WILLIAM STRAND.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21—A house subcommittee today finished rewriting legislation, requested by the administration, adding new grants of power to President Roosevelt's wartime control over the economic life of the nation. The revised version of the bill places a definite time limit on the life of the powers and imposes other restrictions not contained in the original measure submitted by the White House.

Rep. R. Doughton.

However the changes were not as drastic as had been forecast and doubt was immediately expressed in many quarters that the legislation could pass both the house and senate before the present lame duck congress expires six weeks hence. This would mean a resubmittal of the bill to the 78th congress in which the Republicans and conservative Democrats are expected to be in control of the house.

First Revolt Since Election.

Refusal to accept the White House bill, which Rep. Robert L. Doughton [D., N. C.] said he introduced "by request," marked the first revolt in congress after the administration defeats in the election. Within 24 hours the action was followed by an uprising of more than 100 congressmen who gathered in the house office building to protest bitterly over the plan for national gasoline rationing.

There many Democrats and erstwhile New Dealers openly expressed their regret at having surrendered their authority to the executive branch. Repeal of some of the powers already granted was urged and a resolution was adopted calling for legislation to force a postponement of the rationing. With the house members assailing the use being made of existing war powers, there is little hope they will want to grant new ones.

Could Junk Immigration Law.

Under the measure, Mr. Roosevelt would have the unprecedented power to disregard tariff and immigration laws and regulations governing the transmission of information to and from the United States. The purpose of the bill, according to White House spokesmen, is to speed up the movement of raw materials, technical information and persons necessary in the war effort at home and abroad.

As rewritten by the subcommittee, the authority conveyed in the bill will expire automatically Dec. 31, 1943, or the day after the President proclaims the end of the war, whichever is sooner.

Tax on War Prisoners.

Rep. Jere Cooper [D., Tenn.], chairman of the subcommittee, who announced the drafting of the new legislation, revealed that the question of increasing Mr. Roosevelt's powers originated in the war department. Army officials complained, it was said, that officers carrying confidential documents were being required to show them at customs posts; that the government was being required to pay the regular tax on prisoners of war brought into the country; that duties being imposed on imported raw materials were adding to the cost of government contracts, and that the departments were experiencing difficulty in clearing with the immigration authorities' technical experts and represertatives of American allies.

[Regarding the tax on war prisoners, it was explained that there is a head tax of $8 for each alien entering the country, and under law war prisoners are classed as aliens. The tax is paid by the army and collected by the justice department. According to testimony, the departments involved want to save the man power and time consumed in filling out forms and carrying thru the procedure.]

Members of the ways and means committee, who heard seven ranking department officials testify in favor of the bill, said that some legislation appeared necessary. Administration opponents, however, insist that the President already possesses sufficient authority to meet the situation.

INHALATOR SQUAD TRIES IN VAIN TO SAVE AUTO VICTIM

Works 7 Hours in Effort to Revive Woman.

Efforts of inhalator squad 7 failed to save the life of Celesta Franco, 34 years old, 4528 Van Buren street, after she was run down yesterday by an automobile at Jackson boulevard and Kostner avenue. The driver was John Simpson, 16, of 310 South Kilbourn avenue.

Miss Franco was taken to the Garfield Park hospital where, it was found, paralysis had developed from her injuries. Squad 7, under Lieut. Charles Bratt, was called. For more than seven hours they administered oxygen, using 12 tanks of oxygen, and were still standing by when she died.

Couple Struck by Car.

Mrs. Catherine Miller, 55, of 1420 Adams street, was killed, and her husband, Charles, 68, was injured severely when they were struck by an automobile at Jackson boulevard and Loomis street. Miller was taken to County hospital. The driver was Stanley Ferdinardo, 22, of 902 Arthington street.

John Urdal, 18, a seaman 2d class, of Rogers City, Mich., attached to a training school at 2106 East 87th street, died in the Jackson Park hospital of injuries received Thursday when he was struck by an automobile at 87th street and South Shore drive. The driver, Russell Shephard, 66, of 6401 University avenue, was not held.

Three students at the University of Chicago were injured when their car struck the center girder on the bridge in Clark street, over the railroad tracks and north of the river.

Returning from Dance.

They were returning from an interfraternity dance in the Drake hotel. Those hurt were Susanne Adams, 21, of 2237 Beachwood avenue, Wilmette; Robert Bean, 21, of 5639 University avenue, and Robert Meyer, 21, of 4821 25th street, Cicero, the driver. They were taken to the Wesley hospital.

Up to 2 p. m. yesterday, 606 persons had been killed by automobiles in Cook county since Jan. 1. Of these, 459 died in Chicago where 17,714 were injured during the same period.

HERTZOG, SOUTH AFRICA WARRIOR AND LEADER, DIES

CAPETOWN, South Africa, Nov. 21 (AP).—Gen. J. B. M. Hertzog, 76 years old, who lost his post as prime minister of the Union of South Africa after the outbreak of war in 1939, when parliament voted down his proposal for strict neutrality, died today. He had entered a hospital here two months ago for an abdominal operation.

Gen. Hertzog.

Hertzog had served his country as prime minister for 16 years when war came. Instead of following Great Britain immediately in breaking relations with Germany, Hertzog proposed that relations with belligerent countries "persist unchanged."

Parliament, however, voted to sever relations with Germany and Field Marshal Jan Christiaan Smuts was named to form a new cabinet.

Later Hertzog resigned as a member of parliament and espoused a National Socialist "new order." At various times he proposed that South Africa's state of war with Germany be ended.

Born April 3, 1866, at Wellington, Cape Colony, he started his career as a lawyer and was a judge when the Boer war began.

JOHN EGAN, 66, ASSEMBLYMAN, DIES SUDDENLY

Manitowoc, Wis., Nov. 21 [Special]. —Assemblyman John Egan, 66 years old, of the 1st district, died at his home here today following a heart attack which he suffered early in the morning. Until today he had not felt ill and during the week attended to his usual business affairs.

He was elected assemblyman on the Republican ticket two years ago and was to have served until the end of the year. In the Nov. 3 election he was defeated by Otto Vogel, Progressive.

Mr. Egan was a former state game warden, and his dismissal two years ago on half pay, against his wishes, caused much resentment among sportsmen's groups. The state board of personnel ruled his dismissal was unwarranted and recommended his reinstatement but the conservation commission rejected the recommendation.

He is survived by his widow, two daughters, Frances and Mrs. Lowell Watson, Manitowoc, and a son.

AUTHOR OF WAR DECLARATION ON SERBIA IS DEAD

LONDON, Nov. 21 (AP).—The death last night of Count Leopold Berchtold, foreign minister in the old Austro-Hungarian empire, at his castle near Sopron, was reported today in a DNB [news agency] broadcast from Berlin.

Berchtold was Austro-Hungarian foreign minister at the time of the empire's declaration of war on Serbia, which touched off the spark that set the World war raging. He conducted the complicated negotiations which preceded the declaration, and continued in office until Jan. 13, 1915, when, following a political dispute, he resigned and enlisted in the Austrian army as a volunteer. He became foreign minister in 1912 following a term as ambassador to Russia.

STATE CHARGES MRS. PAYNE HAD MURDER WEAPON

Claims New Evidence to Foil Insanity Plea.

Bloomington, Ind., Nov. 21 (AP).—Presentation of opening statements by state and defense attorneys today paved the way for introduction of evidence when the second murder trial of Mrs. Caroline G. Payne is resumed in Circuit court Monday.

The 45 year old woman, a former executive of a Bloomington newspaper, is charged with killing Charles O. Mattingly, 41, Indianapolis lawyer, in July, 1941. Mattingly was killed by shots fired thru a kitchen window of a home where he and his wife were visiting. The state has advanced jealousy as a motive for the slaying.

State Charges Plot.

The opening statement for the state was made by Prosecutor Sylvan Tackitt and for the defense by G. Austin East.

Tackitt told the all male jury the state would show that Mrs. Payne had plotted for a year and a half to kill Mattingly because of his marriage to another woman. He added that it would be shown that Mrs. Payne "knew what she was doing." Mrs. Payne has pleaded insanity and a lapse of memory at the time of the shooting.

Witnesses would testify, Tackitt said, that the gun with which Mattingly was killed was found in Mrs. Payne's possession 15 minutes after the shooting.

Claims New Evidence.

They would also testify, Tackitt said, that Mrs. Payne had been seen in the vicinity of the shooting a short time before and a short time after Mattingly was killed.

East asserted the defense would show that Mrs. Payne "did not shoot and kill Mattingly" and that commission of the crime by her was an impossibility.

East said it would be developed that after Mrs. Payne saw Mattingly and his wife motor past her house a few hours before the shooting she "lost consciousness" and was unaware of anything that happened until she revived in the police station after her arrest the same night.

MEDICINE FIGHTS GLOBAL WAR TOO, PHYSICIANS TOLD

Military Leaders Address American College.

Global war is taking "foreign" diseases out of medical textbooks and putting them into the practice of American physicians, several speakers agreed yesterday at the regional meeting of the American College of Physicians in the Drake hotel.

Tropical ailments, including black water fever, dysentery, dengue—and in Africa malaria "more than all of these"—are challenging the skill of our physicians, Capt. Robert E. Duncan of the navy medical corps declared.

"As the result of global war we must be prepared for global medicine," said Brig. Gen. David N. W. Grant, air surgeon of the army air force. "Many of our army air force physicians are now practicing in remote sections over the seas. We are accumulating data on medical problems from every section of the globe."

Develop Special Techniques.

Special techniques have been and are being developed to combat the physiological disturbances induced when man's body is subjected to the speed, high altitude, and rapid changes in altitude and temperature involved in wartime aviation, Gen. Grant said. But flyers also are up against mental hazards as a result of the fact that they face the possibility of sudden death almost daily from the time training begins, he said.

"Facing death in the heat of battle is far different, psychologically, from enduring the fear of it during many months of training," he said. "This is one reason why flight surgeons must live, eat, play, and fly with the crew to fulfill properly their rôle as physician, father-confessor, and friend."

Gen. Grant described a new method of speeding recovery of hospitalized men in service. It is offering them elective courses in subjects that will hold their interest, including mathematics, radio, plane identification, army regulations, and military courtesies.

Helps to Improve Morale.

"This hospital training, altho still in its infancy, is playing a large part in the improvement of morale and the return of better-equipped men to duty," he declared. "It has been enthusiastically received by both the patients and the physicians."

To counteract the shortage of physicians, officer candidate schools now are graduating 1,000 medical administration corps officers a month, who will release as many M. D.'s to serve the sick and wounded, according to Brig. Gen. Charles C. Hillman, chief of the professional service division, who represented the army surgeon general at the meeting.

The number of physicians for each thousand beds has been cut in recent months, but still greater reductions are being studied, he said, asking that no figures be published.

Civilian Needs Recognized.

The army's efforts to use physicians as sparingly as possible indicate the surgeon general's recognition of civilian medical needs, he said.

Civilian deaths from heart disease will increase during the war, it was indicated by Dr. Paul D. White, of the Massachusetts General hospital, a widely known specialist.

Persons of mature years are being called upon for more intense activity than when they were young, in many cases, Dr. White said. For many this will mean death, he said.

"They will be unsung heroes of this war," Dr. White declared.

LEAPS OR FALLS TO DEATH FROM LOOP BUILDING

A man about 55 years old leaped or fell to his death yesterday from the top floor of the Republic building, 209 South State street. His body fell 19 stories to the roof of a loading platform at the rear.

The only clew to his identity was a dark fedora hat purchased from a loop department store and initialed "G. G." The man was gray haired and partly bald. He was about 5 feet 10 inches tall and weighed about 200 pounds.

A. F. Zelms, building superintendent, told police he had seen the man looking out of a 19th floor window, which later was found open. Building employés said they had observed him earlier looking from a window on the 14th floor.

Missing McKee Child

[Associated Press Wirephoto.]

Mrs. Evelyn McKee and her son, Terry.

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 21 [Special].—Mark T. McKee, white haired steamship executive, today issued a public appeal to his daughter, Cynthia, 20 years old, asking her to surrender his 2 year old son, Terry, whose custody he was awarded yesterday.

Cynthia and Terry disappeared last night from the home of McKee's blonde wife, Evelyn, a short time before McKee and court officers went there to take possession of Terry. Earlier in the day McKee had been granted a divorce from Evelyn following a bitterly contested trial in which both sides made charges of extra-maritial intimacies. The custody order gave Terry to the father 9 months of the year and to Mrs. McKee in the summer.

Search for Cynthia was extended to all of California by an amended court order today, while McKee, explaining he is concerned not only for the baby but for Cynthia's future happiness, assured her in his public appeal of "a wholehearted welcome from all of us." Cynthia is one of McKee's 11 children by a previous marriage. She sided with her stepmother against her father during the trial.

SON, 17, ADMITS HACKING MOTHER OF 9 TO PIECES

Stabs Her When Asked to Help Work.

York, Pa., Nov. 21 (AP).—William Jackson Jr., 17 years old, was charged tonight with the murder of his mother, Mrs. Mary Ellen Jackson, 41 year old mother of nine children, District Attorney W. Burg Anstine announced.

Mrs. Jackson's body, the head, arms and legs severed with an ax, was found early today near her home in Warrington township, 15 miles north of here.

Anstine said the boy admitted he killed his mother and dismembered her body following an argument yesterday morning.

Slaying Described.

Anstine told this version of the tragedy:

Yesterday morning the father, William Jackson Sr., 55, left for work and five of the nine children went to school. The oldest son, Vincent, 22, left to visit a neighbor, leaving William and two other children, aged 3 and 4, with the mother.

Mrs. Jackson, hulling walnuts in the back yard, asked William to help her with the family washing. He smoked a cigaret, and then returned with a butcher knife in his belt.

Coming up behind her, he pushed her to the ground and, when she cried for help, stabbed her repeatedly in the abdomen and back. She died as a result of these wounds, Anstine said.

Sets Fire to Body.

The boy then dragged his mother's body about 10 feet away, brought gasoline from the house and set fire to the body. In doing this he suffered chest burns and also burned his shirt, which he hid in a nearby field.

Anstine said the boy then dragged the body 20 feet further and cut off the head, arms and legs with an ax. He covered them with burlap bag and hid them behind a stump.

William tied a rope to the torso, dragged it to a summer house adjoining the farmhouse and hid it, together with the woman's burned clothing and the knife beside a fireplace.

This morning a brother, George, 15, saw blood stains and followed them into the summer house, where he found the torso. He and his father then found the rest of the body in the field. Police, making an investigation, apprehended William on the road between York and his home.

William is being held in the county jail. The children will be cared for temporarily by an aunt.

PROGRAM COMING IN FINE, BUT NOT TO YANKS ABROAD

Poor Timing, Lack of Sets Foil Star Broadcasts.

New York, Nov. 21 [Special].—American service men stationed in Britain are not hearing the elaborate star studded radio programs short waved to them from the studios in the United States. They're not hearing them for two reasons:

1. Most of their camps lack facilities for short wave reception.

2. Most of the programs are transmitted at hours when the majority of our men are drilling or engaged in other military activities.

Findings Confirmed.

So, altho many ace air personalities devote their time and efforts to such free entertainment, only a few of these for whom it is intended benefit thereby.

This startling fact was revealed by Norman Corwin, CBS writer and director, who has just returned from England, where he staged a series for the BBC. His findings confirmed those of John F. Royal, NBC vice president, recently returned from England.

Nazis Jam Broadcasts.

Corwin also made known that many of the American short wave propaganda broadcasts to the occupied countries of Europe are persistently jammed by German radio transmitters. This makes it necessary for the BBC to record programs from the United States and retransmit them on their own wave lengths.

Because of bombing, the BBC has achieved a wide dispersal of its studio facilities. There are studios in basements, department stores, and cellars in widely scattered sections of London.

GENERAL TO BUY FIRST CHRISTMAS SEAL FOR WAR ON TUBERCULOSIS

First 1942 Christmas seal to go on sale in Cook county will be purchased by Maj. Gen. Henry S. Aurand, commanding general of the 6th corps area service command, from Homer J. Buckley, president of the Tuberculosis Institute of Chicago and Cook county, sponsor of the local drive. The ceremony will take place in Gen. Aurand's office in the Chicago postoffice at 9:30 a. m. tomorrow, the opening day of the Christmas seal sale.

Proceeds of the sale in the Chicago area will be used to maintain the year-round educational, preventive and clinical work of the institute to keep tuberculosis at a minimum, Buckley announced.

"With the nation at war, it is most appropriate that Gen. Aurand open the campaign here by purchasing the first seal, since tuberculosis strikes hardest when a nation is engaged in conflict," Buckley said.

Designer of the 1942 seal is Dale Nichols of Glenview, whose seal design was chosen from those submitted by artists thruout the country.

MARINE AVIATOR IS FORCED DOWN IN LAKE; RESCUED

Lieut. Arthur T. Wood, United States marine corps reserve pilot, was rescued by the crew of a plane guard vessel after his plane was forced down into the lake about five miles off Evanston yesterday. Wood, who is stationed at the naval reserve air base at Glenview, was kept afloat by his life jacket. His plane which sank almost immediately, will be salvaged, authorities said. Four coast guard crews were dispatched to the area when a woman who witnessed the crash called police.

Help the Kidneys remove excess acids which may become poisoning and irritating. 2. To palliate burning and smarting of the urinary passages, and bladder irritation. 3. Help the Kidneys flush out wastes which may become poisonous if allowed to accumulate, thus aiding nature in stimulating an increase of energy, which may easily make you feel years younger.

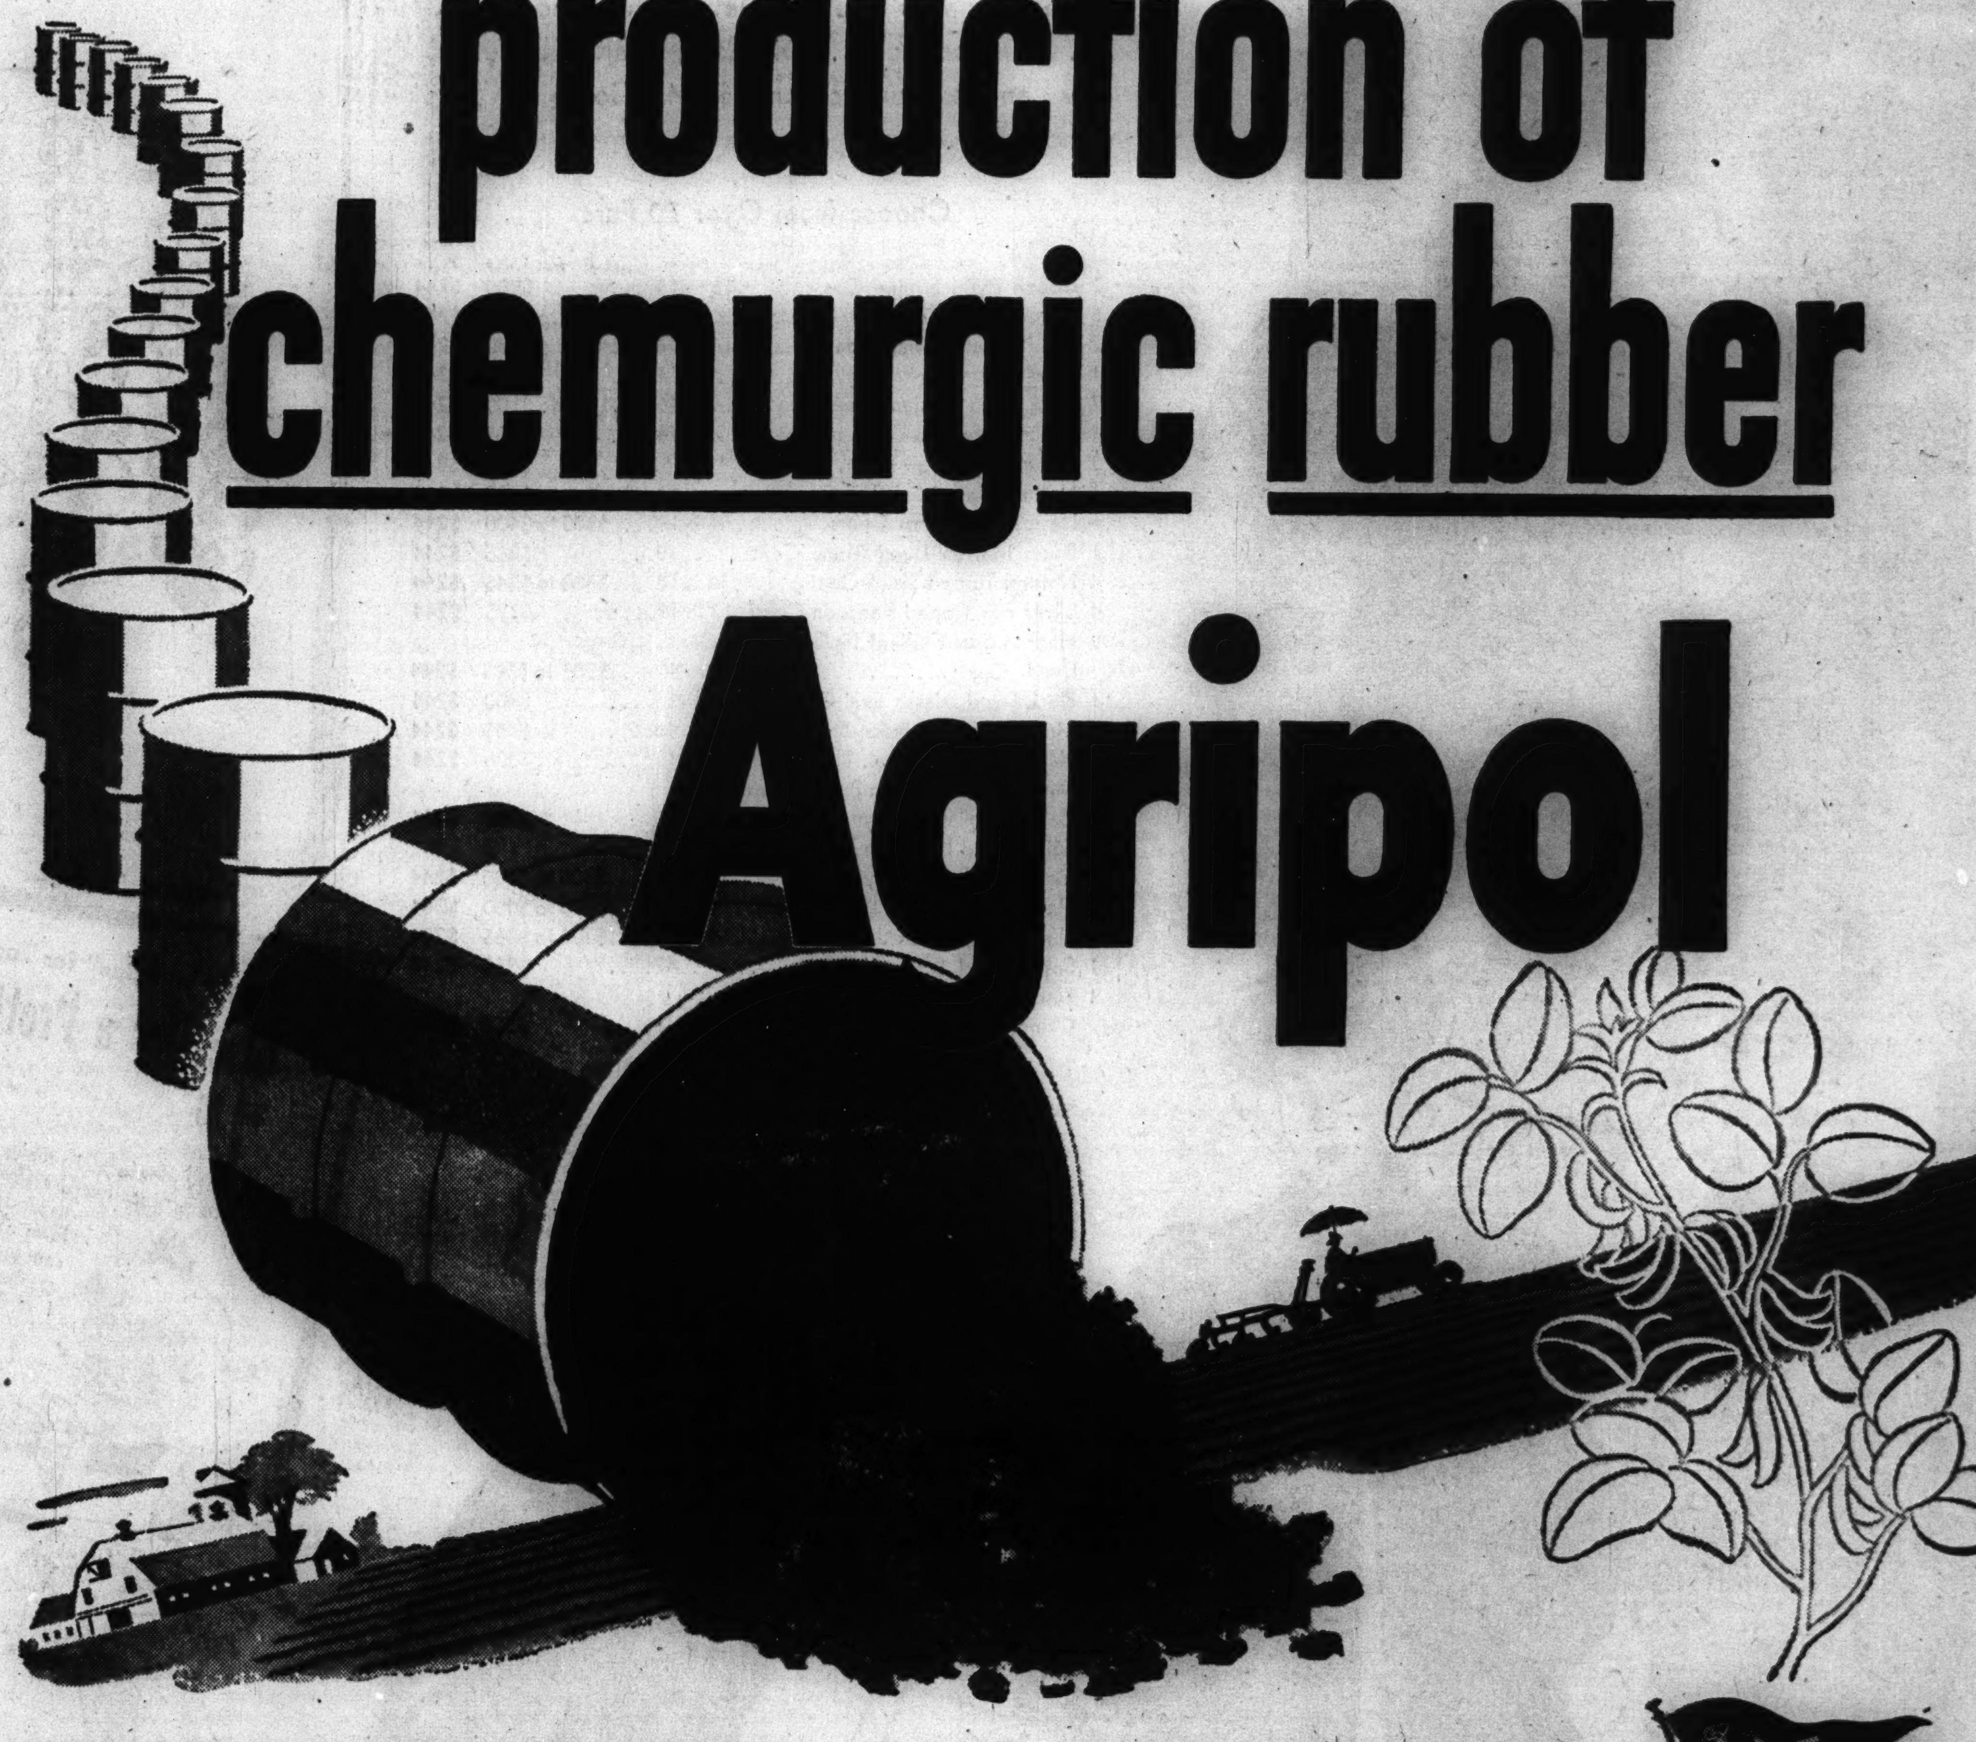
ANNOUNCING

the first commercial production of chemurgic rubber

Agripol



New Synthetic Rubber . . . Joint Product of Science and Agriculture

NOT RUMOR—not predictions—not hopes—but actual commercial production of synthetic rubber—that's the report RCI makes to you and every American.

Ever since our source of natural rubber was seized by a treacherous enemy it has been confidently predicted that American scientific skill and manufacturing ingenuity would circumvent this crucial obstacle.

Today, those predictions are coming true.

AGRIPOL, a chemurgic synthetic rubber, represents an important milestone in chemistry's program to make the American farm the source of basic raw materials for American industry. The raw materials for Agripol come from American farms and, when processed in the RCI manner, result in a highly satisfactory substitute for many rubber applications of a mechanical nature, but at present Agripol is not recommended for automobile tires.

Reichhold Chemicals, because of its quarter century of leadership in producing synthetic resins, which involve complex chemistry, was among the first to undertake making chemurgic rubber a practical manufacturing accomplishment . . . to carry the notable work of the laboratory* to its ultimate goal of volume production.

The speed and success of this endeavor are now evident . . . Agripol is already available commercially, offering its contribution to the solution of our Nation's wartime rubber problem.

Madison, Wis., Nov. 21.—Wisconsin's Badgers, already established as one of the truly great football teams of the land, today won the big one. Even tho they had already played nine games and lost only one of them while tying the ninth, they were interested, as ever, in winning this afternoon. And win it they did, with a resounding 20 to 6 triumph over Minnesota, their bitterest rivals these last 53 years.

It has been 10 lean years since the Badgers were able to beat the Gophers, and the record breaking crowd of 46,000 that jammed Camp Randall stadium this afternoon enjoyed today's game to the fullest. And why not? It has been a long, long time since Wisconsin folks have had a chance to see the sort of football the kids gave this Dads' day audience.

For once, the statistics meant very little. Minnesota's 14 first downs to the victors' 8 were nullified by the fact they were gained largely inside the 20 yard lines. Wisconsin's lack in this department did not matter, for the Badgers obviously were more interested in scoring touchdowns than first downs.

Subs Carry On.

There isn't much point in trying to identify the heroes of this game. Just check the list of starters and every one of their understudies. If you insist upon names, there were the two lads who commuted from the bench to the field in taking over the job vacated by Jack Wink, Wisconsin's injured quarter back. Jack was in only to hold the ball for the extra point attempts on the three Wisconsin touchdowns, but Ashley Anderson and Len Calligaro did a superb coöperative job of carrying out Wink's assignment.

Anderson and Calligaro, of course, were not the only men in the lineup who contributed to this 16th Wisconsin victory in 53 fights with the Gophers. There was a young man around this afternoon who reduces the necessity of picking the best 11 football players in the country by one. That would be Dave Schreiner of Lancaster, Wis. If you must choose that gifted eleven, start with Dave at right end.

Badgers Threaten Early.

And there was nothing wrong with that 3-H backfield of Pat Harder, Mark Hoskins, and Elroy Hirsch, who not only did their share of offensive work, but also shone in the defense that made the Gopher attack look pallid, whenever it became dangerous. And speaking of defense, there was the job turned in by the Badgers' able sophomore center, Fred Negus, who was all over the lot when the Gophers were trying to go.

First intimation of the Wisconsin intentions followed the opening kickoff, which was returned by Anderson to his own 30. On the next play Hirsch dropped back and hurled the ball to Schreiner. It appeared Dave had scored a touchdown until officials ruled he had just nicked the out of bounds chalk at the 39 yard line.

Here Harder took over, dashing around his own right end, and following that with several smashes at the line until he finally drove over the left side after only two minutes and 39 seconds of play. Then Wink entered to hold the ball for Pat's successful placement kick.

The Gophers, led by Bill Daley, responded by driving down to the

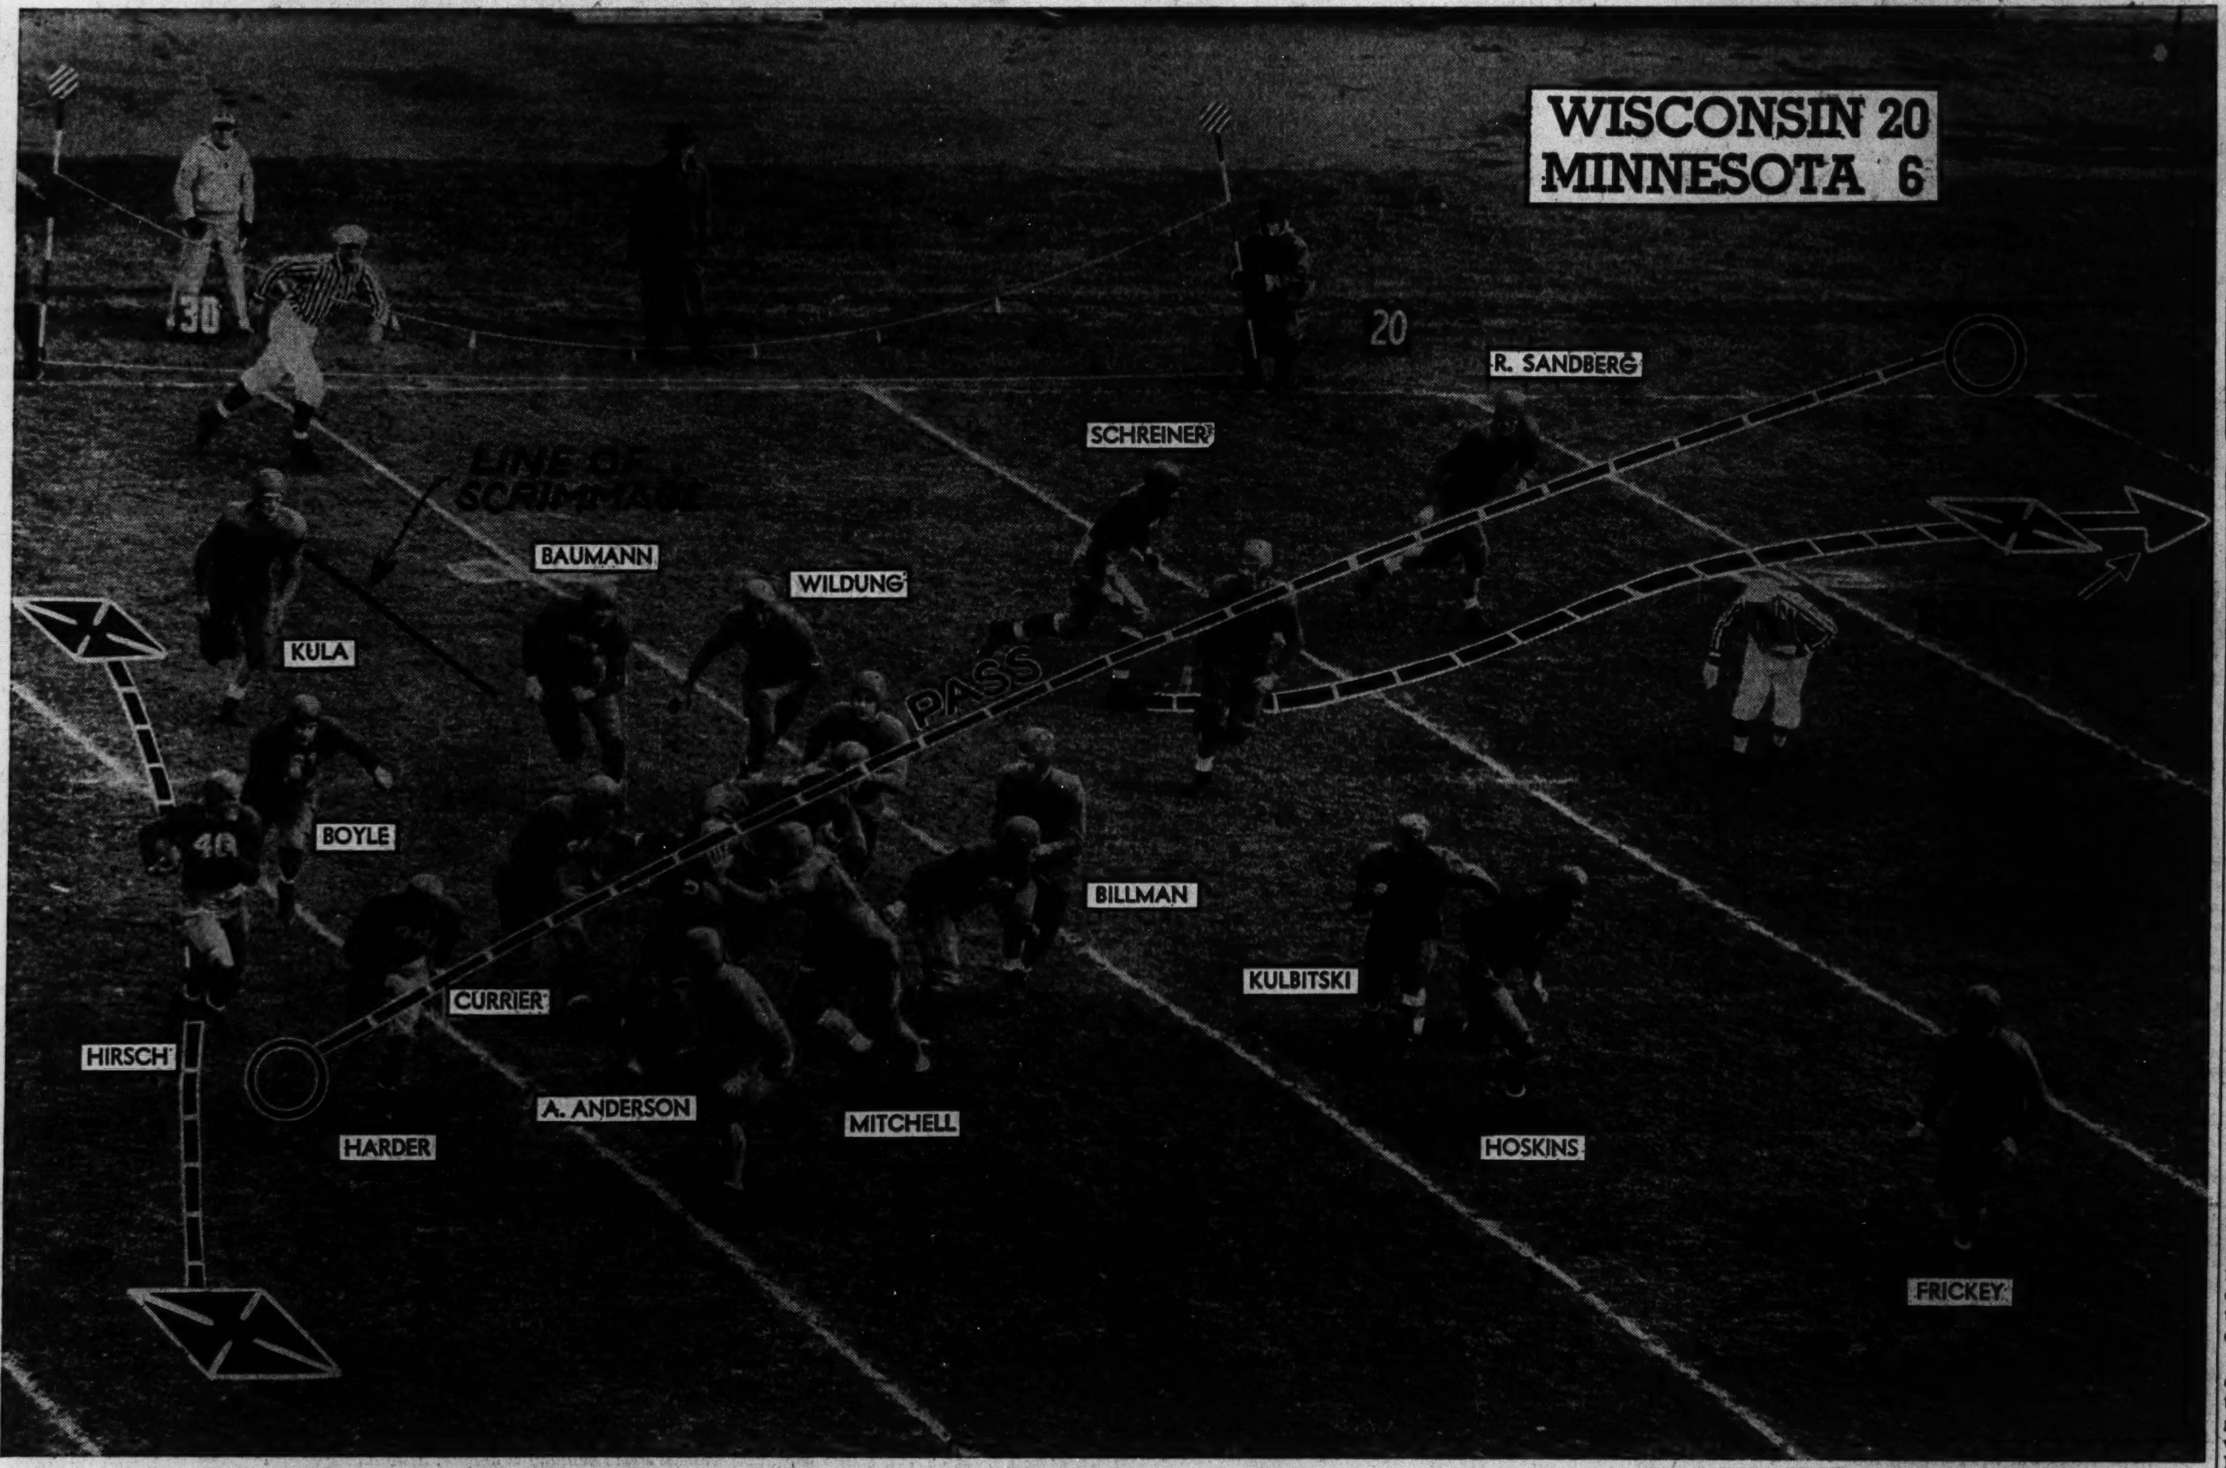
WISCONSIN TROTS OUT TRUSTY PASS PLAY TO HELP WHIP MINNESOTA



Wisconsin brings out a pass play which scored against Ohio State to repeat against Minnesota in second quarter of yesterday's game in Madison, Wis. Elroy Hirsch, Badger back, after making a right end sweep, suddenly stops and throws forward pass which was picked out of air by End Dave Schreiner at about the 15 yard line. Schreiner continued across the goal line and the Badgers held a 14 to 0 lead after Pat Harder kicked the extra point. Crosses mark start and finish of Hirsch's maneuver, and dotted line shows course of pass. Circle marks approximate spot at which Schreiner took ball out of air.

Columbus, O., Nov. 21.—Three times this dull gray afternoon Ohio State's passers found gaps in Michigan's secondary defenses. Three times scarlet jerseyed receivers raced across the Wolverine goal line and tonight this university city is riotously celebrating the 21 to 7 conquest that has clinched the football championship of the Western conference for the Buckeyes.

Ohio State speed and Ohio State deftness in handling the ball earned the decision over a relentless Michigan team that could match power with power but could not cope with Buckeye passes.

71,896 Watch Battle.

Here is the reason for Ohio State's victory but it barely furnishes an outline of the 60 minute battle that has had no superior in the long rivalry between these neighboring state universities. For the 71,896 who attended the Ohio State homecoming fray that concluded the conference schedule, there was the added thrill of the first victory over the Wolverines in five years. Even in 1939, when Ohio State headed the Big Nine, Michigan whipped the Bucks.

Seventy-six thousand tickets, the capacity of the double decked stadium, had been sold. That fewer than 5,000 did not report for the kickoff is a tribute to Ohio State loyalty. Weather conditions were distinctly unfavorable and thus State's air attack was indeed surprising. Ohio State completed six of its eight forward passes and these passes gained 142 yards. Until Ohio State proved it could be done, few in this vast crowd thought it possible.

One Successful Surge.

Michigan's statistical record was almost as impressive in the air. The Wolverines completed 10 of their 22 passes and gained 148 yards, but except for one successful surge in the third period when they already were behind by 14 points, the Wolverines could not attain the coördination that shocked Notre Dame a week ago.

It can be written without prejudice that Michigan probably lost a touchdown at the end of the half when the timer's gun sounded as Michigan had first down on Ohio's 2 yard line. And in the fourth period the Wolverines were stopped by their own mistakes when ball carriers fumbled three times and all were recovered by alert Buckeye defenders.

Sharp tackling caused the first and second of these Michigan errors. Coupled with Ohio State recoveries was a Buckeye defense that never was

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.

Notre Dame, Ind., Nov. 21.—Northwestern's Wildcats, orphans of the midwestern football storm, gave Notre Dame's Fighting Irish something to worry about this afternoon before 30,000, but in the end the ever threatening Wildcats were still prowling in search of their second triumph of a hapless season.

The Irish, with never a chance to relax, fought uphill for the first half of the 60 minute journey and having attained a tie at recess went about the remainder of their chores to put together a 27 to 20 triumph, a decision that placed Northwestern's eighth 1942 defeat in the record book.

Wildcats Put on Show.

Altho whipped, the Wildcats put on an exhibition—one of those shows that turned the meeting into a point free for all in which passes cluttered the atmosphere, some arriving at their appointed destination, many being stolen, and others going nowhere, but all adding to the spectacular confusion of a battle in which the Irish once trailed by 7 to 0, then by 13 to 7, and wound up with a dizzy setting in which the victors were still point minded, being fearful of what might happen as the result of Otto Graham's pitching.

The point harvesting saw the Wildcats give the first demonstration as the result of a run back of a punt by Don Buffmire, this resulting in a 7 to 0 margin to which the Irish responded readily, but still one short of a first period tie. In the second quarter, Graham's pitching changed the situation to 13 to 6, but before the halfway halt was reached the Irish were in the 13 to 13 tie, having mixed running, plunging and passing into their offensive tactics. Then the Irish put on a 14 point third period session that proved enough to keep them in front despite the last 15 minute desperation efforts of the Purple.

Clat: Gets 149 Yards.

Angelo Bertelli did bits of choice pitching for Notre Dame, what with four completions for 72 yards in seven attempts, but the main man in the Great Lakes Triumphs, 6-0, Over Illinois

BY HOWARD BARRY.

Champaign, Ill., Nov. 21.—Bruce Smith and Bob Sweiger, a pair of former Minnesota stalwarts who now are members of the United States Navy, today exacted a measure of retribution for the beating which their old college team suffered earlier this season at the hands of Illinois. These two ex-Gophers brought off the one scoring threat of the game in which the Bluejackets of the Great Lakes naval training station defeated the Illini 6 to 0, this afternoon in Memorial stadium before 12,000 spectators.

Smith broke away for the best run of the day after about five minutes of the third quarter had been played. Starting from the Illinois 44 yard line and galloping off to his left, Smith turned the flank of the Illini. Then the secondary came over to cut him off. So he swung back to his right. Racing at an angle of 45 degrees across the field, he headed for the northeast corner with three Illini trying to intercept him. Myron Pfeifer finally pulled him down on the 2. On the next play, Sweiger plunged for the touchdown. Bob Nelson missed the kick but those six points were all the Bluejackets needed.

Smith Shows Navy Training.

Smith showed how the Navy has toughened him up by carrying the ball 23 times in the course of the afternoon. He gained 108 yards for an average of about four and a half. Sweiger and Steve Belichick took care of most of the ball carrying when Smith wasn't toting it, tho Ed Heffernan and John Popov also got in several good licks.

The Illinois line fought hard against the much heavier Bluejackets to keep the situation from getting out of hand. Despite all the Illini could do, however, the Sailors outrushed them, 269 to 78. Some stubborn defensive work deep in their own territory combined with some breaks of luck in recovering fumbles enabled the Illini to keep the score where it was.

Fumble Starts Touchdown.

Fumbles played quite an important rôle in fixing the trend of the game.

AUBURN BURSTS GEORGIA'S TITLE BUBBLE, 27 TO 13

Columbus, Ga., Nov. 21 (AP).—You may bow in silent meditation tonight for a gridiron empire that was.

Georgia lost today to a brilliant and under rated Auburn, 27 to 13, and the crash of America's No. 1 football team probably resounded all the way to Pasadena, Cal.

While 20,000 hysterical fans looked on—a goodly majority cheering for Auburn—the Tigers of mild Jack Meagher snatched a rumored Rose bowl invitation out of Georgia's hip pocket and kicked it all around Memorial stadium in a decisive 56 minute rout.

Georgia Starts Well.

Georgia won the toss, and scored the first touchdown within four minutes of the opening kickoff. Then Auburn took the initiative and hammered Georgia until the boys from Athens hollered "Uncle." Six mintues and 13 plays were all it took for big Jim Reynolds and Will o' the Whisp Monk Gafford to whipsaw Georgia for a 7 to 6 lead, and from there on Auburn devoted itself exclusively to knocking Georgia out of a national championship.

At half time Auburn was leading 14 to 6 . . . .

At the third quarter it was still 14 to 6, and Georgia fighting for a break to turn the tide. Then Auburn punched over another touchdown, watched Georgia match it, and finally lashed out with the coupe de grace, a fourth touchdown scored when Frankie Sinkwich was knocked down behind his own goal in an attempt to pass, and Fagan Canzoneri fell on the fumbled ball.

Ends Victory String.

The spectacular upset—the second in two weeks for the up-and-down Auburn's—snapped Georgia's string of victories at 15 straight and knocked out what had promised to be a national championship game at Athens a week hence when Georgia meets Georgia Tech. While Georgia was going down to defeat, Tech turned back a fighting Florida team, 20 to 7, to remain unbeaten and untied, and apparently move up from second to first place in national gridiron rankings.

BY FRANK NORRIS.

Tilden Tech High school buried Taft's title hopes, 20 to 0, yesterday in Soldiers' Field before 10,000 spectators and captured the City High School league football championship for the second year in succession. The victory earned Tilden the right to oppose the Catholic league champion—which will be decided between Leo and Fenwick this afternoon—in the ninth annual prep charity and title game on Nov. 28. The proceeds of this game will go to the Chicago Service Men's center.

Led by its all-city backs, Ray Schumacher and Eddie Uvodich, Tilden completely dominated play thruout the game. Schumacher scored the first two touchdowns and Uvodich registered the final tally. The first came in the second period and the others in a torrid fourth quarter. The Tilden line proved itself with its defensive stands against Taft.

Uvodich's Best Run Wasted.

Schumacher carried the ball 32 times and gained a total of 103 yards while Uvodich was picking up 81 in 15 tries. Uvodich pulled the prettiest play of the game, with a great performance in dancing away thru the entire Taft team for 50 yards and a touchdown but the play was called back for a five yard penalty on Tilden for offside.

Outshining the famed Taft aerial attack, Tilden proved its superiority in the air by completing four of 10, three of which were instrumental in setting up all of Tilden's touchdowns. Taft's record in pass completions was six of 19.

After the teams jockeyed around during most of the first quarter, Ray Schumacher, plunging Tilden full back, got off a kick that bounced among a number of Taft players, touching several, and Jim Harmon, left guard, recovered the ball for Tilden on its own 47 as the period ended.

Tilden Starts Marching.

Then Schumacher and Frank [Babe] Maratea combined plays to make a first down on the Taft 43. Maratea picked up 2 yards in two attempts and Eddie Uvodich passed 15 yards to Maratea on the Taft 26, where he was downed immediately. After Maratea hit tackle for 2, Uvo-

INDIANA ROUTS PURDUE, 20 TO 0, TAKES BUCKET

BY EDWARD BURNS.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Lafayette, Ind., Nov. 21.—Indiana, never before able to forge three successive links in the chain that adorns the Old Oaken Bucket, this afternoon did a good job of blacksmithing to get that long delayed third link in place in the form of a 20 to 0 victory over the Purdue Boilermakers. Tho slowed by a muddy field, which got that way when the Purdue groundkeeper forgot to place a tarpaulin on the turf before last night's rain, the lads from Bloomington had no difficulty in keeping the situation in hand at all times.

Colored Boy Scores Twice.

Purdue, which ended a rather unhappy season today, made one thrust in the third period. This carried to the Hoosier 16 yard line. Otherwise the eager Boilermakers didn't have much fun.

Two of the Hoosier touchdowns were made by Hugh McKinnis, colored bundle of dynamite from Farrell, Pa. Lou Saban made the other touchdown on a 20 yard sprint around his right tackle.

McKinnis' and the Hoosiers' first touchdown was produced in a series of power plunges for which he was sent in fresh in the 11th minute of completely fooled by Michigan's intricate attack and delayed passes.

Buckeyes Score in Last Three Periods.

Paul Sarringhaus and Les Horvath, the Ohio State half backs, sparked the Buckeye air assault.

They were interchangeable as passer and receiver and the second of their maneuvers put over the Buckeyes' first touchdown. This was a throw from Horvath to Sarringhaus. Later Sarringhaus threw to Bob Shaw, lanky end, and then to Horvath for the other scores.

Gene Fekete, sophomore full back, place kicked all points after the touchdowns. Fekete also was the foundation for the sweeping runs and passes in which Sarringhaus and Horvath starred. Even when the Michigan line held, Fekete occasionally slid off the flank and while he never broke loose he was a constant threat that forced Michigan to employ six and seven men in the line.

To achieve an undisputed championship in the second year of the current coaching régime, Ohio State defeated Indiana, Purdue, Northwestern, Illinois, and Michigan. The Bucks were defeated by Wisconsin, which today finished its conference schedule with four victories and one defeat.

Blocked Punt Leads to Score.

Michigan invited Ohio State to score early in the second quarter after the teams had cautiously sparred thru the early minutes with neither attempting a forward pass. On the third play of the second period Chuck Csuri, husky Buckeye tackle, smashed thru to block Tom Kuzma's punt. The ball went out of bounds on the west side of the field on Michigan's 35 yard line.

Capt. George Lynn, Buckeye field general, caught the Michigan secondary with a pass from Sarringhaus to Horvath that sailed over George Cethaml's head. Kuzma came over from safety position to bump Horvath out of bounds on the Wolverine 13.

Fekete smashed at Michigan's Al Wistert for 3 yards and then Horvath took the ball, ran to his own left, the opposite direction of the first pass play, and threw to Sarringhaus over Paul White's head. Sarringhaus was uncovered in the end zone. Fekete's kick gave Ohio State its 7 to 0 lead.

Halted on 2 Yard Line.

Michigan finally gathered its force for a counterassault after three exchanges but only 2 minutes and 39 seconds of the half remained. Michigan then drove from its own 43 yard line to Ohio State's 2 in eight plays that linked together four first downs. Kuzma started the parade with a 9 yard pass to White and, after plunges by Bob Wiese, Kuzma's replacement, Bob Chappuis, continued the air drive.

Chappuis passed to Ceithaml for 13 yards and then tossed to Elmer Madar, who went 15 yards on the screen pass to Ohio State's 19. After two failures, Chappuis passed to Wiese in motion to his left and Sarringhaus and Fekete brought the Wolverine full back down on the 2 as the half ended.

Michigan failed to continue after the intermission at the same pace. Its first start, when White circled Ohio Sate's right end for 23 yards and a first down on the Wolverine 41 yard line, ended almost immediately. When George Slusser returned Kuzma's kick 28 yards the pressure once more was on the losers.

Touchdown Without Warning.

Ohio State's second touchdown came without warning. Kuzma had kicked out of bounds on the Bucks' 36 yard line. Fekete hit left tackle for 5 and then lost a yard at right end. On third down, from an obvious pass situation, Sarringhaus backed up and threw to Shaw. The big end took the ball at the east side line on Michigan's 25 yard strip and twisted free from Kuzma's tackle to continue leisurely to the goal line.

Michigan took the ball on its 35 yard line after Fekete purposely had kicked off out of bounds, and drove to its touchdown. On third down, with 11 yards to go, White passed to Chappuis for 29 yards. White lost a yard at Shaw's end and Chappuis threw a hook pass to Madar for a first down on State's 20. Wiese and White hammered at the line with Wiese finally ripping thru for 11 yards and a first down on Ohio State's 1 yard stripe. He went over on his next plunge and Jim Brieske kicked the point. The quarter ended after the subsequent kickoff.

Chance Kicked Away.

Fifteen minutes remained in which Michigan might tie or win but the first chance was kicked away by Chappuis' fumble which Don Steinberg recovered for Ohio State on the Bucks' 46. With 10 minutes to go Shaw intercepted White's pass which was underthrown to Ceithaml. Shaw was stopped on Michigan's 33. The Buckeyes moved to Michigan's 9 with a series of flanker plays but Fekete missed on an attempted field goal.

After this touchback—the ball went into the end zone—the Wolverines worked out to their 33 yard line. Here White fumbled and Bob Jabbusch recovered for Ohio State. On the first play Sarringhaus passed to Horvath over Chappuis' head and Horvath went over the goal line after making the catch on Michigan's 2.

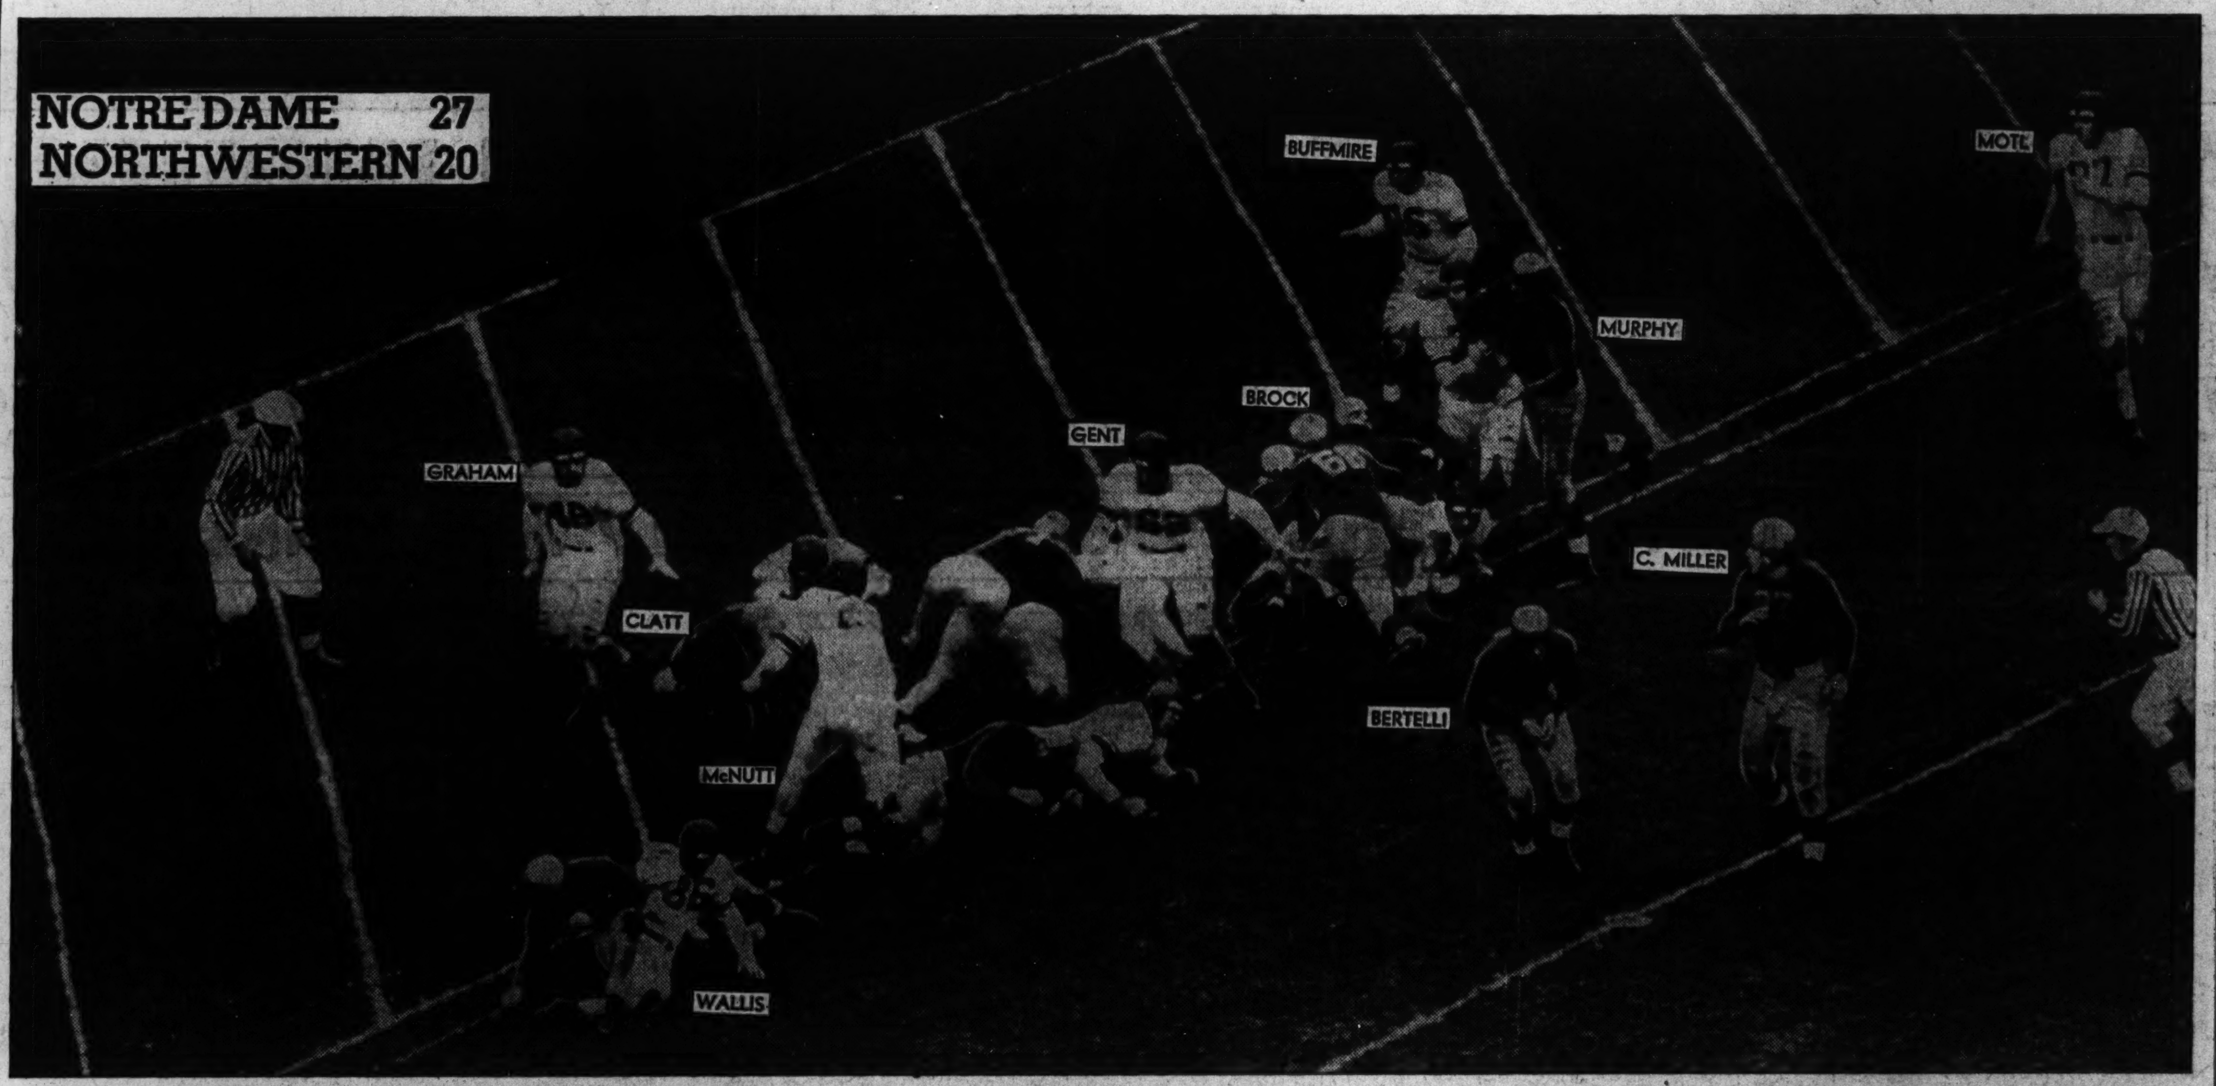
THAT FELLOW CLATT TIES IT FOR IRISH AGAINST N. U.'S WILDCATS



Corwin Clatt, Notre Dame full back, cracks thru right tackle from the one foot line for the touchdown in second period which tied up yesterday's game with Northwestern at 13 to 13. Clatt was a big figure in Notre Dame's attack thruout the game, piling up 149 yards in 23 attempts, two of which resulted in touchdowns. The Irish also were aided by the pass tossing of Angelo Bertelli, who had four completions in seven attempts for 72 yards. Otto Graham was a big factor in the Wildcats' passing attack, tossing 13 completed aerials for 175 yards. It was Northwestern's eighth loss of the year.

local assault was Full Back Corwin Clatt who was always able to dive for one or more yards and occasionally did some wide running. His net advance for the day was 149 yards in 23 attempts, two of which wound up behind the enemy goal line.

The Graham throwing of the ball kept the Irish on the alert on 23 occasions. He also did some helpful running but his throwing to one or the other of his mates was so valuable for the Evanston cause that he plucked off 175 yards. Thirteen of his passes were completed and two were stolen. Don Buffmire passed twice but one was intercepted and the other lost a yard. Against this aerial demonstration, Bertelli pitched seven times, four of them finding a receiver and two going into enemy hands. Bertelli's arm gain was 72 yards.

Fumble Helps Wildcats.

The struggle wasn't more than a few minutes on its way before opportunity beckoned to the Wildcats in the shape of a fumble by Bob Livingstone on his own 28 yard line. The Irish defense forced the foe into a punting maneuver but the Northwestern defense was equally sturdy so the Irish punted and on this kick the Wildcats' first seven points began to take form. Buffmire raced back the kick for 31 yards to Notre Dame's 37 yard line. An offside penalty added to the Irish distress.

Buffmire, Graham, Ed Hirsch, whose day's work netted him 56 yards, and Graham again quickly rushed up to the 20 from where Hirsch plunged for 6 more. Graham was stopped but another offside penalty was inflicted on the over-eager defenders. Graham scooted wide over his right end and arrived at the 1 yard line before being brought down. Hirsch wriggled his way over the goal line and Al Pick's conversion made it 7 to 0.

Irish Pick Up Slack.

The above happened with less than five minutes of the first period remaining, but that was enough for the Irish to pick up the slack. With the help of an offside penalty they put the kickoff in play six yards from the enemy goal. Creighton Miller roamed over his left end to the Wildcat 33 and in three plays conducted by Bob Livingstone the ball was conveyed to the 12 yard zone. Clatt did the rest, going over in two drives, but Bertelli missed on his kick, leaving the Wildcats in front with that 7 to 6 edge.

The Irish fell into difficulties early in the second period when a juggle by Jim Mello was grabbed in the air by Bob Wallis on the Purple 31 yard line. Notre Dame backed up to midfield on a pass flipped to Dud Kean by Graham. In two plays Hirsch picked up enough to offset a five yard penalty, then Graham pitched to Wallis who made a dazzling somersault catch on Notre Dame's 15 yard line. Nick Vodick was summoned into the lineup for a ball carrying job but he lost a yard so Graham resumed his pitching, Kean grabbing the toss and outstepping a covey of green shirted athletes on his way to the goal line. Pick's attempt to record the extra point was blocked by John Yonakor.

Notre Dame Bounds Back.

The Irish again bounced back without delay. They began scoring operations on their own 38 yard line where C. Miller coraled a quick kick by Graham. Bertelli passed to Bob Dove, Clatt ripped thru for two healthy advances and Livingstone went over hit left end to round out a series of plays on the 12 yard line. C. Miller sneaked thru for 9 yards, Clatt plunged to the 1 foot mark and then went over, Bertelli converting to tie the affair at 13 to 13.

The Irish took care of the untying of the knot early in the third quarter. Their effort became serious for the Purple when Clatt went on a tour over his left before being flagged down by Graham on the Wildcats 27. Clatt and Livingstone carried the advance up to the 14 yard line for a first down and Livingstone, after swinging to his right to find a path thru the Purple line, turned to his left for the third touchdown, Bertelli's toe assisting to make the score 20 to 13.

It wasn't long after this that Clatt captured a pass launched by Buffmire, the capture being concluded on the Purple's 42 yard line after a 15 yard sprint. A couple passes by Bertelli, one to Limont and the other to C. Miller sent the latter skipping 15 yards to the Purple goal. Bertelli's conversion was called back because of a holding offense so John Creevey tried it from the 25 yard line and his aim was accurate enough to hang up the 27th Irish point.

A poor punt by Creevey set up the Wildcats' last touchdown midway in the final period. The punt traveled only 23 yards, going out of bounds on Notre Dame's 48. Graham unfurled a series of passes that moved the battle scene to the 4 yard mark. Graham slipped thru tackle for 2 yards and Hirsch went the rest of the way, Pick kicking for the last point of the afternoon. Statistics:

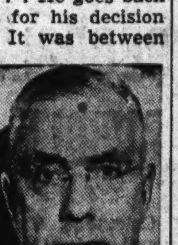
Men Who Whistle While They Work

Jim Masker Goes Back to 1910 for His Toughest Decision

[This is another of a series on Western conference football officials' toughest decisions and biggest thrills in sports.]

JAMES C. MASKER is dean of middle western football officials, with 39 seasons of service, 29 in the Big Nine. . . . He goes back to Nov. 5, 1910, for his decision of decisions. . . . It was between Kansas and Nebraska in Lawrence, Kas., and the Huskers led, 6 to 0, at the end of the first half on Owen Frank's touchdown. . . . Kansas kicked off at the start of the second half and the ball headed for Frank. . . .



James Masker.

. . . Now it's Jim talking: "Close behind the goal posts was a fence running the width of the field. . . . Back of the fence was a creek, bordered by jagged rock formation. . . . At the time there was no provision in the football code for ground rules and the ball was a free ball until recovered by one side or the other. . . . Well, this ball struck in front of Frank, then after he had touched it bounced over the fence. . . . The lad ran straight for the fence and had shinnied up to the top when I blew my whistle, fearing he might be injured on the rocks below. . . . Tod Woodbury of Kansas, who knew the layout, rushed down the field, cut thru a gate in the fence and went over a footbridge which crossed the creek. . . . Back he came with the ball, set it down back of the Husker goal, and claimed a touchdown. . . . I ruled the play a touchback on the grounds that the ball was dead the instant I blew my whistle. . . . Nebraska won, 6 to 0, but in the minds of the Kansas fans it was no worse than a 6 to 6 tie. . . . My decision later was upheld by such authorities as Walter Camp and A. A. Stagg. . . . The next year, officials were empowered to make ground rules to fit such freak situations." Refereeing the first College All-Star game is first in Jim's thrill book. . . . "I can still see Bronko Nagurski bouncing off the chest of Michigan's Chuck Bernard," he chuckles. . . . Jim is an official of Swift & Co. in Chicago.

the first quarter, after which Saban failed to convert. Then came Saban's dash and his own conversion after three minutes of the fourth quarter.

McKinnis set up his second touchdown with a 50-yard run which ended on the 20 yard line when he was overtaken by Walter Cook after he apparently had a free path to the goal line. From the 20 Jimmy Dewar and McKinnis rammed to the 1 yard line on five plays, then the chunky Negro went over in a beautiful swan dive that cleared the stocked-up lineman. Saban also converted after this touchdown.

Hillenbrand Goes 84 Yards.

Billy Hillenbrand, best advertised of the Hoosier fellows, didn't break into the scoring but he put on a good show nevertheless. The Evansville flash carried the ball 21 times, more than twice as many totes as were accomplished by any of his mates, and had top mileage with 84 yards, as against McKinnis' second best of 70 yards. McKinnis carried the ball nine times.

Because of the Purdue groundkeeper's absentmindedness, perhaps, Indiana elected to stick pretty close to the muddy ground. At any rate, the Hoosiers made only four attempts to pass and completed none, whereas 295 yards were gained from rushing, which netted them all their 16 first downs.

Purdue made six first downs, one from passing. The Boilermakers attempted six passes, completed two and had two intercepted. One of the two completed, good for 14 yards, was a toss—Tony Berto to Forrest McCaffry. That was the effort that gave the Boilermakers their advance to the Indiana 16 yard line.

45th Meeting of Schools.

The Indiana total of 20 points tied their highest in the 18 year history of the Bucket series, which seems to ignore the fact that today was the 45th meeting of the universities at football.

Indiana also made 20 points here in 1936, but that game was something else again as compared with today's affair. That was the year in which the teams were tied, 0 to 0, in the first half, and then in the second half Cecil Isbell completed three passes in the end zone, missing one conversion, while Vern Huffman was duplicating the performance for Indiana, with the resultant 20 to 20 tie.

Purdue hasn't scored since it eked out a 7 to 6 victory in 1939. Indiana won, 3 to 0 in 1940, 7 to 0 last year. The Bucket Series now shows 6 victories for the Hoosiers and 10 for the Boilermakers, with two ties. In the all-time series, Indiana has won 16, Purdue 24 and there have been five ties.

KANSAS STATE'S ELEVEN DEFEATS IOWA STATE, 7-6

Manhattan, Kas., Nov. 21 (AP).—The Kansas State College Wildcats, beaten eight straight times, made a first quarter touchdown stand up for 53 minutes today as they dealt a 7 to 6 upset defeat to the Iowa State football team. Only 2,200 witnessed the Big Six contest, which left the two contestants tied with Kansas for fourth place in the conference.

The Wildcats scored on a 56 yard march the first time they got the ball. Taking a short punt on the Cyclone 44, Kansas State moved to the Iowa State 7 on line lunges by Earl Williams, Bill Quick, and Johnnie Bortka, and two offside penalties. Quick then lofted a pass into the end zone. George Gast, Cyclone half back, tipped the ball and Mike Vargon, sophomore wingman, plucked it out of the air to come down with the score. Williams kicked the winning point.

The Cyclones struck back early in the second period to tally on two passes by Capt. Royal Lohry to George Harville, and three slashes at the line by Lohry. Paul Darling, Cyclone full back, tried to tie the count, but his kick was wide.

BOSTON COLLEGE WINS, 37 TO 0, OVER BOSTON U.

Soggy Field Helps Keep Score Down.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 21 (AP).—After undefeated Boston College's first string scored a touchdown a period, their replacements took over to complete a 37 to 0 rout of Boston university before 10,000 today in Fenway park.

After about 10 minutes of the game, Mike Holovak launched a 69 yard march that ended with Bill Boyce smashing over from the 2 for the first touchdown.

Mangene Scores Twice.

Bob Mangene provided Boston College's second and fourth touchdowns in the second and final periods. Those touchdown drives used up a total of 46 minutes, the regulars being in action for all of that except five minutes in the second period.

The reserves had to complete unusually long passes to pile up the score. Carl Lucas, third string full back, went to his own 35 to launch an aerial that Johnny Killelea caught on Boston University's 27 before racing over the Eagles' fifth counter. The next time Lucas rifled an overhead from the 45 to Larry Bouley. Larry pulled it down on the 20 and dashed away to complete the scoring.

CLOUDBUSTERS HAND W. AND M. FIRST LOSS, 14-0

Williamsburg, Va., Nov. 21 (AP).—Stopped for three periods, the North Carolina Naval Preflight eleven attacked powerfully in the final quarter today to conquer William and Mary, 14 to 0, before 10,000. It was the first loss of the season for William and Mary.

Morte Landsberg, who learned his football at Cornell, scored midway in the final period on a double reverse which sprang him loose for 16 yards around his left end.

A few minutes later Walter Zwiezynski, former Lafayette star who had done most of the Cloudbusters' gaining earlier in the game, crashed over center for the 10. Hayward Sanford, former Alabama end, converted after both touchdowns.

NATION'S BEST TO SEEK ALL-STAR BOWLING CROWN

Tournament Opens Dec. 5 in Auditorium Theater.

BY ARCH WARD.

The most spectacular event in bowling is to take place in the Auditorium Theater Service Men's center Saturday, Dec. 5, thru Sunday, Dec. 13. It will be the second National All-Star tournament for the individual match game championship, sponsored by the Chicago Tribune Charities, Inc., and the Bowling Proprietors Association of America.

Bowling is the most ancient game played today. In its present form, known as American Tenpins, it is only a few hundred years old. Its antecedents are turned back to 400 A. D. But whatever its background, few events in the sport have attracted as much attention as the coming All-Star tournament.

Draws 100 of Nation's Best.

One reason is that it will bring to Chicago 100 of the nation's best bowlers, assembled from all the territory in which tenpins is played. Another is that postponement of the American Bowling Congress tournament this year makes it the outstanding event competitively of 1942-43. A third reason is that it is to be held in a center that is synonymous with the history of Chicago—the famous Auditorium theater.

And the fourth reason, if one is needed, is that the profits of the tournament will be applied to the cost of the bowling center on which the tournament will be rolled, a completely equipped 12 lane establishment that will be turned over to the man in uniform for his free use as soon as the tournament is over. These profits will accumulate from the gate of the nine afternoons and evenings making up the complete program, from the souvenir program that is to roll off the presses this week, from concessions and from outright donations made as part of Chicago's gesture of welcome to the bowler in uniform.

Months of Planning Involved.

Months of planning have gone into the project, and when Chicagoans—those who intend simply to make a contribution to the cause as well as the thousands of bowlers and bowling fans—are seated in the spacious theater they will see the result of the work of numerous committees. The All-Star committee itself, which has been planning since the 1941 tournament for this event, is headed by Barney Hochstadter of Chicago. The general chairman of all the Chicago committees appointed when the Auditorium became available is Louis P. Peterson. Both are bowling proprietors and largely thru their efforts the success of a $40,000 project has been made possible.

Competitively, the tournament will be tops. Ned Day, current match game champion, will defend his title against Johnny Crimmins of Detroit, winner of the 1941 All-Star event, in a 90 game match which is to run thru the first six days of the event. The field of 100 All-Stars—representatives of more than 40 cities in 17 states—will simultaneously bowl 30 games of medal play, five games a day. At the end of the six days either Day or Crimmins plus the top men of the All-Star field will go into a ten man round robin which will last for three more days. The winner of the round robin will emerge as 1943 match game champion.

It May Be an Unknown.

It may be Day, champion since 1938. It may be Crimmins, or it may be a comparative unknown from New York or Chicago or St. Louis or some other city. If Day or Crimmins wins, he will have had to bowl 140 games to attain the goal—90 in the first title match and 50 more in the round robin. Any winner from the All-Star field will have had to bowl 80 games, 30 the first six days and 50 in the last three days of match play.

Tickets for the spectacle are available now. They are obtainable from the ticket manager, Chicago Tribune Charities, Inc., Room 1432, Tribune Tower. Prices are: Nights, $1.65 and $1.10 reserved, 85 cents unreserved; afternoons, 85 and 55 cents reserved, 40 cents unreserved.

NAVY PIER MEN TO SEE TENNIS STARS TOMORROW

Navy pier men will see outstanding tennis players tomorrow night when Bobby Riggs, former world champion, heads a troupe of stars who will give an exhibition in the gymnasium, starting at 7:30 o'clock.

Riggs will have as his opponent Charles Hare, former British cup player. That Riggs will have his hands full to defeat Hare is certain in view of the fact that in 1937 Hare was the 10th ranking player in the world.

Dorothy Round Little will appear against Mary Hardwick on the program. Word has been received from Mrs. Little that she will come to Chicago from Lake Erie college, at Zanesville, O., especially for the match. She is a tennis instructor at Lake Erie college.

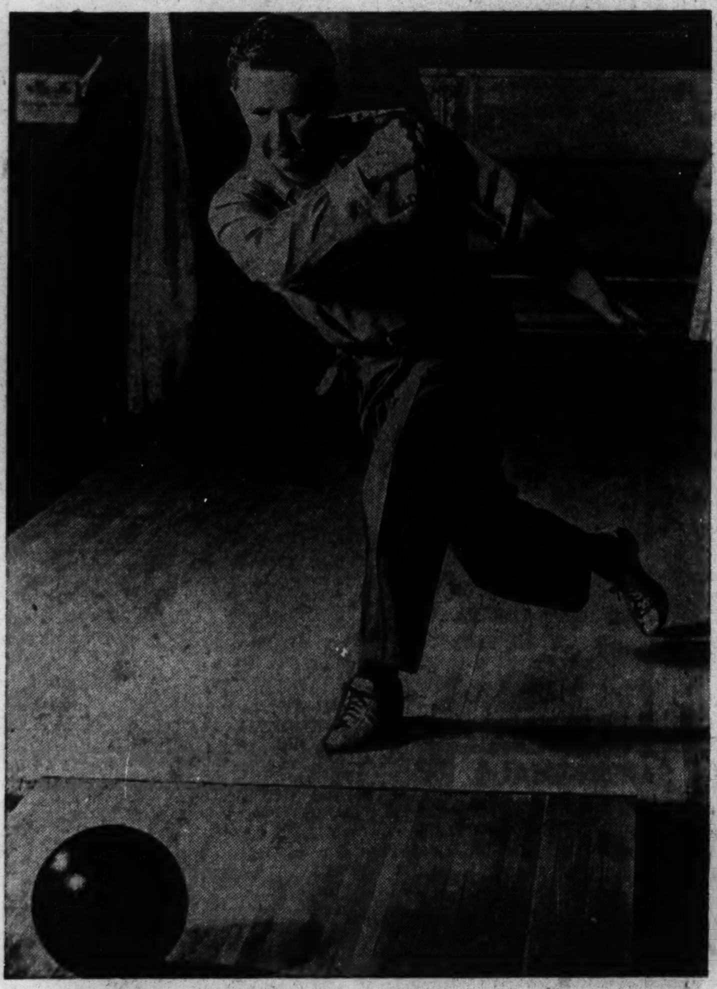
FARMER'S MULE IS DRAFTED AS ARMY MASCOT

West Point, N. Y., Nov. 21 (AP).—Next Saturday will be a great day for one of the mules from the barn of Farmer Bausams near Annapolis.

An ordinary mule on other days, this particular long eared animal has been chosen by the United States military academy to serve as the Cadets' mascot at the Army-Navy football game. Mr. Jackson and Pancho, the regular army mascots, will miss the classic as will the corps of cadets and everybody else living more than 10 miles away from Annapolis.

Farmer Bausam's lucky mule resides only two miles from the stadium in which the game will be played.

ALL-STAR BOWLERS—AND THEIR TOURNAMENT HOME DEC. 5 TO 13



Ned Day, match game champion since 1938, who will defend his title in a 90 game match with John Crimmins of Detroit, as the feature of the first six days of play in the National All-Star bowling tournament in the Auditorium theater service men's center. The event opens Dec. 5 and runs thru Dec. 13.

The famed old theater, setting for the All-Star tournament, is now echoing to the whine of sanding machines as work on the 12 alleys on which play is to take place nears completion. The lanes and approaches occupy a space which once held 500 seats and extend deep into the stage. Construction of ball returns, posts, and other equipment will be finished in a few days, after which shellac will be put on. The finishing process will require most of a week.

John Crimmins, winner of the 1941 All-Star tournament, who faces Day in the 90 game match for Ned's title. If he wins, he goes into the 50 game round robin final. Winner of that final will be 1943 champion.

Andy Varipapa, bowling teacher and exhibition star, who will prepare for the tournament by conducting the second Chicago Tribune Bowling school during the next two weeks. He opens tomorrow at Bryn Mawr, then goes to Park Manor, Bowling Lanes, Faetz & Son, Bensinger's and Logan Bowl. He is to put on his program today at Chanute field and Thanksgiving day at Great Lakes.

TOMORROW IS OPENING DAY OF BOWLING SCHOOL

BY C. H. BEUKEMA.

The introduction to the year's outstanding bowling program, which is to culminate in the national All-Star tournament in the Auditorium theater Dec. 5 thru 13, will take place today. It will be represented in the guest appearance of Andy Varipapa, noted teacher of the game and exhibition bowler, at Chanute field, Rantoul, Ill. Andy thus will open his second Chicago Tribune Bowling school, a series of sessions that are to run thru two weeks and lead directly up to the All-Star event—in which Andy is to be one of the more colorful participants.

Varipapa, who recently rolled the 50th perfect game of his career, will teach bowling to the Chanute field flyers this afternoon, beginning his school at 4 o'clock. He will not only demonstrate the proper stance, the delivery and follow thru, but will work with individuals. Then he'll put on his fancy shots.

Open at Bryn Mawr Tomorrow.

Black-Out Puts Principal's Football Speech in Dark

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 21 (AP).—The West Fulton High school football team was having its annual banquet last night, and Principal E. P. McIlwain had just risen to make an address when a practice blackout was signalled and all lights were shut off. Unruffled, McIlwain finished his address without aid of notes, and then the guests rose, each taking a hold on the next man's shoulder and marched out in lockstep fashion.

SPOTTING THE PINS

WITH Thanksgiving day coming up, the Filly family of the Lawrence Bowl Mixed league decided to let their bowling ability determine the cut of the bird each should have, come the holiday. Brother Willis, home on furlough, rolled 558 and promptly put in his claim for white meat. Sisters Lorraine and Dorothy shot 487 and 448, respectively. Neck and giblets went to mother and dad on the strength of their 423 and 443 counts. . . . And in the Zenith Men's league at Gateway 10 turkeys and like numbers of geese and ducks were given away. Comment there, tho, dealt not with fowl but with the three 147 games shot by Scotty Watson and the 102, 103, 104 by Bob Vandergrift.

Entries in the Knights of Columbus tourney close Dec. 12. And Charlie Messenger, Congress Recreation manager, is eager to have the entry exceed last year's. . . . Andy Murphy, erstwhile Pla-mor bowler, experienced a touch of nostalgia recently. Sitting [in uniform] in a theater in Ireland he saw flashed on the screen the picture made when Ned Day and Andy Varipapa opened Pla-mor last year.

Eldridge Carlson Rings Up a 707 Total.

Boner? Eldridge Carlson, shooting with the Boners, fired a 707 total in the Goss Printing league at Southwest alleys. His big game was 267. . . . Scores were off in most Samuelson Major matches, but Bob Cote got 667 and Roy Anderson, 655, as the Old Pogues hit 2,967 and took a pair from Mee and Ramme. The losers' count was 2,950. . . . National Bank of Hyde Park is the hot five in the Hyde Park Major. The bankers' last series, 2,931, was good for three over the Dave Eichners. Mike Dressler was high solo shooter with 648, followed by All-Star Barney Grogan with 644. . . . Seven Hyde Park leagues raised just under $145 for the USO via the Bowlers' Victory Legion. . . . Chapin and Gore, which has taken a six game lead in the North End Traveling league, meets the Gold Crown Beers, who are tied for the second spot, at 7 o'clock in Irving Park Recreation tomorrow night. Bill Lenzen, C. and G. star, leads the individuals with 206. Other matches tomorrow:

Hunter's Kentucky Bourbons vs. Schamberger Schlitz at Northtown, 7 p. m.; Baby Ruths vs. Stack and Ryan Bowl at Stack and Ryan's, 9 p. m.; Budweiser vs. Pogue Bourbon at De Luxe, 7 p. m.; Pepsi-Cola vs. Keeley Beers at Kaadland, 7 p. m.

Eighteen teams, 17 of them eager to slow down the Joseph L. Gills, currently the city's best performing team, will shoot in the Chicago Sunday sweepstakes, scheduled tonight at Rainbo lanes, 3954 West Diversey. The Gills have won the last two sweeps. The schedule:

9:15 p. m.—Schamberger Schlitz, Rainbo Juniors, Schlitz Beer, Budweisers, United States Beers, Meister Braus, Ambrosia Beers, Ace Fasteners, Pogue Distillery.

Meister Braus, Pogue Teams Perform Well.

The sweepstakes at Bowling Lanes in which eight Meister Brau sponsored and six Pogue Bourbon teams competed did so well that the sponsors may renew them on a monthly basis in the various houses where they have teams. Meister Brau teams, led by that representing Fullerton-Crawford alleys in the Greater Chicago Traveling league, with 3,036, took the first three places. . . . Fred Harvey, who is leading the Evergreen Towers Mixed league with a 188 average, rolled high series, 585 last time out. And Hattie Marek shot a women's record total, 560. . . . South Shore bank rolled 2,933 to the Tuthill Materials' 2,711, yet dropped the last two games in South Shore Major competition. The bankers got 1,028 to the builders' 773 in the first game. . . . Tomorrow's schedule in the Windy City Major:

J. M. Kralovecs vs. Vogel Bros.; Furman Funerals vs. Bee-Vacs; T. W. Samuels vs. Gills; Cascades vs. Soper Brothers; Nonebetter Ice Creams vs. Budweisers; Mineralites vs. Meister Brau; Ace Fasteners vs. Reichman Jewelers.

A team of 17 and 18 year old girls, representing Chicago Builders' Supply in the Bryn Mawr Major, will bowl a picked team led by Audrey Olsen, national high school champion, at 4 p. m. at Bowling Lanes, 5221 Broadway, today.

Canadiens Pay Visit Tonight to Blackhawks

The Canadiens, who were picked by experts as having the best team to represent Montreal since the days of Aurel Joliat, Pit Lepine, Black Cat Cagnon, George Hainsworth, and Howie Morenz, will play the Blackhawks in the Stadium tonight. A previous game this season, played in Montreal, went to Manager Dick Irvin's men, 5 to 2.

Last season's eight games between the clubs were free scoring affairs. The Hawks made 33 goals to win four, lose three, and tie one. Montreal tallied 25 times.

The goal tending of Bert Gardiner of the Blackhawks in the three games played before Chicago crowds this season has occasioned favorable comment from hockey fans, who paid scant attention to Gardiner on his previous visits to Chicago when he was vieing with Paul Bibeault, who will be in the Canadiens' nets tonight, for the net minding job with Montreal the last two seasons.

Replaces Kerr for Rangers.

Gardiner came into prominence when he replaced Davie Kerr in the Rangers' nets when the latter was injured in the first game of the Stanley cup finals against Boston in 1938-'39. In that series Boston, then the most powerful scoring unit in the league, was able to score only 12 times on Gardiner in the six encounters. Three of the games went into overtime and it took 10:38 of overtime in the final game in a best of seven series before Boston gained a 2 to 1 decision to capture the cup.

The Canadiens will have their high scoring right wing, Gordon Drillon, purchased before the season's start from Toronto, in the lineup tonight. Drillon at present is tied for second place in the league's scoring statistics with the Hawks' Max Bentley. Each has 12 points. They are topped by Lynn Patrick, Rangers' star, who has 13.

The two Canadian teams, Montreal and Toronto, have been facing an unlooked-for situation since the start of the season. Both Managers Irvin and Day were satisfied with the personnel of their organizations prior to the start of the 1942-'43 schedule. After the start of the 50 game grind, however, the Canadian government refused permits to certain Montreal and Toronto players to play in the United States.

Montreal Leaves Three Behind.

As it now stands, for games scheduled for Canada, the two clubs can present intact lineups, but when they cross over the line Montreal must leave Defense Man Emile Bouchard and Forwards Terry Reardon and Emil Lach behind. Since the season's start their best defense man, Red Goupille, has been called by the Canadian army. This may be the answer to the Candiens' three straight defeats this side of the border.

When Toronto enters the United States it plays without the services of two of the best looking rookies in years, Defense Player Bobby Copp and Right Wing Jack McLean.

Leo Carbol will replace Joe Matte tonight on one of the Hawks' defense lines. His linemate will be Red Mitchell. Manager Thompson thinks Matte should be rested up for a few games and he also wants Carbol to keep in playing form.

Games Tonight

Detroit Red Wings at New York Rangers.
Toronto Maple Leafs at Boston Bruins.
Montreal Canadiens at Chicago Blackhawks.

New Haven, Conn., Nov. 21 (AP).—Gridiron glory returned to Yale today as Hugh Knowlton and Townsend W. Hoopes maneuvered a 62 yard touchdown pass in the final period to whip Harvard, 7 to 3, before 23,500 in Yale bowl.

It was a sudden, surprising stab that ended Harvard's hex over the Elis, who had not been able to score against their historic foe since 1939 and it gave Yale the championship of the Big Three.

The blow came with six minutes to play in the last quarter. Knowlton, a 19 year old sophomore, had entered the game a few moments earlier when the Elis were trailing by three points as the result of an 18 yard Harvard field goal in the second quarter. His first action was to return a punt 7 yards to Yale's 38. Then on his first offensive play, he faded back and threw a sharp pass to Hoopes in midfield. The receiver reversed his field and dashed across the goal without interference. Fred Dent placekicked the extra point.

Harvard Strikes Back.

Harvard took the succeeding kickoff and drove 93 yards before being stopped on the 7 just one play ahead of the final whistle. With defeat staring them in the face the Harvards showed the power and finesse they never had uncovered before. They worked methodically to their own 35, then Wayne Johnson passed to Cleo O'Donnell on Yale's 44 and he ran to the 25. Another pass from John Comeford to Lloyd Anderson brought a first down on the 7, but the receivers choked up and dropped two perfect passes and Yale took over as the game ended.

Harvard's only other drive came late in the second period and carried from the Crimson 39 to Yale's 10 with Johnson, Comeford, and O'Donnell showing the way.

On fourth down, Bob Fisher came into the lineup for the first time this year and place-kicked a field goal from the 18.

BADGERS BEAT GOPHERS, 20-6, ON EARLY DRIVE

Daley's Run Sets Up Score for Minnesota.

Badger 26, where Daley failed to make a first down.

Badgers Recover Fumble.

In the middle of the second period Paul Hirsbrunner, the kid who enjoys playing tackle, but has worked at end in the Badgers' last two games [today with a bruised shoulder] partially blocked a punt by Bill Garnaas. The Badgers tried to take advantage of their opportunity, but Bob Baumann, who averaged 40 yards on 12 Wisconsin punts today, was forced to kick. The ball was taken by Herman Frickey, but he fumbled it, and Negus was on hand to recover it on the Minnesota 32.

The Badgers then hauled out the pass play which aided them in whipping Ohio State. Hirsch dropped back, ostensibly to throw to Left End Pat Lyons. But it wasn't Lyons who caught the ball. It was the aforesaid Schreiner, breaking out of the right end spot and then crossing over to his left to take Hirsch's pass and continuing on for the touchdown. Harder, with Wink holding the ball, made it 14 to 0, with six minutes and seven seconds of the half remaining.

An end zone punt by Garnaas finally caused the Badgers to kick out on their own 41. Daley, Frickey, and Vic Kulbitski hit into Badger territory, but Daley failed on a try for first down, and the Badgers kicked out to Frickey, who returned to the Wisconsin 25. Herman then joined with Daley and Kulbitski to bring the ball to the Badger 6, but there he fumbled and Lloyd Wasserbach, Wisconsin right tackle, recovered.

Baumann Kicks 78 Yards.

In the fourth period Baumann got away his finest boot of the day, a kick that traveled 78 yards before Daley retrieved it on the Minnesota 11. Bill then carried the ball four times, but failed to make first down, even tho Wisconsin was penalized for too many times out.

The Badgers took the ball on the Gopher 24 and wasted no more time than they had in their previous two scores. Harder flung the ball to Schreiner, who made a grand diving catch on the 3. Pat hammered the line for a yard, and on the next play Anderson scored on a quarter back sneak. Harder failed on the try for the extra point, but the idea of Wisconsin leading Minnesota by 20 to 0 in the last period made that easily forgotten.

Badger hopes for a shutout were squelched in the finishing minutes, wherein Frickey and Daley contributed to the lone Minnesota score of the day. Frickey took one of Baumann's punts back 33 yards to the Wisconsin 41. Daley went around his own right end to the Wisconsin 15. The Gophers were assessed 5 yards for a times out excess, and on the next play Bill, who has never won any medals for passing, flipped the ball to Garnaas, who fell on the Wisconsin 1. Daley then carried the ball over his own right tackle, but Garnaas failed to make the extra point.

OLIVER HUNTER TAKES NATIONAL HARRIER CROWN

Indiana and Penn State Tie for Team Title.

Table of Points

Indiana	57
Penn State	57
Rhode Island	79
Michigan State	108
Illinois	134
Notre Dame	145
Miami	154
Cornell	216

East Lansing, Mich., Nov. 21 [Special].—Oliver Hunter, Notre Dame's great distance runner, defeated 65 of the nation's top cross-country runners today to capture the individual title in the fifth annual national collegiate cross-country meet. He turned in record shattering performance over the Michigan State four mile course. Indiana, Western conference champions, and Penn State tied for team honors. Rhode Island State, defending champion, was forced to be content with third place.

Misses Twin at Two Mile Mark.

Hunter's performance was noteworthy in view of the course conditions. A heavy rainfall which fell last night made the course slippery and the footing tricky. Hunter sheared better than 18 seconds off the course and meet record set by Frederick Wilt of Indiana in 1941. Hunter's time was 20 minutes 18 seconds. Wilt's time last year was 20 minutes 32.1 seconds.

Misfortune stood in Hunter's way of paring even more from the record. The sturdy Irish runner took the lead near the mile mark and gradually increased his margin. At about the two and a half mile mark Hunter missed the turn and was forced to retrace his steps, costing him 18 to 20 seconds.

First Tie in History.

Earl Mitchell, Big Ten individual title holder, finished second behind Hunter and Leroy Schwartzkopf, Yale's only entrant, followed Mitchell across the finish line. Robert Nichols, Rhode Island State, finished in fourth place and Norman Gordon, Penn State, was fifth. The next five runners to cross the line were: Clarence Dunn, Illinois, sixth; Curtis Stone, Penn State, seventh; John Twomey, Western Illinois State Teachers' college, eighth; Gerald Karver, Penn State, ninth, and Charles Labatka, Indiana, tenth.

It was the first time in the history of the meet that the final team standings ended in a tie.

Normal Bows to Wesleyan Again, 14 to 6

Bloomington, Ill., Nov. 21 [Special].—After a scoreless first quarter, the Illinois Wesleyan Titans turned on the power to defeat their neighborhood rival, State Normal, 14 to 6, this afternoon, for its eighth straight victory of the series. Normal beat Wesleyan in 1934 for its only victory in the last 35 years of the series, altho there have been several ties.

Early in the second period, Henry Peterzilka returned a punt to the Normal 39 yard stripe. A pass from Bill Finks to Clyde Buettner was ruled complete for interference on the Normal 26. Finks plunged for 2 yards, hurled two incomplete passes and then, on fourth down, tossed a 24 yard aerial to Peterzilka in the end zone. Capt. Harry Wilk place kicked the extra point to give Wesleyan the 7 to 0 lead which it held at half time.

Normal Scores.

Shortly after the third quarter opened, Normal started a drive from midfield. Bob Trumphy, freshman half back, passed to Merle Belle for a first down on the Wesleyan 38. Tony Garnero, half back from Collinsville, then hurled an aerial to Bill Turner on the 26 and Trumphy went around left end for a first down on the 15. Turner passed to Garnero on the 2 yard line, and John Moreiko lunged over for Normal's touchdown. Belle's attempted conversion was blocked.

Later in the third quarter, Wesleyan reached the Normal 1 yard line, but a 15 yard penalty shoved the Titans back and a fourth down pass was incomplete.

Titans Count Again.

As the final quarter opened, Peterzilka and Finks moved to a first down on the 23. Finks and Alkire drove thru the opposing line for a first down on the 8. In two plays Peterzilka and Finks reached the 3. Finks then went thru center for Wesleyan's second touchdown and Wilk again kicked the additional point.

Maryland Wins, 32-28, as W. & L. Rally Fails

College Park, Md., Nov. 21 (AP).—The Washington and Lee Generals, coming to life in the last half today with a brilliant passing assault, gave Maryland quite a scare before the Old Liners managed to win, 32 to 28. The Generals trailed by three touchdowns at the half, but shoved over 21 points in the wild third and fourth periods.

THERE GOES THE MORTGAGE!

Match Is Put to Mortgage of Golf Club

When the mortgage on Tam O'Shanter Country club was burned during a celebration last night the club attained an unique financial position. It is entirely out of debt and its assets amount to more than $600,000, according to George S. May, club president. Tam O'Shanter is one of the few country clubs that guarantees no special assessments. During recent years it has gained national recognition as the scene of America's richest prize money golf tournaments.

More than 500 members and their guests paid tribute to Mr. May at the dinner dance. During the banquet he told of the difficulties encountered after the clubhouse was destroyed by fire on April 14, 1936.

Tells of Rebuilding.

"All we had was the land and $24,000 fire insurance. No sooner had the clubhouse been rebuilt than the course suffered extensive damage when it was flooded by the Chicago river. Since those difficult days every modern improvement has been installed to make Tom O'Shanter one of the outstanding golf clubs of the Chicago district.

"The members now enjoy a $26,000 swimming pool, new tennis courts and an outdoor dancing pavilion. There is a large playground for the children. Winter sports include tobogganing and facilities for ice skating. Our spacious clubhouse is ideal for entertaining. The club's cuisine is excellent."

New Membership Plan.

A new membership plan was explained at the banquet. It provides for a 10 per cent discount on all house accounts of more than $25 a month. It was also announced that the regular initiation fee of $166.50 would be waived for the duration of the war.

To promote the war effort the annual Tam O'Shanter New Year's party will be given free for those members and their guests who buy a $50 war bond at the door, while the club's regular party fee may be paid by those members and their guests who do not care to buy war bonds.

East Lansing, Mich., Nov. 21 (AP).—Hermon E. Phillips of Purdue university was elected president of the National Collegiate Cross-country Coaches' association here at the fifth annual championship run. He succeeds Frederick D. Tootell of Rhode Island State college.

Other officers are: George L. Rider, Miami university [Ohio], vice president; Lauren P. Brown, Michigan State college, secretary, and Paul K. Scott, Cornell college, treasurer.

The association unanimously approved a resolution recommending that distance running be used more by high schools, colleges, and all other groups in their physical hardening courses.

OLSEN SWORN IN BY NAVY, HOPES TO PLAY AGAIN

The Navy gained a crack southpaw pitcher and the Chicago Cubs lost one when Vern Olsen, 24 years old, of 2514 North Sawyer avenue, was sworn in as a seaman yesterday. Olsen has been with the Cubs since the latter part of the 1939 season.

"I'm pitching for Uncle Sam for the duration," he said. "I hope to play baseball again when the war's over."

Olsen will leave behind his wife, Elaine, 23, who expects to live in Chicago.

Holy Cross Outclasses Manhattan Eleven, 28-0

Worcester, Mass., Nov. 21 (AP).—A vastly improved Holy Cross team punched and passed its way to a 28 to 0 victory over Manhattan today before 5,000. Bezemes crashed over from 3 yards out and then threw a 52 yard scoring pass to Ed Murphy for the first two touchdowns in the second period, then threw another scoring pass to Grigas in the third. Sullivan ran 27 yards to tally in the final.

PARROTTO WILL MEET GOMEZ ON MARIGOLD CARD

Sammy Parratto, shifty Pittsburgh lightweight, will attempt to deal Alvin Gomez his first defeat in eight starts when they meet in a return bout of eight rounds in Marigold Gardens tomorrow. Parratto, who held his Chicago rival to a draw decision in an earlier meeting, hopes to do better this time.

Off Gomez showing against Joey Pirrone, Cleveland slugger, in Chicago Stadium on Nov. 13, Alvin should score his fifth victory at the expense of the Pennsylvanian tomorrow. In addition to beating Pirrone, Gomez has conquered Chuck Taylor, Jimmy Joyce, Henry Gowatch, and Gene Spencer this season. He also fought a draw fight with Spencer in a previous encounter, as well as scoring that deadlock encounter with Parratto.

Bill Jordan, south side junior welterweight, yesterday was substituted for Al Walker in a six round semiwindup in the Marigold arena against Jimmy Joyce of Gary. Four round events will bring together Paul Carbetta, junior lightweight stablemate of Parratto, and Teddy Lewis; Walter Schramm, heavyweight, also of Gary, and Cairo Hodges, and Chuck Pate, Milwaukee light heavyweight, and Zack Robinson. Pate will be making his debut under the management of Emil Nanny of Highwood, Ill.

Charles [Gorilla] Grubmyer and Ole Olson will meet in the windup bout of Fred Kohler's wrestling show tomorrow in White City. . . . Cornelius Young, twice winner of a Chicagoland Golden Gloves championship, has joined the coast guard. Young, who is 23 years old, will report for duty within a month. Meanwhile, he will continue at his job in a South Chicago steel mill.

Roller Derby to Close Tonight in the Armory

The Roller Derby between Chicago and New York teams will close tonight in the Armory, 16th street and Michigan avenue. The final night's program opens at 8:30 and will be conducted with the time limit lifted on jamming.

The series started on Oct. 21 with Chicago winning the opening game. That was the last time Chicago led in accumulated points until last Tuesday night, when it climaxed a comeback by moving out in front by two points. Coming into the last game, the teams are tied.

CITADEL WINS, 21-9.

Charleston, S. C., Nov. 21 (AP).—The Citadel Bulldogs matched their powerful running attack against Davidson's aerial power before more than 5,000 here today and came out on top in the Southern conference battle, 21 to 9.

MIDWEST VOTES NOT TO ABANDON COLLEGE GAMES

Faculty members of the midwest conference, in their annual fall meeting in the Sherman hotel, voted down a proposal to abandon intercollegiate athletics for the duration and also refused to abrogate the freshman rule today.

The proposal to shelve athletics because of transportation difficulties was made by Prof. P. W. Boutwell of Beloit [Wis.] college, but other members were of the opinion this would be unfair to the youths in college.

The championship wrestling and swimming meets were awarded to Rockford, and will be held the first week in March. The title track, tennis, and golf meets will be held at Coe college, Cedar Rapids, the second week in May.

OUT AT ADOLPHUS.

St. Peter, Minn., Nov. 21 (AP).—Gustavus Adolphus, a leading member of the Minnesota College conference, largest athletic group in the state, has ended all participation in conference athletics for the duration of the war. Instead, it will concentrate on training 150 students now enlisted in various service reserves.

President Walter A. Lunden said the decision, which was opposed by Lloyd Hollingsworth, athletic director and football coach, and a considerable number of students, was made by the board of trustees to meet the government's "request for the curtailment of off campus travel and to provide a broader, more thoro program of physical education for our men in the reserves."

It was the first Minnesota college to cancel participation in all conference athletics. The school has approximately 550 students.

Tribune Expert Picks $136 Shot at Bay Meadows

Perhaps Santa Claus wanted followers of The Tribune race selections to do their Christmas shopping early. Then too, Old Nick may have sought to provide the wherewithal for these race fans to increase their purchases of war bonds. And again it's possible that Jockey Gustave Dye had taken his pen in hand early and pleaded with Santa to give him a big money winner yesterday.

At any rate, all these ends were attained yesterday when The Tribune handicapper selected Sherry Flip which won the opening race of the program at Bay Meadows. The 7 year old chestnut gelding owned and trained by E. G. Rossall returned $136.10 straight, $52.10 to place and $18.70 to show.

Owner Rossall started the gelding at the west coast track seven times during the present meeting and on each occasion with a different boy aboard.

WHITE OWL REPORTS TO AMERICAN CIGAR SMOKERS

Many of you will remember when White Owl sold for ten cents each

. . . and you'll remember what news it was when we worked out a way to give smokers the same quality cigar and reduce the price, first to 3 for 25¢

. . . then to 2 for 15¢.

Millions and millions of White Owls were sold at these lower prices, but we were not satisfied. We figured that all smokers wanted a cigar of White Owl's quality. We reasoned that what we would lose in profits by still further lowering the price would be more than made up by extra sales, when more smokers could afford the cigar.

SO WHITE OWL BLAZED A TRAIL . . . maintaining the quality and lowering the price through a series of reductions to five cents, during 1920-1931. The results made cigar history. Sales in that period soared to a total of 2,896,000,000 cigars. In fact—more men have smoked White Owls than any other cigar ever made in the United States.

From that time on we have continued to improve White Owls . . . buying better and better tobaccos . . . blending a generous helping of Havana tobacco with mild American leaf. Today, we can honestly say that it is an even finer cigar than it was when it cost 10¢.

But this is wartime with higher costs all along the line—including Uncle Sam's need for extra taxes to help win this war. So, it has become impossible to continue to make a cigar of White Owl's quality and still keep the price at five cents.

Therefore, we are reluctantly raising the price to six cents each . . . White Owl's first price rise in twenty-two years.

At the same time, we give you two solemn pledges:

1. We will maintain White Owl's high quality.

2. We will return to the five cent price at the earliest moment that costs make it possible.

Keep these pledges in mind when you buy White Owls at the new price of six cents each.

General Cigar Co., Inc.

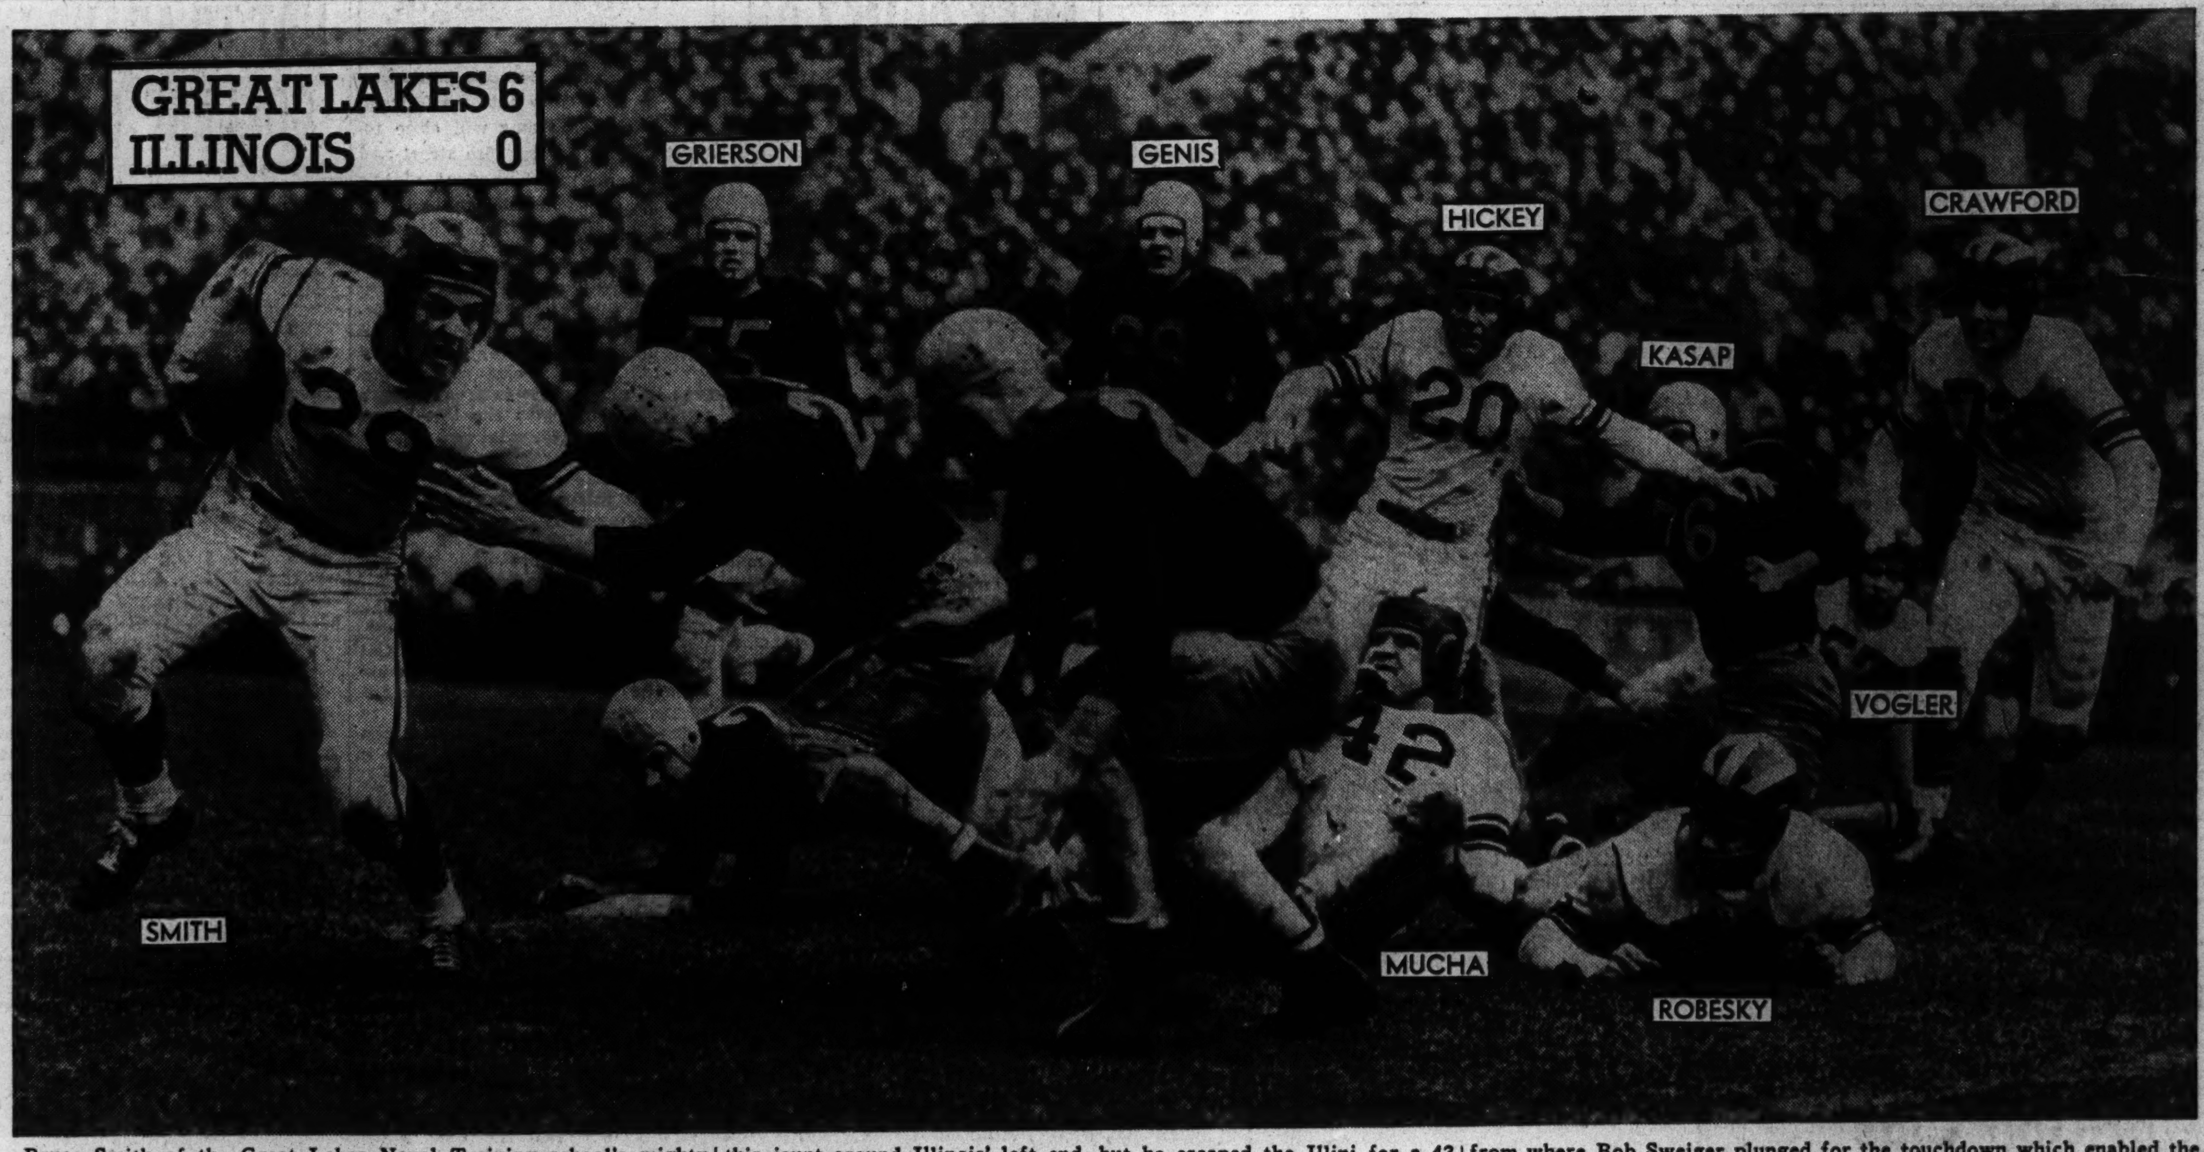
BLUEJACKETS' SMITH DOESN'T QUITE GET AWAY



Bruce Smith of the Great Lakes Naval Training school's mighty football machine got pulled down after a gain of merely 3 yards on this jaunt around Illinois' left end, but he escaped the Illini for a 42 yard sprint in the third quarter which carried the ball to the Illinois 2 from where Bob Sweiger plunged for the touchdown which enabled the Bluejackets to win, 6 to 0, yesterday in Champaign's Memorial stadium.

STANFORD ROUTS CALIFORNIA, 26-7, AS 45,000 WATCH

Indians Score in Every Period.

Berkeley, Cal., Nov. 21 (AP).—Stanford climaxed their Pacific Coast conference season today with a 26 to 7 victory over the University of California. The Indians passed and raced to touchdowns in every period.

Some 45,000 fans, the smallest "big game" crowd in recent years, saw Stanford's formation function as it did two years ago when the Indians won the conference title and the Rose Bowl nomination.

Stanford Leads at Half.

Stanford scored its first touchdown on a 52 yard drive and transformed recovery of a free ball on California's 27 to a second period touchdown and a half time lead of 13 to 0.

A weak California punt paved the way for the third quarter touchdown. It went out of bounds on the California 48 and Stanford crossed the last line three plays later. The scoring play was a 28 yard pass from Ray Hammett, quarter bcak, to Right End Roger Laverty who ran 20 yards.

Ross Dana, left half back, intercepted a Califronia pass and ran 35 yards for the final Stanford touchdown. California scored its only touchdown against third stringers late in the game.

U. C. L. A. WINS, 14 TO 10.

Los Angeles, Nov. 21 (AP).—U. C. L. A. snatched a 14 to 10 victory from Washington in the last minute of play today, recovering a wildly bouncing bad pass from center to remain in the race for the Pacific coast football title. Thirty-five thousand saw the game.

Walt Harrison's wild snap-back eluded Bob Erickson from the 1. It rolled to the 10 and U. C. L. A. End Milt Smith, swarmed on it to kill Washington's chance for victory.

Al Solari of U. C. L. A. took the opening kickoff on his 20 and then led a series of off tackle smashes that carried 80 yards down the field and across the Washington goal. Solari scored the touchdown and Ken Snelling kicked the point.

Washington Takes Lead.

Washington started the second half as U. C. L. A. opened the game. From the U. C. L. A 47, Erickson dashed thru right guard, cut back and scampered for a touchdown. Fred Olson's placement tied the score. Washington followed this with a 65 yard march down to Bruin 5, and here, as U. C. L. A. stiffened, Olson kicked a placement to give the Huskies a 10 to 7 advantage.

U. C. L. A. Quarter Back Bob Waterfield passed to End Herb Wiener late in the third quarter. The pass was good for 23 yards and Wiener ran 6 yards to the goal line.

OREGON STATE TRIUMPHS.

Corvallis, Ore., Nov. 21 (AP).—Oregon State, scoring five touchdowns by air, rolled over the University of Oregon today, 39 to 2. It was the most lopsided score recorded in the 47 times the two teams have met in one of the west's oldest and most bitter gridiron rivalries.

Combining their own aerial attack with an alert defense that intercepted more Oregon passes than were completed, Oregon State scored in every period.

LAST NIGHT'S RESULTS.

Toronto, 8; Montreal, 0.

TORONTO, Nov. 21 (AP).—The Toronto Maple Leafs, Stanley cup champions, recaptured first place in the National Hockey league tonight by blanking Montreal, 8 to 0. It was the first shutout of the season for the Canadiens.

After a shaky start, Toronto took command midway thru the first period, led 4 to 0 after two periods, and wound up the proceedings by scoring four goals in the final session. The Canadiens had 34 shots at the goal, compared with 42 for the Leafs, but they never could pierce the barrier thrown up in the Toronto nets by Walter [Turk] Broda.

Every Toronto forward except Jack McLean and Billy Taylor profited in the scoring jag that sent the crowd of 13,940 home convinced the Stanley cup champions have the stuff again this winter. Dave [Sweeney] Schriner potted two goals, with the other six distributed among Gaye Stewart, Bob Davidson, Syl Apps, Lorne Carr, Norman [Bud] Poile, and Mel Hill.

A total of 16 bobbles were made, each team being guilty of eight.

It was a fumble which started the Bluejackets on their way to their touchdown. Jimmy Smith, Illinois captain, was standing on his own 45 yard line all set to catch a punt as the Bluejackets ends charged at him. A strong and tricky wind was doing stunts with the ball as it came down. The ball slid right thru Smith's hands and bounced around the turf. Fred Preston, Great Lakes end, fell on it on the Illinois 44. On third down, thereafter Bruce Smith delivered that 42 yard run which set up the touchdown.

An earlier fumble robbed Great Lakes of another scoring possibility when Bruce Smith lost control of the ball on the Illinois 4 and it rolled into the end zone, where Tony Butkovich recovered it for a touchback.

Tho only two Illinois passes were intercepted, both of these mishaps occurred when the Illini seemed ready to go somewhere. One of these interceptions stopped a brilliant third quarter Illini advance which had started on the Illinois 34. After working to the Bluejackets' 42, a combination forward and lateral from Jimmy Smith to Pfeifer to Tony Butkovich had just gained 25 yards putting the ball on the 17. Then Jimmy Smith's first down pass was intercepted on the goal line by Popov who ran the ball out to the 16.

Interception Hurts Illini.

The other interception occurred the next time Illinois got the ball after the Sailors, unable to gain after Popov's runback, had punted to their own 46. On the second play thereafter Herman Schneidman snared Griffin's toss.

Alex Agase, Illinois guard, who stole the ball and ran for a touchdown against Minnesota, has been tackling the ball quite a bit this season. He worked this stunt again today, jolting it out of Belichick's hands in the fourth quarter. It was recovered by Ray Grierson of Illinois on Great Lake's 43 but from there the Illini got nowhere.

MILLIKIN WINS 16TH STRAIGHT BY 7 TO 0 SCORE

Jacksonville, Ill., Nov. 21 [Special].—Millikin's attack bogged down in the mud today but Illinois college went down to defeat, 7 to 0. It was Millikin's 16th consecutive victory and clinched the Illinois College conference title.

Near the end of the second quarter, Millikin's only sustained march of the day carried 63 yards for a score. Otherwise, Illinois college was the better team as born out by the statistics. I. C. made 11 first downs to Millikin's eight, and Hudson, 210 pound freshman I. C. full back, outshone the Millikin stars, Wagner and Dahm.

Three times in the second half I. C. was within 15 yards of the Millikin goal but each time Millikin was able to stave off the goal threat. The last of these threats was in the last few minutes of the game when an I. C. drive carried from its own 20 yard line to the Millikin 5, only to crumble when Dahm intercepted a pass in the end zone. As against this I. C. activity, Millikin got as far as the enemy's 40 yard line but once during the second half.

Rice Hands Texas Christian 26-0 Defeat; Baylor, SMU Tie

Houston, Tex., Nov. 21 (AP).—The Rice Owls, their line functioning like a machine and paced by Windell Williams, a 190 pound end who also plays in the back field, crushed Texas Christian, 26 to 0, today to remain in the Southwest conference football race and virtually eliminate the Horned Frogs. The defeat, before 14,000, was one of the most one-sided for a T. C. U. team in a decade.

Dick Dwelle, full back, scored two touchdowns on line smashes and climaxed his big day with an 84 yard dash that brought another counter. Williams made one touchdown and Lindsay Bowen added two conversions. Lineup:

SMU, 6; BAYLOR, 6.

Waco, Tex., Nov. 21 (AP).—Southern Methodist tied Baylor, 6 to 6, today on a long fourth period touchdown pass from Frito Gonzales to Hardy Miller. The result definitely put SMU out of the running for the Southwest conference football championship, but left Baylor still with a mathematical chance.

After two scoreless periods in which the Bruins had two fair chances to tally, Baylor in the third period followed up a pass interception in midfield with a touchdown drive. Bill Coleman going over. The Mustangs went into the air, gambling on every play. Standing on his own 45, Gonzales passed 30 yards to Miller, who was in the clear. Miller got his fingers on the slick ball, held it, and dashed across for the tying score.

ALABAMA BEATS VANDERBILT.

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 21 (AP).—Alabama turned on the power here today to win, 27 to 7, over Vanderbilt before 17,000.

The winners drove 80 yards to score the first time they got their hands on the ball, with John August, fleet sophomore from Shadyside, O., providing the spark and making the touchdown on a 10 yard burst at right end.

Their next two counters culminated marches of 26 and 58 yards in the second and third periods. And their final tally was scored on a 50 yard run by Substitute Center Bill Baughman, who gathered in a flat pass and ran unmolested across the goal line.

UNBEATEN TULSA RALLIES TO TRIM CREIGHTON, 33-19

Omaha, Neb., Nov. 21 (AP).—Tulsa's Golden Hurricane overcame an early deficit to continue on its undefeated path, downing Creighton 33 to 19 today before a crowd of 9,000. The Tulsans clinched the Missouri Valley conference championship on their victory.

The Oklahoma team was given its most severe test of the season by the Bluejays, who unleashed a brilliant ground and aerial attack. For three quarters the teams fought it out on even terms, going into the last period with the score 19 to 19.

Tulsa was led to victory by the versatile Glenn Dobbs and Keithley, with Judd starring at end, as he snagged three touchdown passes. The Bluejays had several stars, Johnny Tedore, whose 63 yard run led to the first Creighton touchdown, and Al DiMarco, who hurled a 54 yard touchdown pass to Bill Brock in the second period and a 5 yard toss to the same Brock in the third.

VALPARAISO IS HUMBLED, 32 TO 0, BY ST. JOSEPH'S

Valparaiso, Ind., Nov. 21 (AP).—St. Joseph's college gained its 21st football victory without defeat here today, trouncing Valparaiso university, 32 to 0. The Crusaders mustered a threat only once in the first quarter. The victory gave St. Joseph a tie with Ball State for the Indiana conference championship.

George Ellsperman went over tackle in the first quarter for 67 yards and a touchdown, also scoring the extra point. Ellsperman did it again in the second quarter, running 30 yards but failing to kick the extra point. Pete Varini boosted his state scoring record with two tuochdowns in the third quarter. Ellsperman scored again in the fourth period when he took a punt and ran 65 yards for the score.

SEAHAWKS TOO POWERFUL FOR NEBRASKA, 46-0

Iowa City, Iowa, Nov. 21 [Special]—The Iowa Navy Pre-flight cadets, with power to spare, had everything their own way from the opening whistle until the final gun sounded, trouncing the Nebraska Cornhuskers, 46 to 0, before a scant crowd of 5,400.

The Cornhuskers, unable to crack the Pre-flight team's stalwart defense, got no further than the Seahawk 30, where they lost the ball on downs.

With the game only three minutes old the Seahawks made their first score, taking only nine plays to do the job. After a lateral from Dick Fisher to Ed Jankowski had put the ball on the 10, Fisher swept around end to score. George Svendsen place kicked the extra point.

Score Again Shortly.

Just six minutes later Fisher threw a short pass to Forest Evashevski in the end zone for another touchdown. Fisher and Jankowski had teamed to advance the ball to the 12. Then Fisher tossed one to Jankowski, who was downed on the 4. On the dead run toward the side lines, Fisher passed to Evashevski in the corner of the end zone.

Midway in the second quarter the Seahawks added another touchdown, this time by Jim Langhurst, who loped around end from the 7. Marshall Wells placekicked the extra point.

The Seahawks took Nebraska's kickoff on the 35 after the ball had gone out of bounds. A holding penalty on the first play set the Seahawks back to the 20. Then Bobby Swisher, former Chicago Bears' star half back, cut thru tackle, twisted by the secondary and galloped 80 yards to score after 30 seconds were gone in the second half.

Levoir Smashes Over.

Less than five minutes later Vernal [Babe] Levoir smashed his way from the 19 right thru center to score. Janowski place kicked the extra point.

Shortly after the final quarter opened Langhurst drove from the 2. Levoir added the point.

Levoir added the final points that gave the cadets their seventh victory and Nebraska its fifth loss in eight games.

ARMY ROLLS UP 40 TO 7 TRIUMPH OVER PRINCETON

Margin Is Largest in History of Series.

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—Army issued an impressive football communique today that it's more than ready for Navy next week. The Cadets took on the Princeton Tigers before 25,000 in Yankee stadium and chalked up a 40 to 7 victory for their biggest scoring spreed of the season. Transportation problems transplanted the game to New York from Princeton.

It served as nothing more than a good warmup for Army for next Saturday's service game at Annapolis. With a couple of reserve backs—Bob Woods and Tom Lombardo—hitting the jackpot for five touchdowns between them, the Cadets really piled it on the once proud Tiger, to turn in the most lopsided walloping in the half century history of this series.

Charge 82 Yards to Score.

In the first half, the Tigers managed to make only one first down. For the entire game, Princeton collected only seven of them against 17 for Army.

The West Pointers went 82 yards to score in the first 5 minutes of the game. Mazur tossed two passes for 43 yards in this drive and then heaved a 9 yarder to Lombardo for the touchdown, after line play had brought the ball within that distance of the goal.

The Cadets rang the bell twice within five minutes in the second quarter and Woods walloped the right side of the Princeton line for 1 yard and the third period score, after he, Lombardo, Anderson, and Jim Kelleher had chipped in on a 57 yard march.

Tigers Score Late.

Princeton came up with its tally early in the fourth period, but Army drove right back for its last two scores. Lineup:

DARTMOUTH, 26; COLUMBIA, 13.

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—Dartmouth's Indians walloped the Columbion Lions, 26 to 13, today in the last game of the year for both teams before 10,000 at Baker field.

Playing the last game of his varsity career, Pau Governali tied the national collegiate record of 19 touchdown passes in a season, set by Davey O'Brien of Texas Christian in 1938. He completed 11 of 19 for 224 yards, missing by only 15 yards the season record of 1,547 held by O'Brien and Bud Schwenk of Washington at St. Louis.

YOUR AIM MAY BE O. K.; MALLARD IS A WARY BIRD

26 Times Harder to Bag than Other Ducks.

BY BOB BECKER.

After a midwestern duck hunter wearily drags himself from an unsuccessful trip to get a bag of mallards there usually aren't many episodes of his day afield to comfort him in his bad luck. But he may get some consolation out of this fact: the mallard duck is 26 times more difficult to bag than the average of all other ducks which frequent the Illinois river country.

Frank Bellrose Jr., game technician of the state natural history survey, is the source of this bad news about the mallard. He has checked his records on the mallard population in the Illinois river valley each fall with the number killed during a season. And no matter how he figures the percentages it always comes out the same: The old greenheads are 26 times as hard to decoy, kill, and put in the game bag as other species.

Come Out Poor Seconds.

Even pintails or sprigs, which are wary birds, come out poor seconds when compared to mallards. Bellrose's population-kill study indicates that the spiketails are 4.6 times easier to get than the big greenheads. However, it's quite likely that the habits of the pintail may have something to do with this situation. The smart mallard picks out a big open lake or refuge to sit on during the day and he doesn't fly much unless the wind kicks up. Then at sundown the greenheads wing high overhead to the cornfields. Pintails fly about the water more than mallards, often coming within gun range more frequently than the greenheads.

In this study of which species of ducks are easy or difficult to get in the Illinois river country the game technician found that widgeon and gadwalls are 4 times easier to bag than pintails. The green winged teal also gets into the easy to get list. They bang around without discretion, or else fly so fast they don't take time to look for blinds.

Bluebill Leads the List.

The position of the bluebill is interesting. Bellrose says that the bluebill leads all the diving ducks in their ability to keep out of range of hunters. Even the canvasback is much easier to decoy and kill than the bluebill because they have a weakness for swinging over a stool of decoys. And the same holds true of the black jack or ringneck, a speedy little bird.

For several weeks now more than 2,000,000 mallards have been enjoying the Illinois river country, a major flyaway for waterfowl. They are cleaning up the cornfields at night, so a hunter sees huge flocks come in from the fields early in the morning. [The high flying birds are a beautiful sight in the morning sun.] But the way these smart birds sit quietly on big lakes and do little flying during the day often gives hunters a headache. The boys however, keep trying down the river. Not in years have blinds been in such demand as they are this season. At some of the day shooting places hunters have practically been standing in line trying to rent blinds for a day's hunt.

Both were captains of their teams.

Intensive workouts the next two days will be continued by Coach Arthur [Dutch] Lonborg of Northwestern, who for the third year in a row is handling the collegians. Lonborg's teams have won the two previous games, each by a two point margin.

NORTH CAROLINA, SEAHAWK SERVICE GAME CANCELED

Chapel Hill, N. C., Nov. 21 (AP).—Comm. O. O. Kessing of the North Carolina naval preflight school said today that the football game between the Preflight Cloudbusters and the Iowa Naval Preflight school, scheduled for Chapel Hill Dec. 12, had been canceled because of transportation difficulties.

The preflight school here originally had two home games booked in a 12 game schedule. Canceling of the Iowa naval preflight game leaves only the game with Colgate Dec. 5 to be played in the University of North Carolina's Kenan stadium.

ARKANSAS SETS OFF LATE RALLY TO UPSET DETROIT

Southwestern Team Snaps Losing Streak.

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 21. (AP).—Arkansas, spotting the University of Detroit a first period touchdown, came from behind to achieve a 14 to 7 upset today before 5,153 spectators.

Once beaten Detroit advanced 49 yards for an early touchdown, Elmer [Tippy] Madarik passing the final 8 yards to End Charley Ruth, but the razorbacks came back in the third period to tie the score when End Virgil Johnson seized a Detroit fumble in the end zone. Then with six minutes remaining, Arkansas clinched victory with a 34 yard march, Bob Fortes smashing over from the 2 for the touchdown.

The victory, ending a three-game losing streak, was Arkansas' third against six defeats. Detroit now has won five and lost two.

Wayne Marshall's interception of Madarik's pass on the fourth play of the third period preceded a 57 yard march in 12 plays, that ended at the 1 where Detroit staged a successful goalline stand. On the second play Henry Piper, standing in his end zone to punt, fumbled the pass from center and Johnson pounced on it. Felice Cialone's first of two conversions made the score, 7 to 7.

On the statistical side, each team had nine first downs; but Arkansas accumulated 215 yards by passing and rushing to Detroit's 164.

BLUES AFTER NO. 6.

The Austin Blues will go after their sixth straight victory today when they play the 22d Ward Republicans on the Blues' field at Harlem and North avenues.

Mississippi State Turns on Power to Win, 34-13

State College, Miss., Nov. 21 (AP).—After being held 7 to 7 at the half, Mississippi State broke loose in a wild display of power and, led by Blondy Black, crushed the University of Mississippi, 34 to 13, here today before 18,000. Black was the shining star of the game but was pushed for these honors by a 165 pound freshman, Sonny Boy Shelby, of the University who kept the losers very much in the ball game until the fourth quarter deluge.

NO SIR, all war tires will not be alike

Once more tires are rolling from Goodyear factories. Tires for the public, soon to be available to keep essential cars running.

They are, of course, wartime tires, built under wartime restrictions. They're made from reclaimed rubber, which means old rubber regenerated for further use—the only rubber now available for civilian needs.

In all fairness we must tell you that such tires cannot come up to our standard prewar tires. But as Goodyear builds them they have advantages you need to know.

These Goodyear "extras" make a difference

First, in the Goodyear War Tire you get that priceless ingredient, Goodyear's "know how." That's more important now than ever—because it takes more skill to build a serviceable tire from regenerated stock than from new rubber.

Second, there is Goodyear's experience in reclaiming rubber. We operate our own regenerating plant, solely to supply our own needs. This insures the closest technical cooperation between our reclaim experts and tire designers in producing a better product.

Third, another special advantage is that the cord forming the body of this tire is made right in Goodyear's own cotton mills, under rigid quality control. It's our best prewar grade of automobile tire cord — there's no shortage, so we don't stint its use.

Fourth, it's a handsome stalwart tire, molded in the popular Goodyear tread patterns that proved longest wearing in billions of miles of service.

Road-tested months ago

And most important of all, it is not a quick-built emergency tire. It was developed in the Goodyear research laboratories many months ago, when we first saw the rubber shortage coming.

On the basis of thorough tests on our own test fleet, we can tell you that the Goodyear War Tire — when driven in accordance with wartime driving rules — will give you long and honest service.

Who can buy the Goodyear War Tire?

Your local rationing board decides. But your Goodyear dealer can give you complete information on latest rulings; he'll help you prepare your application for Goodyears — the tire that has stood first in quality for more than a quarter-century.

YOUR FIRST "NEW TIRES" WILL PROBABLY BE YOUR PRESENT TIRES RECAPPED

Owners of essential cars must first have their present tires recapped, if in suitable condition. Here skill counts, too—there's a big difference in recapping workmanship. Have this important work done by experts with proper facilities—your Goodyear dealer. You'll be repaid by many months' extra service from your recaps.

To make your tires last longest, install LIFEGUARDS — Goodyear's modern safety inner tube that keeps casing inflated after puncture or blowout, enabling you to stop safely without cutting or ripping tire. Available on regular tube certificate.

Games Today

Chicago Bears vs. Detroit Lions in Detroit.
Chicago Cardinals vs. Pittsburgh Steelers in Pittsburgh.
Green Bay Packers vs. New York Giants in New York.
Brooklyn Dodgers vs. Washington Redskins in Washington.

The Chicago Bears, who passed the crisis of their campaign for the National league championship by overwhelming the Green Bay Packers last Sunday, will go coasting into an easier stage of their effort today when they engage the Lions in Detroit. Inasmuch as the Lions have been unable to beat any one in the nine previous games which they have played this season, it is considered quite unlikely that they will accomplish a victory at the expense of the Bears today.

The Cardinals also will be on the road, opposing the Steelers in Pittsburgh. New York fans will get their first look at the Packers in some time when the Green Bay team takes on the Giants this afternoon. The Dodger-Redskin game in Washington will complete the day's activities.

Bears Not Mathematically In.

The Bears, with eight victories, no defeats and three games to play as they enter today's encounter, are not yet mathematically certain of the championship. However, the only way they could fail would be to go into an astounding slump while the second place team, Green Bay, was doing some heroic work. The Packers have won six and lost two with three games to play including today's.

Today's engagement in Detroit will pit the strongest team in the league against one of the weakest in most departments of the statistics. The Bears have made 37 touchdowns while the Lions have been getting only 5. On total points the comparison is 266 to 35. The Bears have accumulated 2,779 yards while the Lions have been getting 1,945.

The Cardinals, in meeting the Steelers, will be playing a game which was postponed from last Sept. 27. They have only one more home appearance on their schedule—their game with the Bears on Dec. 6. Pittsburgh's Bill Dudley, playing sensationally in his first year in the league, is expected to give them trouble today.

They'll See Isbell, Hutson.

The game between the Packers and the Giants will give New York fans a view of the Cecil Isbell-Don Hutson passing combination in action. The Packers will be making their first appearance in New York in several seasons.

The Washington Redskins have a chance to put a mathematical clincher on the eastern title today. If they beat the Dodgers, their total will be nine won and one lost with one more game to play. Pittsburgh, the second place team, has won five and lost three and has three games to play including today's.

Doublrab Wins Feature Race at Bowie Meet

Bowie, Md., Nov. 21 (AP).—After a number of unsuccessful attempts at races other than sprints, Mrs. Tilyou Christopher's Doublrab finally won one today as he just lasted to win the $4,350 Prince George's Autumn handicap, feature of the Bowie program. He covered the mile and a sixteenth in 1:47 to defeat Mrs. E. D. Jacobs' Flaught by half a length. Star Copy was third and Equifox fourth in the field of eight.

Both attendance and mutuel handle at this isolated track were the best of the fall meeting. Approximately 9,000 saw the afternoon's sport.

Despite his previous failure to win over a distance, Doublrab was the favorite of the crowd, and returned $6.80, $4.10 and $2.80 for $2. It was Doublrab's 10th victory in 33 starts this season, and the winner's share of the purse boosted his earnings for the year to $56,400.

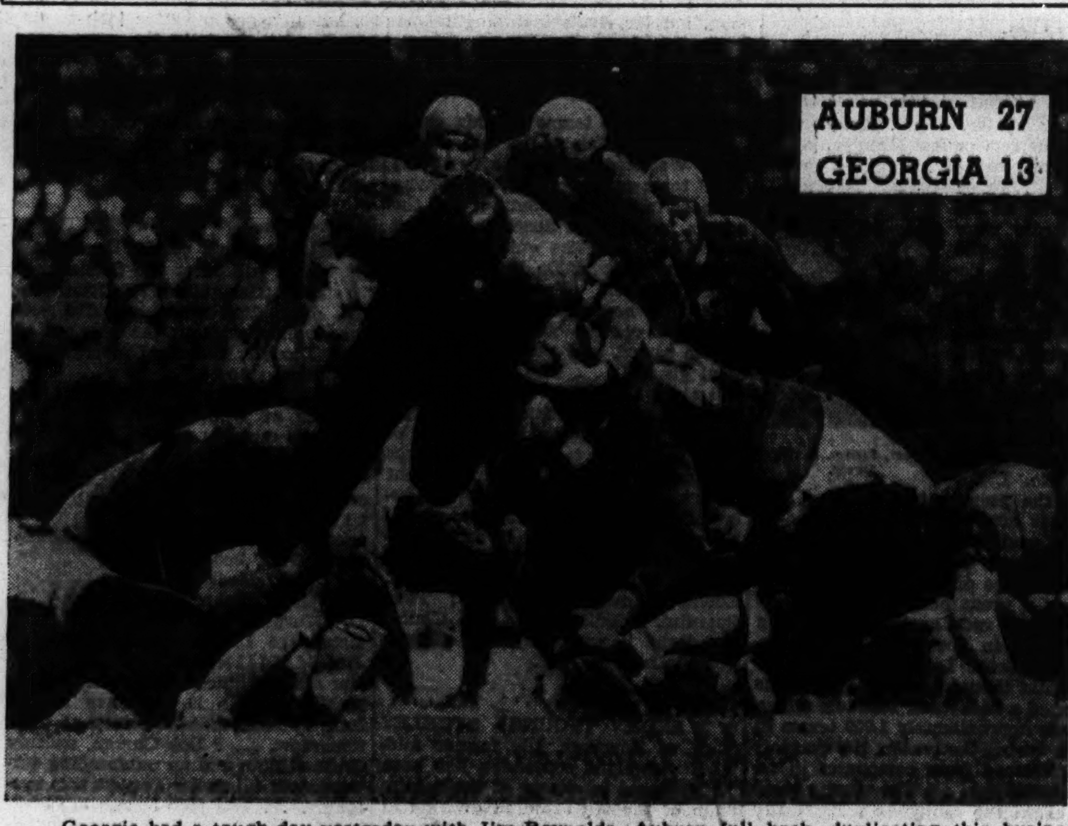
A BAD AFTERNOON FOR GEORGIA



Georgia had a tough day yesterday with Jim Reynolds, Auburn full back, duplicating this business all afternoon. Here he is smashing to a first down on the Georgia 3 yard line. A minute later Auburn had one of its four touchdowns which ended in a humiliating 27-13 defeat for Georgia.

Auburn Pops Georgia Title Bubble, 27-13

had seen all season—was the difference between the two teams. It throttled Georgia's running attack, and rushed its passers until All-America Sinkwich and Charlie Trippi thought the roof was falling in.

Backs Play Major Rôle.

But the charging of Auburn's line would have made little difference without the spectacular running of a great pair of backs—Reynolds at full back and Gafford at tail back.

Operating often from a drunken-looking "T" formation, mixed with variations of a single wing attack, they slashed Georgia's line like a high speed harvester. Between them they rolled up the astounding total of 355 yards by rushing while holding Sinkwich and company ["dream back field" and all] to a net of 37 on the ground.

Georgia threw 34 passes and completed just 12—a gauge of the terrific pressure Auburn was putting on. Yardage by air was 190 for Georgia, of which 177 was credited to Sinkwich. With 31 yards additional by rushing, he pushed his total for the season to 2,023 yards, breaking the previous national record for total offense established last year by Bud Schwenk of Washington university [St. Louis] with 1,928 yards.

Sinkwich Scores First.

Sinkwich scored Georgia's first touchdown within four minutes of the kickoff, teaming with Trippi to go 58 yards in 10 plays.

Then Auburn began messing up the script. Reynolds lashed thru the midst of the line, and Gafford sliced inside the tackles. In 13 plays and four successive first downs, they rolled 80 yards to a touchdown. After an exchange of punts, Auburn was off again with a 71 yard drive which culminated in a scoring lateral from Aubrey Clayton to Monk Gafford.

Again Auburn Scores.

Taking a Sinkwich punt on the Georgia 47 Gafford scooted back to the 18 before being stopped, and seven plays later Reynolds banged thru tackle for a third touchdown.

A punt by Zack Jenkins that went out of bounds on the Auburn 27 set up Georgia's only other touchdown. Sinkwich lost 9 yards for the touchdown.

It might have ended that way, but Auburn came in swinging after the kickoff. Sinkwich, trying desperately for another touchdown, failed to connect on one pass, was rushed and tackled for a 6 yard loss on the next try, and then was rushed again and felled behind his own goal. The ball spilled from his hands, and Fagan Canzoneri pounced on it to make the final score, 27 to 13.

GEORGIA TECH WINS.

Atlanta, Nov. 21 (AP).—Georgia Tech kept alive its bid for national honors today by coming back from a dismal start to whip Florida, 20 to 7, for their ninth successive victory as Georgia tumbled stunningly.

The undefeated-untied Techs, rallying around southpaw Freshman Clint Castleberry and another little back, Davey Eldredge, overpowered Florida in the second half. About 15,000 fans saw the game.

The engineers put together only one drive before the intermission, converting it into a 7 to 0 lead. Then, with the regulars starting the second half, the Techs clipped off a touchdown in each of the last two quarters.

92 Yard Drive.

The winners got their first score early in the second quarter on a 92 yard drive. Castleberry began running and passing with telling effect, hitting first one Engineer, then another until the 'Gators were backed up to their 33. Then Sophomore Eddie Prokop passed 33 yards to Ralph Jordan on the goal for the touchdown. Jack Helms converted with a placement. A pass set up the 'Gator score late in the second. Bill Corry, Florida's busy full back, then got to the 16 in three cracks. A 15 yard penalty for roughing put it on the 1 and O'Neil Hill slipped thru center for the tally. Bob Henry's placement tied the count.

A 45 yard march put Tech ahead midway the third period. Castleberry's 25 yard punt return carried to Florida's 45. Ralph Plaster set up the scoring play, the Statue of Liberty, by ramming center for 4 yards. Then Eldredge took the ball from Pass Faking Castleberry's hand and raced 41 yards to goal.

Marshall Intercepts Pass.

Jack Marshall started Tech's last touchdown drive by intercepting a pass at midfield in the fourth quarter. Plaster, Castleberry, and Marshall put together their running, passing and receiving to reach Florida's 1 where Castleberry went over. Plaster placekicked the point.

TENNESSEE WINS, 26-0.

Knoxville, Tenn., Nov. 21 (AP).—Tennessee brushed aside Kentucky today, 26 to 0, before 20,000. The largest home crowd of the season saw the Vols roll up a 20 to 0 half time score, then relax as they played defensively during the last two quarters.

Kentucky, crippled by the absence of Ace Passer Phil Cutchin, loosened only one drive which bogged on Tennessee's 19 yard line.

OPA CLARIFIES AN IMPORTANT GAS RATION QUESTION

Motorists May Use Best, Not Shortest Route.

BY HAL FOUST.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21.—In applying for the "B" [supplemental] gasoline ration book, a motorist may use the best route rather than the shortest route in calculating the mileage between his home and his job. The Office of Price Administration made this decision today in response to an inquiry from THE TRIBUNE'S automobile editor.

It's a decision of importance to Chicago and suburbs due to peculiarities of the city's motorways. The development of the lake front boulevards during the last two decades and the failure to build comparable facilities in other sections of the city has distorted the traffic pattern of the metropolitan area.

Add Miles to Reach Drive.

A large portion of the southsiders and of the northsiders add miles to their trips to and from the central business district to use the outer drives. It's quicker and safer than going more direct routes.

We explained to the OPA spokesman that gasoline allotments based upon the most direct routes between homes and employment in the central business district would be contrary to the purpose of rationing. It would not conserve tires, for example, for a local ration board to induce a motorist to use Milwaukee avenue rather than the Outer drive to and from the far northwest side.

Our argument was that the routes upon which "B" ration books are to be based should be those routes easiest on tires and not necessarily those routes with the shortest mileage. For example, the congestion of Milwaukee avenue, with its street cars, trucks, stoplights, pedestrians, parking, cross traffic and stretches of rough pavement, would wear tires more than traveling a longer distance to use the Outer drive.

Many Other Examples.

There are hundreds or thousands of other examples in the city, each familiar to habitual users, where motorists regularly drive extra distance to avoid delays, bumps or risks. These annoyances, inconveniences and unpleasantnesses, in almost all instances, contribute to tire wear. Stopping, starting and turning use more rubber than free rolling. Gas rationing should not force drivers to switch to shorter routes, just because they are shorter and regardless of consideration of tire wear.

Relative risks, we argued, are another factor in deciding which of alternate routes to and from work should be used by the ration boards in measuring gasoline allotments for necessary driving. Accidents daily cause an appreciable destruction of tires. Narrow escapes—and merely quick stops to avoid hitting something—also burn excessive quantities of tread, leaving traces of rubber on the pavement.

The OPA headquarters here agreed with this pholosophy. A spokesman said that local rationing boards, acquainted with local conditions, may give weight to these tire wearing factors in determining which of alternate routes should be used to measure gasoline requirements for necessary driving.

Small Car Owners Best Off.

Actually, we believe that gasoline as well as tires will be saved in taking the longer of alternate routes where the additional mileage is moderate and where the difference in driving conditions is appreciable. But the amount of the gasoline allotments is determined upon a mileage basis, one gallon for each 15 miles, regardless of how many miles per gallon the applicant is going to be able to get. [You can start envying the owners of little cars and pitying owners of big cars.]

So with an allotment based on a preferred route with more miles, an applicant will receive more gasoline than he would were the allotment based on a shorter and less desirable route. And he'll also get more miles per gallon, as well as more miles per tire.

An illustration was furnished in a letter to the automobile editor from B. W. Bennett of Chicago. It related that there are two routes between his home and his business, one 26.3 miles and the other 23.9 miles. The longer has five stop signs and eight stop and go lights with considerable open country driving. The shorter has 15 stop signs and 13 stop and go lights and is more congested. He asked for our judgment on which required more gasoline.

Extra Stops Take Gasoline.

It's our judgment that the extra stops, followed by gear shifting with its speeding of the engine, would require more gasoline for the shorter route. This would depend upon how rapidly the driver accelerates. The additional tire wear on the shorter route would be influenced by how rapidly the driver decelerates.

So with the policy announced today by OPA, Mr. Bennett, if he qualifies as eligible for a "B" book, should get a supplemental gas allowance based upon the longer mileage. He should get more gasoline for his trips between his home and his business, but he probably won't have to use as much gasoline as he would in traveling the shorter route. This might sound unreasonable were it not that gasoline rationing, outside of the 17 eastern states where there is a petroleum shortage, is for the purpose of conserving tires rather than to reduce motor fuel consumption.

WPB FROWNS ON INNER TUBES FOR SCRAP PROPOSAL

BY HAL FOUST.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21.—The War Production board today discouraged, practically killed, a proposal that motorists surrender their inner tubes to the scrap collectors and adjust their casings for use without the tubes. The proposal was advanced by Victor F. Barnett, chairman and administrator of the Tulsa war transportation committee.

The advocate said his plan would ease any shortage of reclaimable rubber in America. There are approximately 140 million inner tubes, weighing about 245,000 tons, on the passenger cars of this country. The capacity output of all reclamation facilities has been reported by the government at 340,000 tons a year. The Baruch committee last month reported that rubber now in scrap piles is adequate to supply capacity reclamation for the next 18 months.

Has Logs of 300 Cars.

Also undisputed by WPB is Barnett's claim that tires can be operated without inner tubes. He advocates a method accredited to John B. McGay, Tulsa manufacturer. The method is not patented nor copyrighted. Also it is not indorsed by the rubber administrator's office.

Barnett, in a circularized letter, said his committee has the logs of 300 cars with 600 tubeless tires that have been driven up to 10,000 miles without a single tire failure.

However, a spokesman for the rubber administrator's office of WPB said that a more economical use than scrap for the country's stock of inner tubes is to use them as inner tubes. The inner tube, he pointed out, reinforces the casing in addition to retaining compressed air. And as the months pass with little rubber for civilians, there will be an increasing number of casings that will need all of the reinforcement they can get, the spokesman added.

McGay Method Described.

Nevertheless, practical or impractical, it's an interesting suggestion to mull over, this idea of Barnett's. And there may be some car owners, ineligible for replacements and lacking an inner tube, who might want to experiment. The McGay method is described as follows:

1. Remove casing and tube from rim. Inspect inside of casing and patch any small nail holes or slight fabric breaks. Vulcanize patch any larger holes or fabric breaks. Clean bead and sand smooth any rough places. Some brands of tires have four small corrugations equally spaced around bead. These must be ground off level with a small emery wheel or hand grinder.

2 Clean inside of rim and be sure point where tire contacts rim is smooth and clean. Insert valve in hole in rim.

Check for Leaks in Water.

3. Mount casing on rim and press outside tire bead as far as possible on its rim shoulder. Place wheel on a block or can. Remove valve core so that air may be applied quickly. Apply air at same time beating on casing lightly with hand or mallet so that lower bead will contact rim and form seal. As soon as casing snaps into place on rim, apply valve core and bring up to normal running pressure. Submerge whole tire and wheel in water and check for leaks. If any are found mark on outside of tire with grease pencil, demount tire and apply patch inside the casing.

4. Most satisfactory results can be obtained by putting into the casing from one to two quarts of any good tire sealing fluid of which there are several on the market. This tends to seal all small holes which might be missed in inspection.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Many machine tools once discarded by the automobile industry because the advent of new model cars made them obsolete are now going back into service on war work, comments the Automotive Council for War Production. Several companies kept a number of the old machines around their plants "just in case," altho they were thought to be on their way to the scrap pile.

This foresight is now paying dividends to the war effort. One instance mentioned was the case of a machine tool known as a vertical boring mill. It was once used to make rims for automobile wheels. A few years ago the size and type of the wheel changed and most companies got rid of the machines that produced the outdated rims.

Then came the war and the surge in the production of aviation engines. Trouble was encountered with a certain part during tests. It was found that the only equipment that could be used to correct the trouble with the part was the old vertical boring mill. A search disclosed only three had been saved. They are going full speed now.

In another case a serious bottleneck in the production of certain trucks for the army was eliminated by adapting to war production several gear cutting machines which had been lying around in the "grease," unused since the advent of the hypoid gears in late model cars.

Army specifications called for a special joint in the front end of the trucks, which enabled them to be turned around without the loss of power in the front wheels. A joint of this type had been developed about 30 years ago for the front end of power driven racers, but was not generally known to the automotive industry.

Machines capable of milling a complicated part within the joint were scarce. The only ones available were the few the inventor had designed and built years ago and these were being used by an automotive parts supplier.

Then some one thought of the gear cutting machines. An ingenious engineer got busy and adapted them and now they are doing a fine job for the war.

H. J. Klingler, general manager of the Pontiac division of the General Motors corporation, reports that the up-grading of production employés to tool repair men has worked out well and is doing much to ease the scarcity of toolmakers. "The general belief was that a machine tool man couldn't be made in two years," said Klingler. "Today we are doing it in about four months."

VOICE OF TRAFFIC

FINDS HIS CAR DAMAGED.

Chicago, Nov. 11.—I am employed at the aircraft assembly plant near Des Plaines. I live in a section of Chicago where transportation to the plant is very difficult. Therefore, I must use my car.

I came out of the plant this evening to find that some thoughtless citizen had collided with the left rear side of the car doing serious damage to it. No one seemed to be present at the time of the collision and the party involved neglected to leave any identification.

It seems to me that people should try to be more careful in times like these. When they are unfortunate enough to be involved in an accident they might at least explain to some one as to how it happened, as they know how difficult it is to repair or replace automobiles. WILLIAM CORBETT.

A TRUCK DRIVER AND A GENTLEMAN.

Chicago, Nov. 11.—Tonight as usual the truck driver passed our home at about 9:10 p. m. He has made this trip for many months, going east on Argyle street and turning north on Rockwell street at a speed of 15 or 20 miles an hour. He has always been careful but usually never met any one at the corner.

Tonight, however, he came to the crossing at the same time as a couple with a baby buggy who got into a bad spot. The driver didn't blow his horn or in any way confuse the couple. Instead he stopped at once and gave them the right of way. Otherwise there might have been an accident.

It is a pleasure to pay a compliment instead of always fault finding in these days when our minds and nerves are strained. O. A. HILDEBRAND.

East Lansing, Mich., Nov. 21 [Special].—Michigan State, led by Dick Kieppe and Morgan Gingrass, maintained its mastery over West Virginia this afternoon and scored a 7 to 0 victory over the Mountaineers before 6,378 spectators at Macklin field.

The Spartans opened a sustained drive in the first period and marched 60 yards for the only score of the game. The touchdown was made by Gingrass from the 1 after the West Virginia line had stopped the Michigan State full back on his first two attempts to cross over.

Fumble Paves Scoring Path.

The Spartans received their opportunity in the opening period when George Radulescu recovered a fumble by Al Martin on the Michigan State 40. The State drive began to move, sparked by a 22 yard run by Gingrass that moved the ball to the West Virginia 30. Dick Kieppe added 6 yards and again Gingrass broke into the clear and was not stopped until he had raced to the Mountaineers' 7. An offside penalty moved the ball to the 2.

Kieppe picked up a yard but the West Virginia line dug in and shoved back two Spartan attempts to score. However, on fourth down, Gingrass hit center and went over for the touchdown. Walter Pawlowski, injured regular right half back, came into the game and added the extra point with Bill Millikin holding the ball and the Spartans took a seven point lead.

Mountaineers Try Passes.

In the second quarter West Virginia took to the air in an attempt to overcome the Michigan State lead but an alert Spartan secondary broke up every attempt. The Spartans advanced to the West Virginia 39 yard line late in the period but the running attack stalled.

Exchanges of punts which opened the second half gave Michigan State the ball on its own 12. Edo Mencotti broke into the clear but was tripped by Dick McElwee on the 29.

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 21 [Special].—Marquette university will conclude its most successful football season in a half dozen years tomorrow afternoon against a big Camp Grant eleven in the Hilltop stadium.

Coach Tom Stidham's Marquette team thus far has won six games and lost two, so that a victory tomorrow would give it a record of seven and two, the same as that compiled by the Hilltoppers' 1936 Cotton Bowl aggregation.

Has 212 Pound Line.

Camp Grant invades Milwaukee as gridiron champions of the army and with a line that averages 212 pounds from end to end. Lieut. Glen Rose, the Warriors' coach, has two exceptional backs in Quarter Back Stan Stasica, formerly of South Carolina, and Half Back Reino Nori, De Kalb Teachers' star who played with the Chicago Bears.

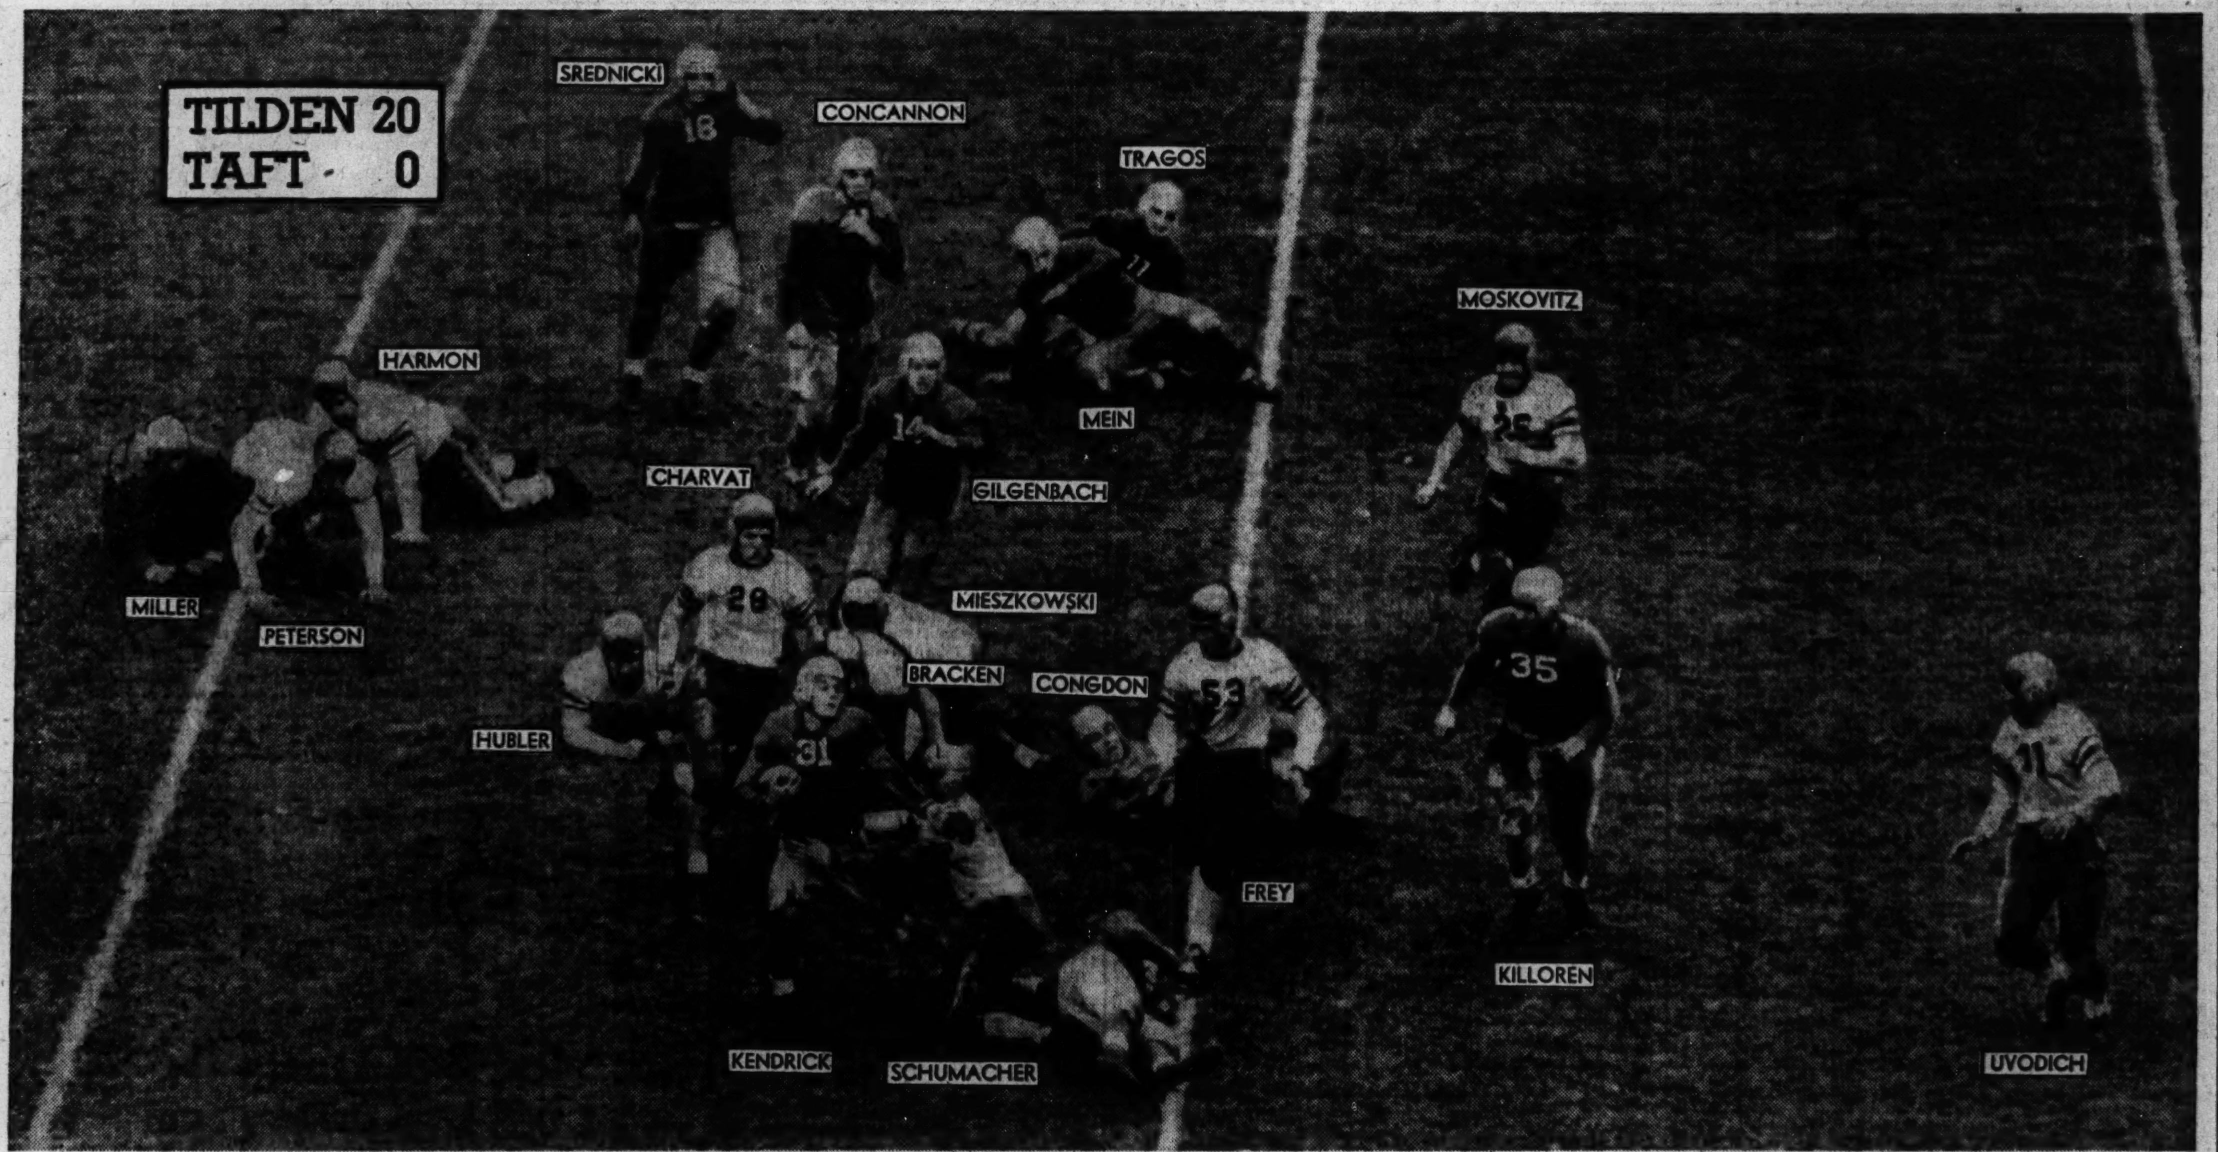
Two former Marquette players—Full Back Doug Renzel and Guard Dick Bergner—also are in the soldiers' lineup.

Hope for Fast Field.

Marquette sees little hope of penetrating Camp Grant's big line, and is hoping for a fast field so that Half Back Johnny Strzykalski's passes may click. The Milwaukee Polish boy has been an outstanding sophomore on an otherwise veteran team. His duel with Stasica should be the highlight of the day.

With Half Back Ray Carlson and Reserve End Jack Hildebrandt off the casualty list, the entire Hilltop squad is intact for its final game.

TAFT SCORING THREAT FLOPS ON 9 YARD LINE IN TITLE GAME



Taft High school's Paul Kendrick (No. 31 with ball), led his team's march to the Tilden 9 yard line in yesterday's game in Soldiers' field. At this point, after three plays had failed to gain, Taft tried a fake place kick. Kendrick is shown just before he was downed as he tried to go around his right end. Tilden then took possession of the ball on its 11 yard line. Tilden won, 20 to 0, to retain the City High School league championship, and will meet either Leo or Fenwick for the city prep title.

TILDEN RETAINS CITY TITLE BY BEATING TAFT

dich passed 20 yards to Bob Charvat, right end, who fell as he caught the pass on the 4. Schumacher went to the 2 but Taft was guilty of holding and Tilden had a first down on the Taft 2 yard line. Schumacher then went over for his first touchdown. Al Frey, Tilden's automatic placekicker, booted the conversion.

Shortly afterwards a Tilden scoring threat fizzled when an attempted field goal by Frey from the Taft 31 missed. Norm Krueger, Tilden's center, recovered Bill Lingenfelder's fumble on the Eagles' 24. Three line plays netted only 2 yards and Frey made his attempt which sailed under the cross bar.

Taft Has Opportunity.

A Tilden fumble, by Schumacher on Jack Congdon's second half kickoff gave Taft one of its two scoring opportunities. Nick Tragos, Taft's center, recovered Schumacher's fumble on the Tilden 27. Taft was penalized 5 yards on the first play for being offside but Lingenfelder went around left end for 10 yards and Paul Kendrick reversed around the other end for 13 yards and a first down on the Tilden 9.

Tilden's line then showed at its defensive best. Lingenfelder lost 2. Congdon's pass, intended for Dick Doebler, sailed into the end zone over his head. Kendrick was held to a yard gain. On a fake field goal attempt with Kendrick circling left end, the Tilden forwards swarmed about him and pulled him down on the 11 where the Blue Devils took possession the ball.

Then came the sizzling final quarter where Tilden's superb condition began to show. Taft, using a pass play, Bob Miller to Jim Srednicki, which gained 25 yards in the air and 8 by Srednicki's power reached the Tilden 25. Again Tilden stopped the aerial attack, altho Miller completed an 8 yard pass to Julian Byrdy before Tilden took the ball over on downs on its own 17.

Tilden Marches Again.

The march for the second Tilden touchdown began. Assisted by a 5 yard time out penalty on Taft, Uvodich made first down on his 30. Maratea went around left end for 17 yards and a first down on the Tilden 47. Uvodich powered his way off tackle for 10 and another first down. Schumacher picked up 15 yards in two off tackle smashes for a first down on Taft's 28. Maratea lost 2, but Uvodich passed 23 yards to Charvat who was downed on the 7. It took three plunges by Schumacher to get his second touchdown and again Frey kicked the extra point.

The third touchdown came as a result of a poor kick by Mike Kleczewski, subbing for Congdon, which gave Tilden possession on Taft's 18. After Uvodich and Schumacher each gained 2, Taft suffered another 5 yard penalty for too much time out and Schumacher went to the 5 for a first down.

Penalty Only Slows Drive.

Uvodich failed to gain on an attempted left end run, but Tilden's back field was ruled in motion and the Blue Devils were penalized 5 yards to the Eagles' 10. Uvodich passed to Maratea on the 3. Uvodich made 2 and then went over for the touchdown. Statistics:

Tilden Happy Over Victory; Taft Plans for Next Year

Taft suffered a severe case of too much Eddie Uvodich and Ray Schumacher, according to the concensus of the Taft High school Eagles, as they came quietly into their locker room under the east stands of Soldiers' field after undergoing a 20 to 0 whipping by Tilden's Blue Devils yesterday afternoon.

However, the Taft youngsters were not as unhappy as they might have been as they took off their Blue and Yellow uniforms for the last time this season. Most of them, juniors, were confident—as they shouted words of praise across the locker room—that they would redeem themselves next year.

Tilden Jubilant, Incoherent.

Across the field, in the Tilden locker room, the picture was somewhat different. The jubilant Tilden players were incoherent as they endeavored to express the pleasure which the victory had given them.

Still in the mud-streaked uniforms in which they carried the Tilden colors to their second consecutive Public High School league championship, the hilarious Blue Devils suspended their mutual congratulations in the locker room only long enough to pose for a group picture.

Praise Given Taft Team.

Immediately following the photographer's last flash, the room became a maelstrom of frenzied activity as the entire squad voiced its happiness in one concerted yell. But even in the first flush of victory Tilden remembered the courageous Taft players who withstood for almost two periods the savage onslaughts of Uvodich and Schumacher.

"The way they completed that first double lateral I thought we were goners," was the comment of Al Frey, Tilden's accurate placement kicker. "Three men handled the ball, and did such a good job that we were completely confused. And, gosh, that Jack Congdon and Bob Miller certainly are great ball players."

Tom Wigglesworth, the team's manager, allowed that Miller and Congdon were among the best passers he has seen in his four years at the central section school. "The way those fellows threw the ball around gave us plenty of worries—and against the wind, too."

Tom was referring to the wind that swept down the field from the north and made all passing toward the south end hazardous.

Wanted Brother to See.

The only regret that Schumacher seemed to have as he relaxed on the bench before his locker was that his brother, Hal, was not among the 10,000 who looked on. Hal, a former star of Purdue university's football team, was prevented from attending because of duties at Camp Grant. Ray expressed the hope yesterday that he might emulate Hal's success at Purdue.

As the tumult died, and the boys began to leave the room, they already were thinking of another game—a game in which they will play for the city championship next Saturday and maybe gain revenge for the trouncing which Leo's Catholic leaguers gave them last season.

EAST CHICAGO'S POWER CRUSHES SOUTH BEND, 27-6

East Chicago, Ind., Nov. 21 [Special].—Washington of East Chicago unleashed plenty of power on the soggy turf of Roosevelt field today to humble Washington of South Bend, 27 to 6, in the 13th annual playoff for the Northern Indiana High School conference football championship.

East Chicago, winner of the western division title with a record of eight successive triumphs, made the South Bend Panthers the victims of their top performance of the season. The defeat was the first of the season for South Bend after nine straight victories. One year ago Lew Wallace of Gary defeated South Bend Washington in the conference playoff and was awarded the mythical Indiana High school championship.

No. 1 Team for 1942.

East Chicago Washington, by reason of the decisive manner in which it handled more highly regarded South Bend Washington, no doubt will be recognized as the Hoosier state's No. 1 schoolboy football team for 1942.

East Chicago's Senators got the jump in the first quarter when Frank Lucas covered a South Bend fumble on the South Bend 26 yard line. The Senators needed only six plays to score, with "Deacon" Jones skittering into the end zone. East Chicago drove 91 yards for its touchdown in the second quarter. Capt. Art Murakowski plunged over from a yard out after having reeled off a 48 yard run.

Consolation for South Bend.

South Bend got its consolation score when Ernie Zalejski took a pass from Bill Klemczewski for a 58 yard touchdown.

The Senators struck back in the third quarter as Jones got loose for a 79 yard run across the goal line. They scored again on the first play of the fourth quarter with Lucas reversing around his left end to climax a 41 yard drive.

M'AFEE STARS AS JACKSONVILLE BEATS PENSACOLA

Pensacola, Fla., Nov. 21 (AP).—George McAfee, Jacksonville Navy's great triple threat back, provided the difference as the Flyers defeated Pensacola Navy's Goslings, 16 to 10, before 4,000 fans at air station field today.

The Jacksonville team put over two touchdowns in the third quarter to go with a field goal scored in the final moments of the first half.

McAfee, former Duke and Chicago Bears ball carrier, engineered both Jacksonville touchdown drives.

Eureka High School Ends Year Undefeated, Untied

Eureka, Ill., Nov. 29 [Special].—Eureka High school finished the football season undefeated and untied, winning nine straight games, scoring 298 points to the opponents' 19. The star of the team was Mike Chianakas, who hopes by the end of the school year in June to be the school's first 16 letter winner. Chianakas, an excellent running back, intercepted at least one pass in eight consecutive battles this fall.

Leo and Fenwick Will Battle Today for Catholic Crown

The Leo Lions and the Fenwick Friars of Oak Park, finalists in the Catholic league high school championship football game this afternoon are expected to draw a crowd of 15,000 to 20,000 as no other prep or professional games are scheduled. The game will be played in Soldiers' field with the kickoff scheduled for 2 o'clock.

Leo under the coaching régime of A. L. [Whitey] Cronin will be endeavoring to capture its sixth Catholic league title and third in succession. Fenwick will be seeking its first league championship since 1936 when it defeated Leo for the title.

This is the fourth meeting between these two champions for supremacy of the Catholic league. Fenwick will be out to defeat Leo, the favorite and defending champion, and square their postseason series at two victories apiece. Leo, paced by Henry [Babe] Baranowski, romped to an easy 20 to 0 victory last year.

Winner Meets City Champion.

The winner of this game will then represent the Catholic league in the ninth annual prep charity and title game on Saturday, Nov. 28, against Tilden, the city league champion. The proceeds of this charity game will increase the funds of the Chicago Servicemen's center.

Each enters today's game undefeated in Catholic league competition, having won six consecutive games. Each with one exception experienced no great difficulty in clinching their respective championships. Leo received a scare from Mount Carmel, defeating the latter, 6 to 0, on a four yard spot pass from Bob Murphy to Bob Baggott in the third period. Fenwick recovered a St. Mel fumble during a scoreless battle played on a muddy field with only four minutes to play and shoved over a touchdown for a 6 to 0 victory over the only real opposition it encountered.

Leo Strong on Offense.

Leo has a better offensive team, scoring 166 points for an average of 27⅔ points per game with Fenwick averaging a fraction under 22 points a game. Of the two, the Friars have the better defensive team, restricting its opponents to seven points in six games. Leo has been scored upon by four south section teams and has yielded 27 points in its six games.

The Lions have a well balanced back field and numerous reserves. The back field will be under the direction of Bob Murphy, at the quarter back berth. Murphy is a smart strategist, an excellent passer and a brilliant runner. Co-Capt. Bob Hanlon, the full back, is a hard plunging back, especially proficient in off tackle smashes. Bob Carr, the right half back, is a splendid blocking back and also can carry the ball. The newest Leo star is Robert J. Kelly, triple threat left half back. Kelly is top scorer in the league and in addition has set up numerous touchdowns for his colleagues to push over. He is an excellent kicker and got off two kicks of more than 60 yards in the Mount Carmel game.

Fenwick Back Field Light.

Against this array of stars, Coach Tony Lawless is expected to start a back field comparatively lighter, but somewhat faster than the combined Leo back field. Either Jim Padula or Hal Frederick will direct the team from the quarter back spot with Frank McDonald and Jimmy Martin, a pair of shifty running backs in the half back positions. At full back, Lawless has Jackie Higgins, a twisting, squirming runner who can also pass, punt, and plunge.

The lines will be nearly matched in weight and speed with the Fenwick forward wall slightly a better defensive line than that of Leo's. The main difference probably will come in the reserves where Leo is better fortified than the Friars are. Probable lineups:

FORDHAM SHOWS MISSOURI WITH A 20 TO 12 VICTORY

Last Minute Touchdown Clinches Decision.

New York, Nov. 12 (AP).—George Cheverko, who spent most of the day on the bench because of his indifferent play against Boston college last week brought Fordham a touchdown in the final 38 second today to clinch a 21 to 12 victory over Missouri.

With Fordham ahead, 13 to 12, thru the play of his freshman replacement, Al Litwa, Cheverko dropped back for a fourth down punt as most of the 11,000 spectators headed for the exits.

Starts from 9 Yard Line.

The low pass bounded from his fingers and by the time Cheverko had retrieved it and gotten his bearings he was hemmed in on his own 9. But he straightened out, shot thru virtually the entire Missouri team on the 25 and raced down the sidelines.

As he reached the Missouri 45 he lateraled to Tom Potter, substitute guard, who pounded the rest of the way to score. Cheverko then added the extra point.

Until this incident, Fordham was holding a 1 point edge because of Cheverko's extra point after Harry Squatrito's second period touchdown.

Litwa Is Standout.

Altho he actually gave Fordham the lead, it was the play of Litwa that stood out. Litwa, weighing only 170 and hailing from Camden, N. J., averaged 49 yards each time he punted, compared with 36 for the Missourians. He also completed two of Fordham's three perfect passes.

Joe Andrejco opened the scoring early in the second period, going thru center on his own 20 and right down the middle for 80 yards with Bob Sweeney, Missouri center, a stride behind all the way.

Then in a space of 95 seconds both teams scored with Missouri registering on a 28 yard pass from James Farr, who came in to replace the injured Bob Steuber, to Ralph Carter. A Fordham pass, ruled complete on the Missouri 1 because of interference, gave Squatrito his chance to score a moment later. Steuber, whose 27 points this season exceeded the 77 compiled by the entire Fordham team, was injured early in the second quarter and returned only for an attempted field goal from the 15. Lineups:

MINING STOCKS RISE, BUT OTHERS CHANGE LITTLE

'Peace' Issues in Demand in Mixed Market.

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—"Peace" stocks, including gold mines, kept the recovery trend alive in the stock market today but many issues showed little change.

Continued good war news and dividends and earnings reports, served to buoy selected shares and offset much of the profit cashing on yesterday's rally. Tax selling again was fairly well absorbed.

Belief that recent allied successes would help shorten the war in Europe revived interest in the gold group and other issues that stand to benefit from peace.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was unchanged at 40.1, but showed a net loss of 0.4 for the week. Large blocks of low priced issues helped raise volume at 310,700 shares, compared with 260,620 last Saturday.

Phone Issue Most Active.

International Telephone was the most active issue, as in yesterday's trading. It opened on a 4,000 share trade, up a fraction at a new 1942 high, then met enough offerings to put it down ¼ at the close.

The market took a moderate spill Monday with the war situation in the South Pacific receiving the principal blame. Word of victory in the Solomon Islands failed to spur recovery Tuesday and the averages had their sharpest drop since Oct. 27. The market was on an even keel Wednesday and Thursday.

The only comeback of the week was recorded yesterday as belated attention was given war developments and an unexpected dividend by Santa Fe.

CHICAGO LIST STEADY.

Chicago stock prices showed little change yesterday in turnover of 13,000 shares. Cities Service established a new high for the year at 3⅝, a gain of ⅛. The volume leader was Midland United A preferred, which closed with a ⅛ point loss.

BOND CHANGES SMALL.

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—Bond market price changes today were mostly in minor fractions. Volume shrank to $3,741,600 face value from $3,975,100 a week ago. Most of the turnover continued in the low priced rail section.

TAX BENEFIT.

Many corporations may find it advantageous to change methods for determining excess profits tax credits as a result of certain provisions in the 1942 revenue law.

Under the act, the excess profits tax credit figured on average earnings in the base period [1936 thru 1939] might be increased as much as 25 per cent in the event a loss or unusually low earnings were shown in one of the base years.

For example, under the 1941 tax law, if a corporation's earnings before taxes were $500,000 each in 1936, 1937, and 1939, and a $100,000 loss was shown in 1938, the average earnings for the base period would have been $375,000 [the 1941 law permitted omission of the loss in computing average earnings]. The excess profits tax credit, excluding the specific $5,000 exemption, would have been 95 per cent of this figure, or $356,250.

Under the 1942 tax law, a corporation is permitted to substitute 75 per cent of average earnings before taxes for three base years for the other year in which a loss occurred or in which earnings were less than 75 per cent of the average of the other three years.

Seventy-five per cent of the average earnings for 1936, 1937, and 1939 [$500,000], or $375,000 could be substituted for the 1938 figure. Average earnings for the base period then would be $1,875,000 divided by four, or $468,750. The excess profits tax credit [95 per cent of $468,750] would be $445,312. Compared with the credit under the 1941 act, the increase would be $89,062, or 25 per cent.

The 1942 tax law changed the invested capital credit from 8 per cent on the first 5 million dollars of invested capital and 7 per cent on all over that figure, to 8 per cent on the first 5 million dollars, 7 per cent of the next 5 million, 6 per cent on the next 190 million and 5 per cent on all over that figure.

Consequently, for corporations with more than 10 million dollars of invested capital, the invested capital credit is substantially reduced and a change to the average earnings method might prove advantageous.

Altho the new tax law raised the excess profits tax to a flat rate of 90 per cent from graduated rates up to 60 per cent under the 1941 act, many corporations might find the impact from this increase cushioned by a larger credit on the average earnings basis.

This would apply principally to industries whose business volume has risen sharply as a result of the war compared with lean years during the base period, such as aircraft and machine tool industries.

FCC SEEKS CUT IN BELL SYSTEM TOLL CHARGES

Profits Excessive, Says Chairman.

Walter S. Gifford.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21 (AP).—The government called today for a second reduction in long distance telephone charges in a little more than a year.

American Telephone and Telegraph company, headed by Walter S. Gifford and rated as the nation's largest corporation, was ordered by the Federal Communications commission to show why it should not reduce materially its toll rates and other charges in the face of commission figures indicating excess earnings of 47 to 62 million dollars this year. A hearing was fixed for Dec. 16.

Asserting that the earnings held to be excessive were reflected heavily in both the cost of the war and in living costs, James L. Fly, FCC chairman, said "the government must make every effort to keep down its bill for the war and to help the consumer keep down his expenses."

Asks Immediate Reduction.

A. T. and T. was ordered to show why an immediate reduction in rates should not be made pending conclusion of the new hearings.

The FCC began another investigation early last year of long distance telephone tolls of the Bell system—by which A. T. and T.'s 5 billion dollar properties are commonly known. This resulted in rate reductions estimated to save about 14 millions a year. At that time charges were cut for most daytime calls of 144 to 1,530 miles. Rates were reduced for person-to-person calls longer than the initial three minutes and certain report charges were eliminated.

All Charges Under Inquiry.

The new investigation, the commission said, would cover not only long distance rates, but all charges, classifications, practices, and regulations of the corporation's long lines department.

In its formal show cause order, FCC said A. T. and T. records showed earnings, before federal income taxes, at an annual rate of more than 24 per cent on the book cost of its investment and 14.9 per cent after provision for new federal taxes. It prepared a table showing that during the first nine months of this year the company handled 109,892,000 long distance calls, compared with 85,465,000 in all of 1941.

SENSE QUESTIONED

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—Walter S. Gifford, president of the American Telephone and Telegraph company, said today's Federal Communications commission order to show cause why long distance rates should not be reduced "would seem to make no sense."

In a statement after the FCC order was issued in Washington, D. C., Gifford said the telephone company is trying to reduce its long lines business as a necessary wartime measure, and lower rates would defeat that effort.

"With our long lines overloaded, we are having a hard time to handle the calls we have now, and we can't get the materials to handle more—neither is there man power to spare to handle more," he said.

"As to long lines earnings, the commission's figures are misleading because they do not include all taxes. Our earnings as a whole, including long distance business, are substantially lower than last year, and are short of the dividend which we have paid for the last 22 years."

GRAINS ADVANCE ON BUYING FOR EASTERN USERS

Grain prices advanced yesterday on the Chicago Board of Trade with rye futures as much as 1¾ cents a bushel higher on buying by commission houses for eastern accounts and by large local operators. December rye closed at 64 cents, up 4¼ cents from the low price of the preceding week.

Wheat and corn futures were up ½ to ⅝ cent and oats closed unchanged to ¼ cent higher. Soy bean futures advanced ⅝ to ¾ cent.

Liquidation by holders of December rye contracts subsided and cash grain handlers continued to purchase the December future and sell May to change over hedges on actual grain. In the last few days there has been some buying of rye against sales of corn by spreaders who say that rye and other bread and feed grains are selling too low in relation to corn prices. December corn closed 19½ cents higher than December rye, compared with a spread of only 9¼ cents a year

Chicago Yards Set for Record Meat Volume

BY ARNOLD ERICKSON.

The Chicago stockyards, biggest live stock market in the world, is preparing to play a major part in the war food program after the most difficult period in its history—eight years of abnormally low volume, depression prices, and labor troubles.

The vast facilities of the yards, not fully used thru three years of crop planning, will be needed more than ever during the coming months to handle the large number of meat animals to come from the farms. The peak movement of the record 1942 spring pig crop is expected during December and January.

At times the stockyards has operated at such abnormally low volume that only skeleton forces were maintained. Some divisions actually were forced to close. Half the hog alleys were idle during two years of pork scarcity resulting from the early experiments at crop control by AAA pioneers.

Capacity Never Determined.

Representatives of the department of agriculture met with packers and commission men recently to lay plans for the permit marketing program which Secretary of Agriculture Claude R. Wickard expects to put into effect when needed. The stockyards is so big and its methods for rapid handling of supplies so perfected over more than 75 years of operation, however, that observers doubt its capacity will be tested even by the big flood of meat animals, particularly hogs and sheep, now ready to move.

Many persons have wondered what the capacity of the yards really is. That question is difficult to answer, because even at its busiest times there was no congestion.

On Dec. 15, 1924, a record total of 122,749 hogs was received in the one day. This was the biggest volume ever handled by any market—but there was room for more.

Records Are Recounted.

The largest week's hog supply was 384,295 head, also in December, 1924. The run for that month set a mark of 1,436,029 hogs.

The record cattle day was 49,128, in 1908, with the week's peak cattle run at 111,966 in 1920. The monthly high of 415,456 was set in 1917.

The biggest sheep totals were 71,792 in one day in 1911, 231,647 in a week in 1913, and 895,503 for a month in 1910.

Market analysts assert that only the storage capacity of packers in the Chicago area will determine the volume the stockyards will handle during the coming months should farm shipments put it to a test.

62 CHICAGO AREA COMPANIES WIN WAR CONTRACTS

Seventy-four war contracts were awarded to 62 Chicago area firms last week, Leverett S. Lyon, chief executive officer of the Chicago Association of Commerce, announced yesterday. Ten of the companies had not had war orders before, said Lyon.

Since the beginning of the war production program, 1,774 Chicagoland firms have received 8,299 federal contracts totaling $1,866,911,000.

REPORT STANDARD OIL TO VOTE MANAGEMENT CHANGES TOMORROW

New York, Nov. 21 (AP).—Retirement of Walter C. Teagle as chairman and election of Ralph W. Gallagher, now a director and vice president, to succeed him, are scheduled to be ratified Monday at a meeting of the board of directors of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. Other proposed changes in the top ranking management, it was learned tonight, were mapped at a meeting of the executive committee yesterday.

They follow sharp criticism earlier this year by departments of the government on Standard's practices relating to petroleum refining and other patents, and international oil agreements, especially those before the war with I. G. Farbenindustrie, the German dye trust.

The proposed changes include election of two vice presidents, W. E. Pratt, a director of Standard and a former vice president of Humble Oil and Refining company, a Standard subsidiary, and Eugene Holman, Standard director and former president of the Creole Petroleum corporation, Standard's principal Venezuelan affiliate.

Great Lakes Ore Vessels Race Winter

Chicago steel mills operating ore boat fleets on the Great Lakes said yesterday that they plan to keep the ships busy thru most of this week unless a sudden closing in of winter prevents it.

The navigation season usually closes Dec. 1, but iron ore requirements of the war effort are so heavy this year that the companies are prepared to extend it a few days if conditions permit. The operators not only have the lake ice to worry about but also seasonal rises in insurance rates and the freezing of the ore itself in transit from the mines and at the docks.

Other Costs Increase.

Insurance rates go up every week after the normal shipping season closing date, and the necessity of steaming the ore while it is being handled at northern points also boosts operating costs. The steaming work also slows handling of the ore and lengthens the time boats are laid up.

Officials of Inland Steel company, Chicago, said the company has built additional thawing equipment in the last year which already has been helpful and will prolong the season's work.

Dispatches from Cleveland and other points said that high winds and freezing temperatures at loading centers have delayed the iron ore movement and put it behind schedule, but that the estimated record requirement of 90 million tons of ore will be met if ships can operate this week.

Most Ships Carry Ore.

Most of the available cargo vessels have been carrying iron ore, with only a few hauling coal and grain until a few days ago when the government permitted diversion of 100 ore carriers to carry grain.

This year 305 American and 35 Canadian ships have been used in the ore movement. Last year 303 American ships were used, but Canadian vessels were not permitted to join in the trade.

Record Sales Lift Walgreen Profit Slightly

Sales which were the largest on record offset higher taxes and wages, resulting in a slight increase in its net income for the fiscal year ended Sept. 30, the Walgreen company reported yesterday.

Profits were $3,361,469, or $2.27 a common share, compared with $3,334,835, or $2.25 a share the preceding year. Provisions for federal income taxes rose to $1,825,000 from $1,355,000, while excess profits taxes soared to $1,300,000 from $200,000 in 1941. Higher tax rates under the 1942 revenue act were applicable to earnings of only one quarter of the year

Net sales totaled $95,288,861, against $82,514,795 in 1941 fiscal year. Sales in Chicago alone were $21,259,081, or 22.3 per cent of the net total.

Lower Earnings Expected.

"We necessarily expected lower earnings, after taxes, for the 1942-'43 fiscal year," said C. R. Walgreen Jr., president, "since the new higher tax rates will apply to the entire year. Nevertheless, under the present law we are fortunate in having a fairly satisfactory average earnings credit for the purpose of 'war excess profits' taxation.

"Shortages continue to develop among some of the items of merchandise which we sell. Many manufacturers, tho, have been able to replace critical war materials in their products. We are fortunate in the wide diversity of the goods we stock, in the probable availability of most of them, and in that our sales effort can be effectively varied by advertising and display—all of which adds up to a high degree of flexibility and, hence, stability."

SHIFTS IN WAR NEEDS TO BRING SOME LAYOFFS

Plant Schedules to Be Altered.

BY PHILIP HAMPSON.

Important production changes may be expected in Chicago area and other war plants as United States military campaigns unfold abroad, it was said yesterday in Chicago manufacturing circles.

Temporary curtailments in employment or even temporary plant shutdowns may be expected as shifts are made in the type of goods needed most urgently to meet changing war conditions, it was said. Some instances of temporary lay-offs for workers and of alterations in production schedules have already been reported in the Chicago area, but details may not be given because of censorship regulations.

An example of how changing war conditions are affecting production is the cancellation of the Nash-Kelvinator corporation's contract to build large Vought-Sikorsky flying boats because of strategical developments in the Pacific area.

Demand for Speed Easing.

One source close to the Chicago situation said that an easing of the speed that has been required in production of certain items is highly favorable for war effort in this area. It means that the manufacturers have turned out a sufficient amount of war materials so that they now can take stock of their operations and put into effect improvements developed during the days of feverish production when speed and heavy output were demanded.

As America's armies assume the offensive, it was said, broad changes will be made in the war manufacturing program because offense requires different types of weapons from those used principally in defense. War plants will soon feel the effects of the African campaign, it was said, and overnight changes in some operations may be expected.

Changes made in models and types of war material are far more intricate and far more important than are the changes made annually in consumer goods during peacetime industrial operations.

Requirements More Exacting.

The engineering for weapons of war is far more exacting than for most peacetime civilian goods because our weapons must be better than those produced by the enemy. A fault in an automobile would affect a few persons and probably could be corrected speedily, but a fault in a gun means death for forces in battle.

An example of how the changeover affects production is found in tanks. Originally the army had the M-3. Then came the M-4 which required changes in the manufacturing setup. While these changes were being made there was curtailment of labor in some operations.

Ammunition manufacturers are among the producers of war goods especially likely to be affected by military operations because of the rise and fall in demand for the various types of ammunition depending upon the character and location of the military operation.

In this connection it was disclosed yesterday by Lieut. Col. Robert M. Bacher at the Wabash River Ordnance plant in Indiana that the construction force working on project 2 at the plant has been cut in half as a result of "changes in fighting conditions in the theater of operations."

WORKER WITH TOOL SHOP AT HOME GETS WAR SUBCONTRACT

Pullman-Standard Car Manufacturing company, Chicago, has a one man subcontractor. The company announced yesterday that it has adopted an employé's suggestion that it let small contracts for war work to workers who have home shops.

The first employé-subcontractor is Roger Fardig, a machinist on the howitzer production line, who works 12 hours a day for the company. He is making howitzer pins in his home shop to help Pullman-Standard solve a pin production problem. The pins require a high degree of precision.

Fardig's subcontract quota is 100 pins a week. He has arranged with three friends to help him by making part of the pins in a shop which they have in their home. The friends are Ivan Carlson, 71, a retired toolmaker, and his two sons, Emil and Roy. The sons work in war plants. Roy's wife keeps books for the project.

The company found that many of its workers have lathes, drill presses, welding outfits, punch presses, and other equipment in their homes.

Students May Find Yule Trips Home Difficult, Say Rail Men

Hugh W. Siddall.

College students who wish to go home for the Christmas and New year holidays for the most part will have to take their chances on getting train accommodations, railroad men said yesterday. In a few instances, such as the University of Illinois, it is possible to make arrangements for reserved coach seats, but such cases are few, it was said.

The outlook now is that many students will have to stand if they can get on trains at all, said Hugh W. Siddall, chairman of the Western Passenger association. The railroads, he said, consider the holiday trips made by students at Christmas essential and will do all they can to help, but they are up against war travel which is expected to be the heaviest in railroad history.

Gas Ration Intensifies Burden.

The railroad burden will be greatly increased as a result of the gasoline rationing which goes into effect in the west on Dec. 1 and which will divert to the railroads many travelers who would otherwise have used their automobiles.

Siddall said that the railroads wrote the various colleges and universities thruout the country asking them to help reduce the holiday travel jam by starting the Christmas vacation earlier and ending it later. A few colleges agreed to do this, but many of them wrote that the war department wants them to shorten the college year so that the young men can get out earlier and into the armed forces.

Many Shorten Holidays.

As a result of the war department request many colleges are shortening the Christmas holiday so that instead of a peak student travel on Dec. 18 as expected, much of it will be spread into Dec. 22, 23, and 24. A few colleges are allowing only Christmas day off for students, it was said.

The railroads expect to be able to handle a large amount of the usual winter resort business after the holidays. Siddall said travel in California, Arizona, New Mexico, and Florida will be possible without too much difficulty.

Stagger Vacations

Urbana, Ill., Nov. 21 [Special].—A request from railroad officials has brought a decision to stagger the starting times for Christmas vacations in various departments of the University of Illinois, it was announced today. The changes were made to insure proper handling of student traffic.

Vacation begins Tuesday noon, Dec. 15, for students in the graduate school, college of law, library school, and for seniors, and unclassified and irregular students; Wednesday noon, Dec. 16, for juniors and sophomores, and Thursday noon, Dec. 17, for freshmen.

The first group will return to the campus Monday noon, Jan. 4, the second group Tuesday noon, Jan. 5, and the third group Wednesday noon, Jan. 6.

Truck Pooling Held Unable to Meet Needs

Pooling and coöperation agreements authorized by the Office of Defense Transportation to conserve equipment and meet increased freight traffic have not solved the truck shortage problem, Chicago truck operators agreed yesterday. Many companies said they had 20 to 25 per cent more traffic than in normal times, and a further burden would leave them helpless.

At present the overload is being handled, they said, by holding over non-essential shipments for a day or more, by transferring freight to railroads, or by refusing orders in the hope that some other trucking company could take them.

Few Empty Runs Necessary.

Because of the demand for trucks, the ODT regulation against traveling empty or partially empty, as on return trips, has been no great handicap, they said.

For the same reason, the ODT's authorization of a truck pool in Chicago has been of more assistance to out of town truckers than to Chicagoans. The pool, known as the Joint Office of Information, was established as a clearing house to register all trucks seeking loads and refer them to truckers reporting overloads, and to seek extra equipment for truckers with more traffic than they could handle.

The Chicago office, at 10 North Clark street, was the first to be established in the country. It received its certificate from the ODT Aug. 24. Since then it has served as a model for other offices being established in key cities in the country.

Assesses Small Fees.

David H. Ratner, general manager of the Midwest Transfer company, 1310 St. Charles road, Maywood, secretary of the organization, said the Joint Office of Information is a nonprofit corporation assessing nominal charges for service. It is headed by a board of directors made up of representatives from three common carriers, three private carriers, and three contract carriers.

Ratner illustrated the workings of the pool by citing a truck that carried a shipment of cattle from Waterloo to Chicago Friday. The driver registered the type of truck and tonnage, and was referred to a carrier who transferred to him a load destined for Waterloo. When no return loads can be found, the trucker is given a certificate showing he complied with the ODT regulation, and exercised "due diligence" to maintain a capacity load at all times.

Approve Two Contracts for Chicago Street Paving

Two Chicago street paving contracts with the Leininger Construction company, Chicago, were approved yesterday by the state division of highways. One contract, for $100,405, is to pave Grand avenue between Ashland avenue and Morgan street, and the other, for $29,299, Avondale avenue between Foster and Central avenues.

OPA RULES FREIGHT TAX IS RATE BOOST; NOT TO BE PASSED ON

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21 (AP).—The OPA said today that, for purposes of computing maximum prices, the new federal tax of 3 per cent on property transportation will be "considered as a freight rate increase which cannot be passed on, rather than as a tax which can."

The effect of this ruling, which officials said will be promulgated in an official order, will be that in instances where merchandise is sold on a "delivered price" basis, the seller will have to absorb the tax. However, in cases where merchandise is sold at a price to which freight cost must be added, the purchaser will have to pay the new tax indirectly.

SWIFT'S GOALS: WIN WAR, RETAIN STRONG COMPANY

Swift & Co.'s first objective is to win the war, John Holmes, president, told employés gathered in 140 radio stations thruout the nation in a broadcast yesterday. Its second objective, he said, is to keep the company's name before the public to have a strong business structure after the war.

Not even the large resources of the meat industry can continue to meet steadily increasing wartime needs without dislocation of civilian supply, he said, but Holmes was confident the industry will continue to do an efficient job, despite the burdens the war may place upon it.

"In addition to protecting the identity of our brands," he said, "our advertising will find many opportunities for public service during the coming year. It will show the American housewife how to use her meat wisely—help her plan well balanced meals—help her to understand why her dealer can no longer offer her the variety of meat cuts she's used to buying."

ORDER FOR CARGO PLANES BY NASH PLANTS CANCELED

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 21 (AP).—Nash-Kelvinator corporation announced today thru its president, George Mason, that the navy had canceled its contract for mass production of Vought-Sikorsky cargo carrying flying boats. He said a new plant nearing completion would be turned over to another company.

Rear Adm. E. M. Pace Jr., director of the navy's materials division, said quick revision of the navy's aircraft requirements in view of developments in the Pacific was the reason for the cancellation.

"Increased production of combat planes and fast patrol bombers is needed immediately," the admiral said, "and that means some of the facilities available for flying boat production will have to be turned over to contractors who are already at work on the types of planes we now need."

WLB REGIONAL BOARD TO RULE PAY IN 7 STATES

Can Approve or Kill Any Increases.

Robert K. Burns.

New methods of dealing with voluntary wage increase agreements by the War Labor board were outlined yesterday as the WLB accomplished its decentralization plan with the appointment of 10 regional boards and directors thruout the nation.

The new procedures were discussed by Robert K. Burns, instructor in labor economics and industrial relations at the University of Chicago, and principal mediation officer in the middle west for the WLB, who yesterday was named acting director of the Chicago region.

The region headed by Burns, who will have temporary offices in room 3008 of the Civic Opera building, includes Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota. The new official and his board will have jurisdiction in wage stabilization matters affecting 75,000 employers and 7 million workers.

Must Explain Raise Plan.

An example of the procedure to be followed was outlined by Burns. The employer who desires to increase wages, presents his plan to the wages and hours office in his district for suggestions. If the suggested raise comes under certain conditions, such as a plan already in force for periodic increases, the employer is told to go ahead by the wages and hours office.

If the planned increase is of another classification, however, it is passed on to the regional wages and hours office and from that office to Burns' office for review and denial or approval by Burns.

If the employer's request is refused, he may appeal to a three man panel, consisting of representatives of labor, management, and the public, drawn from a roster of names kept by the regional WLB office. The panel may reverse or sustain the decision of the director by a majority vote. The employer has no further appeal, Burns said, but added that if the vote on the panel decision is not unanimous, the dissenting member of the panel may appeal the decision to the WLB in Washington.

Four Raise Factors Cited.

Four general reasons are listed as possible factors in allowing wage increases. First is maladjustment cases in which salary levels have not compensated for a 15 per cent increase in cost of living between January, 1941, and May, 1942. Second is the case of gross inequality or inequity, which Burns pointed out, does not refer to local wage differentials. Third is the existence of a substandard of living about which no policy has yet been enunciated. Fourth is the question of manipulation of man power, which also is being approached cautiously by the board.

Associated with Burns in the regional office in an advisory capacity will be a council of 12 union officials, employers, and educators. Included in the appointments, also announced yesterday are:

Employer Advisors.

Employers—Wallace N. Barker, Chicago, vice president of Pullman-Standard Car Manufacturing Co.; Samuel Pirie Carson, director and manager, Carson Pirie Scott & Co., Chicago; Harvey G. Ellerd, vice president and director of personnel, Armour & Co., Chicago; H. L. Rogers, chairman of the board of Belden Manufacturing company.

Public representatives—William F. Ogburn, Chicago, chairman of the department of sociology, University of Chicago; Edwin Witte, Madison, chairman of the department of economics at the University of Wisconsin; Dale Yoder, Minneapolis, professor of labor economics at the University of Minnesota; Joseph Tiffin, Lafayette, Ind., professor of industrial psychology at Purdue university.

EXPERIMENT IN FARM TRAINING

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21 (AP).—The department of agriculture will start next week an experimental program for recruiting, training, and placing year around farm workers to help meet an agricultural labor shortage expected to reach 1,500,000 in 1943 if the present trend continues.

The initial program will involve 300 farmers from unproductive farms in Kentucky and northern Wisconsin. The 150 Kentucky farmers will be given a three weeks' training at Ohio State university in Columbus and on nearby dairy farms. At the completion of their training they will be placed on farms needing help.

Will Work on Dairy Farms.

The Wisconsin farmers will be placed immediately inasmuch as they have had some farm dairy experience.

"Experience gained from the experiment with these 300 potential year around dairy workers will determine," the department said, "how such a program could be effective on a large scale as a further move by the government to help alleviate the nation's farm man power shortage."

The department will pay transportation and living expenses of the farmers during their training period. Their families will be moved to their new places of employment.

Form Regional Committee.

Meanwhile, Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Man Power commission, today established the first of several regional management-labor committees to plan the mobilization of labor in special sections of the country.

The first regional group will take in California, Washington, Oregon, Nevada, and Arizona. McNutt said the committees "will be able to facilitate orderly withdrawal of employés by the selective service, as well as the recruitment and training of workers for essential activities."

DON'T BORROW
Borrowing is not always the proper solution to a money shortage. But there are times when a loan is both provident and wise. For instance, you might borrow to move into a more economical house, nearer to work . . . to pay cash for medical and dental attention before your favorite doctor is called into the armed forces . . . to buy winter fuel and clothing . . . to clean up past due charge accounts and other bills . . . to buy tools, to pay union dues, or to take special courses for a new job on war production . . . and for many other purposes equally worthy. Loans $10 to $300. "While you wait" service to those who phone ahead or come prepared to present proper identification and evidence of employment.

NEW ZONING LAW TO BE VOTED UPON BY COUNCIL DEC. 3

Reforms Near After Five Years of Research.

A new Chicago zoning ordinance, the result of five years of research and public hearings, and a drastic revision of the present ordinance which was passed in 1923, will be called up for passage by the city council on Dec. 3.

Aldermen expect it to become law with little opposition. The ordinance has the approval of the Chicago Association of Commerce, the Chicago Real Estate board, and other groups interested in building and city development.

Hope to End Blight.

"Unless we adopt this ordinance we might as well quit talking about removing blighted areas and rebuilding the city," said Ald. Arthur G. Lindell [9th], chairman of the council subcommittee which handled its development. "This ordinance is not perfect, but it is a big improvement over the present one. It is the first step in conserving present property and in rebuilding the city."

Among the more significant of its provisions and effects will be:

1. In theory it still will be possible to build skyscrapers and superapartment buildings, but the new ordinance strongly discourages such construction. Generally speaking, business buildings will be limited to about 12 stories and apartments to about eight stories where the buildings are not set back from the limits of the lot.

Boost Homes Area.

2. The area zoned for residences will be greatly increased, with single family dwelling districts accounting for about 46 square miles, or about 22 per cent of the city's land area. The area open to commercial and apartment house construction will be reduced. The area districted for apartments, will be reduced, roughly, from half to about a quarter of the city's area.

3. The percentage of a lot that can be covered by buildings is reduced, thus admitting more light and air. Not more than 33 per cent of a residential lot can be covered, compared with 50 per cent under the old ordinance. Alley line apartments and dwellings are prohibited.

Protect Property Values.

4. The ordinance seeks to protect property values. The committee contends that under it, a person may buy a house without fear a service station or laundry will be constructed a few doors away. They say the manufacturer may rest assured a needed expansion of his plant won't be blocked because some one built a house too close to his grounds a few years before.

5. It will be mandatory, under the ordinance, to provide adequate automobile parking space for any new developments, commercial or residential, a move designed to decrease traffic congestion and parking on streets.

6. Only thru an amortization provision does the new ordinance interfere with present land uses. This provision is that all commercial and manufacturing nonconforming properties in residential areas must get out within 50 years.

May Amend State Laws.

The aldermen believe it probably will be necessary to amend state zoning enabling legislation for the amortization clause to become effective. If this provision is found to conform with state laws, or state laws are amended to make it effective, it may have a far reaching effect on the city's long term development.

7. By more definite districting, the ordinance seeks to remove a major cause of blight areas—the movement of commercial and manufacturing establishments into residential districts.

The major characteristic of the 1923 zoning law, the zoning subcommittee says, was a great overzoning forced by pressure groups. Each real estate speculator felt sure his particular pieces of property would be more valuable if, for example, the property were zoned in a commercial district, instead of for residences.

Carried to Extremes.

The result was that should Chicago's lake shore wards be fully developed, as permitted under the ordinance, these wards alone could provide living quarters for 42 million people, according to committee statisticians. The entire city could provide living quarters for almost all the people of the United States.

If Chicago's streets zoned for commercial property, they continued, were laid end to end they could be extended from Chicago to Los Angeles, with business buildings lining them on both sides all the way.

Only Speculators Profited.

A few of these speculators made money, but for a large majority the ordinance meant varying degrees of financial loss, committee members say. Much property which should have been zoned for residences and was districted for commercial or apartment use either went idle or became a residential site with no protection for the home owner. Tax assessments on such property were too high and much tax delinquency resulted.

In the boom period of the 1920s there was much overbuilding of tall apartments and business skyscrapers as speculators operated with a free hand under the wide open zoning law. Practically all of these superbuilding projects failed to work out financially for the builders.

In drafting the proposed new ordinance the council seeks to correct these ills thru a complete revision of "volume" and "use" districts.

Divide Use Classes.

Under the present ordinance there are but four classes of use districts—residences, apartments, commercial, and manufacturing. The new ordinance provides the following nine classifications:

1. One family residences.
2. Duplex residences, with one family residences also permitted.
3. Group houses, with single family and duplex dwellings also allowed.
4. Apartment houses, also open to single family, duplex, and group residences.
5. Specialty shops, also open to apartments.
6. Business districts, also open to apartments or specialty shops.
7. Commercial, also open to business, apartments, or specialty shops.
8. Manufacturing, with all classes of dwelling development prohibited, and all other types of developments allowed.
9. Industrial, in which all classes of dwelling developments are prohibited and all other types of developments are allowed.

The types of development allowed only in manufacturing districts are such establishments as large laundries, scrap metal dealers, and food and beverage companies. Heavy industries, which create much noise, smoke, or dust, are allowed only in the industrial districts.

The old ordinance provided the following five classes of volume districts, with the maximum heights depending on how far buildings are set back on the lots: [1] 33 to 66 feet high; [2] 66 to 132 feet; [3] 132 to 198 feet; [4] 198 to 264 feet; [5] 264 to unlimited.

Four Volume Districts.

Under the proposed ordinance the following four volume districts are set up:

1. Maximum height 25 feet, or a 2½ story building.
2. Maximum height 45 feet, or a 4 story building.
3. A building volume 72 times the square feet of the lot, or about an 8 story building if all lot space is used without setbacks, or considerably higher as the setback increases.
4. A building volume 144 times the area of the lot, or about a 12 story building with no setbacks, and considerably higher if enough space is provided around the structure.

The "parking space" provisions of the proposed ordinance compel owners to provide one parking space [in a garage or outdoors for each dwelling unit in "group housing" districts; parking space for 33 per cent of the dwelling units in apartment districts, and for 25 per cent of the customers, roughly, at amusement places such as theaters and bowling alleys.

WAVES Discuss Their Problems

Eight commissioned officers in the WAVES, who were assigned Oct. 12 to recruiting work for enlisted personnel in regional offices of naval procurement of the 9th naval district, returned to Chicago yesterday for a "rehash" of their problems and to receive instructions for their new task of interviewing women for the V-9, or officer training, program.

Previously, all officer applicants were required to come to Chicago. Under the new plan applicants will be given interviews, aptitude, and physical examinations in the regional office of their home districts, it was announced by Lieut. Mary Daily, WAVES officers in the office of naval Officer procurement.

At their meeting in naval procurement headquarters in the Board of Trade building, the eight ensigns in the WAVES recounted their recruiting work with enthusiasm.

"The response and coöperation have been splendid in my district," remarked Ensign Miriam Ransburg, who is stationed in Kansas City, Mo. There was a similar comment from each of the girls.

"These girls have earned the respect of all the officers and commissioned men with whom they work," said Lieut. Comm. S. A. Bishop, assistant director of naval officer procurement for the middle west district.

"It was an open question among the men as to whether or not the WAVES could do the job when they started their work last October," he added. "Now there are 50 calls for every WAVE who is graduated. The men have found out how well the girls can do the job."

HONOR ARRIVAL OF LUTHERANS' FOUNDER IN U. S.

Churches Mark 200th Anniversary Today.

BY THE REV. JOHN EVANS.

Lutherans of Chicago as well as of the country at large today will mark the 200th anniversary of the arrival in America of the Rev. Henry Melchoir Muhlenberg, founder of Lutheranism in America. Muhlenberg arrived in Philadelphia, Pa., on Nov. 25, 1742, and founded the first synod, the Ministerium of Pennsylvania, six years later.

This synod later was merged with others to become the United Lutheran Church of America. The Rev. Dr. Armin George Weng, president of the Illinois synod of that church, explained that virtually all branches of Lutheranism in Chicago and the country will pay tribute to this founder at services today.

Sons Were Prominent.

Scarcely less prominent in the observances to the founder will be those to Muhlenberg's distinguished sons. One was Gen. John Peter Gabriel Muhlenberg, who dramatically doffed his cleric's garb in church to display his uniform before his departure to join Gen. George Washington's staff. Another was Frederick Augustus Conrad Muhlenberg, first speaker of the house of representatives, and the third, Gotthilf Henry Ernst Muhlenberg, probably the most distinguished American botanist during the colonial period. All three were ministers.

When Muhlenberg first arrived in the country from Germany he assumed pastorship of three congregations. These became the nucleus of the Pennsylvania ministerium, mother synod of the United church with its 1,714,000 members in this country and 300,000 more in other lands.

Dr. Weng will deliver the city-wide bicentennial sermon at St. Louis, Mo., this morning. The Rev. H. G. Twietmeyer, pastor of Grace Lutheran church, Belden avenue and Geneva terrace, last night paid tribute to Muhlenberg. Special services will mark the anniversary at Grace church this morning.

Worshiped in Log Huts.

"There were people who wanted to go to church, but preachers were few when Muhlenberg arrived," Pastor Twietmeyer said. "There were only crude log huts for churches and not enough bibles or hymn books. But the church must be planted, insisted Muhlenberg. He rode great distances on horseback, gathering and instructing the people. He begged church leaders in Europe to send pastors. Forty-five years he labored here and led American Lutheranism well along its way toward becoming one of the great branches of the Christian churches in the new world."

Muhlenberg formulated a common liturgy, prepared constitutions for congregations and synods, and supervised the preparation of an American Lutheran hymnal.

ASK SERVICE MEN TO SHARE TURKEY, GOV. GREEN'S PLEA

Springfield, Ill., Nov. 21 (AP).—Illinois residents were urged by Gov. Dwight Green today, to invite service men to their homes for Thanksgiving day dinners.

"As Thanksgiving day approaches," the message from the governor's office said, "thousands of men of our nation's armed services are stationed in Illinois cantonments.

"Some of these men will be able to go to their own homes for a Thanksgiving reunion and dinner. But others will be obliged to pass the day in or near the camps.

"Let us home folks of Illinois open our hearts this Thanksgiving and invite these soldiers, sailors, and marines, who would otherwise be in camp, to be our Thanksgiving day guests of honor in our own homes. Thanksgiving day is preëminently a festival of the home. We can make the day mean more this year by sharing the atmosphere of home with the men who are protecting the homes of all America."

12 YEAR DENTAL FIGHT ON NEGRO WINS CONVICTION

The state department of registration and education announced yesterday that it had won a 12 year fight against John N. Boyden, colored, whom it accused of violating the dental practice act.

The fight began in Chicago in 1930 when the department caused Boyden to be fined $50. He then moved to Joliet, where he has been since. In 1940 he was again accused of violating the dental act, but beat the case.

In July, 1941, Boyden was accused once more, and found guilty before County Judge Glen L. Cowing of the Will County court in Joliet. On Friday, Judge Cowing fined Boyden $1,000, and sentenced him to six months in jail. Boyden will appeal. According to State's Attorney James Burke of Will county, Boyden took impressions for dental plates.

SEEK OLDER MEN AND BOYS OVER 16 TO HANDLE MAIL

Postmaster Ernest J. Kruetgen, anticipating the largest volume of Christmas mail in the history of the Chicago postoffice issued a call yesterday for men and boys over 16 years of age to work during the Christmas rush in mail distribution at the main postoffice and substations. Postmaster Kruetgen said the induction of large numbers of the postal force into the armed services had created a critical man power shortage. Applicants must bring a letter of recommendation from a responsible citizen and report at Room 425 at the main postoffice, 433 West Van Buren street, he said.

Scattered Flock to Return to St. Columbkille Nov. 29

Hundreds of worshipers from all parts of the city will return to historic St. Columbkille's church, Grand avenue and Paulina street, Sunday, Nov. 29, to attend the annual noon memorial mass for deceased members. The service is a parish tradition held under the auspices of St. Columbkille's Old Timers' association, whose chairman is James C. Sullivan.

COUNTY'S 13 FEE OFFICES TOLD: CUT EXPENSES 25 PCT.

Judges Get 'Yesses' to Polite Ultimatum.

BY WILLIAM SHINNICK.

Officials heading the 13 fee offices of Cook county were given a politely worded ultimatum yesterday that they would have to coöperate in cutting their operating expenses 25 per cent under their budget appropriations of 1942. Drastic slashes are necessary if the county, which has overspent its revenues by five million dollars in the last few years, is to balance the budget and retain such credit standing as it has.

The economy movement, which has been growing as the county's financial experts revealed the cold figures for public inspection, was given a sharp push forward by three justices of the Circuit court, Judges Julius H. Miner, John Prystalski, and Denis J. Normoyle. The constitution provides that the court shall set the number of employés in each fee office and the trio compose its committee on help.

Ask Blunt Question.

As the parade of office heads appeared before the committee in Judge Miner's courtroom to argue in favor of their written requests for employés, each was asked a definite question. It was: "If the Circuit court decide on a policy of cutting 25 per cent of the fee office expenses, will you coöperate?"

The answer invariably was "yes."

"Will you prepare a further statement showing how you would make reductions in conformity with such a policy?" was the next question.

Again the answer was affirmative. Judge Miner then asked that the estimates be in the hands of the committee by next Saturday, when the judges will meet again.

Resisted Cuts in Past.

In the past the elected officials have in general resisted strongly any efforts to cut their forces; in many cases they have asked for increases. This year, aside from the Juvenile court, the officials have asked for the same forces, or slight reductions. It was expected by observers that they will perspire freely in figuring out how they can operate with 20 or 25 per cent fewer employés.

Edward J. Kaindl, recorder, suggested that 24 of his workers be dispensed with at a saving of $47,000. This was a reduction of less than 10 per cent, however, and he was asked to bring in his 25 per cent outline. Michael J. Flynn, county clerk, controler and clerk of the County court, offered a cut also.

"Something Must Be Done."

Judge Miner told the officials that the object of the Circuit court was to get the economies with the least possible inconvenience to the public and to the efficiency of the offices.

"We must face conditions as they are," he said. "We feel something must be done to aid the county in a financial plight."

The judges have been furnished with copies of reports on various offices, drawn up by the Cook county survey. This body is a corps of experts furnished by the Civic federation and paid by the county. They have recommended, with about half the present working forces analyzed, cuts of 624 workers and savings of $1,200,000.

Smith Favors Sharp Cuts.

Clayton F. Smith, president of the county board, appeared before the judges and assured them that he was in favor of severe cuts.

"We have to pull in our belts and sacrifice to help the war effort," he said. "Any cuts we make are nothing compared to what men in the armed forces are undergoing."

He added that Cook county is operating under an antique form of government in a modern world and that its governmental and charitable activities must be kept as efficient as possible. Labor, he said, was growing harder to hire at the salaries offered. He promised economies in the institutions like County hospital and the Oak Forest infirmary that would not be a detriment to those depending on them for help.

Last year the county board appropriated 20¼ million dollars and spent about two and a half millions more than its income. Estimated revenues this year are $17,899,000, and if a balance is to be obtained the outlay must not exceed that figure. A cut from 1942 of about $2,700,000 is required, or around 15 per cent over all. More slashes would be needed to pay off any part of the accumlated debts.

The first annual photo exhibit of the Chicago Press association, which closed a week ago at the Hotel Morrison, is now on display at the Evanston store of the Public Service company of Northern Illinois in the first of three suburban appearances.

The exhibit will remain at Evanston for two weeks closing Dec. 4, and will then be taken to the utility's store at Oak Park. After two weeks there the exhibit may be viewed for two weeks at the Joliet store of the company.

W. H. Colwell, news service manager for the utility, termed the exhibit "the most unusual pictorial exhibition ever held in this part of the country."

Friend of the Yanks

[The Friend of the Yanks department will answer questions about the draft and military service, both in the daily columns and by mail, if stamped, self-addressed envelopes are sent with the queries.]

C. T. A. asks: "I have noticed that teachers are not getting much of a break in the way of appointments by the armed forces. Usually when one applies the response is 'Teachers are a dime a dozen.' Surely our training and experience could be used if we only knew where to apply."

ANSWER: It is true that teachers trained in the liberal arts are perhaps plentiful, but men having experience in audio-visual aids to education, especially as applied thru motion pictures, are particularly in demand. If you have had such experience, and have had educational administrative or teaching experience, write to us, giving your age, draft and marital status, education, and experience. If you are qualified, you won't have to wait long.

B. B. A. writes: "I have had a hobby for a long time of making models of planes, boats, etc., and I have made thousands of silhouettes of our own craft and those of enemy countries. Isn't there some practical use I can put this knowledge to in our present struggle?"

ANSWER: If you have acquired sufficient skill thru your hobby or thru the study of such volumes as Janes Fighting Ships, etc., as to be able to identify the warships, aircraft, or merchant ships of our own country or those of our enemies, you can put your knowledge to a very practical use. Our fighting forces can use men able to identify various craft without the aid of name. If you think you can qualify, tell us your age, education, and experience, and we will put you in touch with the branches of service that can use your experience.

N. E. D. writes: "Where can I go or who can I see to get some idea on how to prepare myself to enter the service? I am 3-A and have been told to expect to be reclassified within two weeks, and I'm reasonably sure I'll be accepted. I know that there are a lot of things I ought to attend to in the next few weeks, but I am afraid I'll overlook something."

ANSWER: We prepared an article, "Advice to Yanks," some time ago. The article offers a rather complete check-list of personal affairs needing attention and adjustment before entering service. Leases, joint bank accounts, joint titles to property, time payments, power of attorney, etc., are a few of the things mentioned. Send a large, self-addressed envelope and we will mail you a copy.

L. M. T. writes: "Whom must I write to about why draft boards in other towns in Franklin and neighboring counties are taking married men whose wives do not work and many of whom cannot work, while there are lots of single men and some married men who registered in the first draft and haven't been called yet? These married men in the first draft have wives holding down good jobs—but somehow these fellows manage to stay out even tho they aren't employed in defense work."

ANSWER: Evidently the draft boards are not keeping up their reclassification lists, or perhaps you do not happen to know all of the details in the cases you mention. Why not write to Col. Paul G. Armstrong, State Director of Selective Service, Springfield, Ill.?

SENATE BATTLE SEEN OVER U. S. AID TO SCHOOLS

Byrd Attacks Plan as Federal Meddling.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21 (AP).—Proponents of a federal program to allot 300 million dollars a year for aid to schools urged today that the long pending measure be speedily enacted, in view of curtailments in state revenues caused by the war, but economy advocates promised a fight.

Sen. Claude Pepper [D., Fla.] said he hoped the measure could be called up Monday after the senate takes the cloture vote which is expected to kill the anti-poll tax bill.

But Sen. Harry F. Byrd [D., Va.] chairman of the joint congressional economy committee, told reporters that "this is certainly no time to give 300 million dollars to the states when the federal government needs every dollar for the war." Pepper indicated he thought the money angle of secondary importance.

See School Revenue Cut.

Sponsors of the bill declared that the war would curtail local revenues available for school purposes, since rationing would reduce income from state sales taxes and restrictions on motoring would cut the collections of gasoline and motor vehicle license taxes. Further, they said, the salaries of low paid teachers must be advanced to overcome the lure of high wages in war industry.

The bill provides that no United States official shall exercise any control over local schools which receive aid, but Byrd declared that "passage of this bill will inevitably lead to federal control of the school system."

"The federal government would dictate our school systems and tell us how to run them," he said. "That was the story of federal aid for building highways, and it would just be the same story in the schools."

Called State Problem.

Byrd said the federal government already had relieved the states of many financial burdens and asserted "there isn't a state in the Union which isn't able to educate its own children."

"The treasury cannot afford not to have the money," Pepper declared.

The announced purpose of the bill is to reduce inequalities of educational opportunities in public schools. The money would be apportioned on the basis of the number of children 5 to 17 years of age in each state, and also on the total net income of individuals in the state.

GERMANY'S WALL OF FORTS ON THE WEST FRONT

Above: An artist's conception, based upon information from British sources, of how the Germans have fortified the coasts of France, Norway, and the Low Countries in an effort to prevent invasion by troops of the united nations. The key to the drawing, showing a small part of the so-called Todt line, follows: (1) The sea itself, mined to prevent approach of enemy ships; (2) barbed wire and tank traps; (3) system of trenches; (4) cement pillboxes and gun emplacements under construction; (5) field guns planted in pit and covered to prevent detection from air; (6) troops entering underground system; (7) large gun covered with camouflage netting; (8) similar gun being put in position; (9) covered truck bringing up supplies; (10) sectional view of underground storehouse; (11) sectional view of large armored pillbox; (12) large anti-aircraft guns in camouflaged positions; (13) tower designed for elevation of light anti-aircraft guns; (14) armored vehicle ready to rush to point of attack; (15) armored column advancing to fortified zone; (16) long-range railway gun.

The Todt Line—Guard Against Invasion

FULLY AS FAMOUS as France's Maginot line or Germany's Siegfried line, or West wall, is the German system of fortifications along the North sea and English channel coasts of Europe, constructed with the object of discouraging efforts of the united nations to invade and form another front against the Nazis.

This system of fortifications is called the Todt line, after the late Dr. (Maj. Gen.) Fritz Todt, who supervised its construction. It first was built along the coast of France and the Low Countries and later extended in Norway.

The main part of the Todt line, according to British sources of information, consists of concrete forts with giant guns capable of blasting English coastal cities and ports and bombarding allied shipping along the German-held channel coast of France. This part of the system was built in four months of 1940 by tens of thousands of men, working day and night. The engineers and laborers on the project were largely from the organization built up by Dr. Todt for the creation of the Siegfried line.

Most destructive of the weapons of the Todt line are the long-range guns with which it is provided. These include 11-inch guns from the Maginot line and new 14-inch German guns, said to be more powerful than similar large weapons originally placed along the coast. The big guns are planted on a level with the coastal dunes. The line also is provided with strong anti-aircraft batteries to protect the big gun emplacements.

While the Germans have moved many of the big French guns from the Maginot line to the coast fortifications, they have not dismantled or abandoned the Maginot system. To the contrary, they have altered it to serve as a defense for Germany. That is, they have turned what guns now are present in it to point to the west and made it a strong shield for their original Siegfried line.

Deeper inland from the Todt line are airdromes from which Nazi reconnaissance planes take off to scout the enemy and report to the German gunners the ranges of enemy ships off the coast.

The Todt line was begun almost before the ink was dry on the armistice agreement between France and Germany. For the construction of the section of the line in Norway the Germans this year are reported to have drafted Norwegian labor and also to have used Russian and other prisoners of war.

The Moscow radio on Aug. 19 broadcast the information that "in the Bergen area, in addition to real fortifications, the German engineers have built quite a few sham ones, repainting antiquated structures and equipping them with dummy guns," apparently in an effort to dissuade the allies from attacking to establish a second front. The employment of dummy guns is ancient in warfare.

Dr. Todt, creator of Germany's famous fortification systems, specialized in Munich and Karlsruhe in the study of the science of road building. In the first World war he was an artillery and also an air force officer. An ardent Nazi and friend of Hitler from 1922 on, he was chosen as the chief engineer of the German road construction organization. He built the autobahnen, or highway system, connecting interior Germany with the frontiers. Not only did he direct the construction of the Siegfried line and the Todt line, but in the winter of 1941-'42 he created the defense line in Russia held by the Germans at that time.

After his death in an air accident in Russia on Feb. 8, 1942, his position as chief construction expert was passed on to Dr. Albert Speer, another engineer and a Hitler favorite.

The .50 Caliber Machine Gun—Vital Weapon

ONE of the most important weapons developed by the United States for use in the present war is the .50 caliber machine gun. This fast-shooting, hard-hitting gun again and again has been employed effectively by our soldiers, sailors, flyers, and marines to shoot down aircraft, scatter deadly bullets among the crews of Japanese warships, and thin the ranks of Japanese ground troops. It can be claimed for this gun that it is more advanced over the .30 caliber machine gun than that latter rapid-fire arm proved to be over the army rifle of World War I.

When we went to war last year we were the fortunate possessors of the .50 caliber machine gun in three distinct types.

One is the water-cooled model, which shoots 600 rounds a minute, has an extreme range of about four miles, and can be mounted for use either against ground targets or air targets.

The second is the comparatively lightweight weapon with a long air-cooled barrel, a part of the armament of our big bombers. It, too, can be fitted onto light vehicles and applied to ground or air targets.

The last and most vital of the three types, the short barreled, stripped frame model, fits snugly into the wings of our fighter planes in batteries of four and six.

These three heavy machine guns shoot an armor piercing bullet which will penetrate not only a considerable thickness of steel (or any armor a plane can carry), but will drill thru cylinder blocks and wreck an engine. The hitting force of the bullet is so powerful that the thinner skin atop a heavy tank or the side armor of lightly armored vehicles provides no protection at all. A .50 caliber gun's stream of bullets chops up sand bags, goes thru brick walls, and eats its way thru thicknesses of cement which are safe from the fire of the lighter .30 caliber weapon, the first World war forerunner of the .50.

Few yet realize the important influence the .30 caliber machine gun had on the tactics and even on the history of the war. Invented by the American Hiram Maxim toward the end of the last century, it was bought by the British armament firm of Vickers, and by 1914 it had attained a very high efficiency. The British, maintaining only a small professional army, which had trained its riflemen to such a proficient point that they could fire more aimed rounds per man per minute than any other European infantryman, banked upon just two of these machine guns to a battalion of 1,000 men as support of their fast and accurately shooting troops.

The Germans, visualizing the waste that would occur in battle, constantly sought a step-up in the fire power of their soldiers. As a result of this we saw the kaiser's armies entering the war with whole machine gun companies, ready to be attached to regiments in the same manner that batteries of artillery were attached to infantry. This was to give increased fire where and when considered necessary. Germany was able to start the war with plenty of machine guns, many of which had been delivered from British factories only a few months before the outbreak of hostilities.

Once the German and French armies had "dug in" toward the end of 1914 and the Germans had gone on the defensive temporarily after their failure to take Paris, the .30 caliber machine gun really began to exert its influence on the course of the war. With the entire conduct of the war revolutionized, deep reaching tactical changes were necessary to meet the menace of this light, rapid-fire weapon. Perhaps it is not too much to say that because of the .30 caliber machine gun the war grew into a static one.

Entrenched behind barbed wire, a much smaller army provided with plenty of machine guns was now able to hold off attackers, and it enjoyed a superiority over them at a ratio of at least 4 to 1. With the front line troops safe behind entrenchments and protected from a sudden attack by barbed wire entanglements, the orthodox field artillery of the attackers, such as the French 75 mm. gun, the British 12 and 18 pounders, and the German 77 mm. gun, were rendered almost useless. The light shells of these guns did not possess sufficient explosives in their 12 and 16 ounce bursting charges to blast out the enemy's machine gun positions, nor were they capable of penetrating thrown-up earthworks or of clearing away wire entanglements to enable the attacking infantry to get in with their bayonets.

The Germans early had recognized that the small, light, and comparatively inexpensive .30 caliber machine gun could do what the field artillery was not powerful enough to accomplish; that is, to stop attacks of determined troops advancing in open order across shell pocked terrain. They therefore firmly dug themselves into posts from which they could mow down any force that tried to cut thru their barbed wire barriers.

The British and French armies presently increased their number of machine guns just as rapidly as their factories, aided by United States arms makers, could supply them. For a time it was a stalemate. Neither side could come to grips with the other. Every attempt by assaulting infantry to get at the enemy was stopped short by defending machine gun fire before the attackers could negotiate the narrow strips of no man's land.

In order to destroy the wire entanglements and smash the machine gun positions, bigger and ever bigger artillery pieces had to be brought forward to the front by both sides. Soon the field war was turned into a siege war. Multitudes of medium and heavy guns had to be provided to demolish the defending machine guns before an attack could be launched. Moreover, when the defenders placed their machine guns in concrete casements they could be replaced faster than the opposing artillery could wipe them out.

Preattack bombardment in 1916 would begin with some 250,000 shells of all calibers being fired into a relatively small sector of the front with the object of destroying the barbed wire, blasting out the machine guns, and demoralizing the defenders. It was called "softening" the enemy for the attack. The time arrived eventually, however, when this no longer was adequate, when some device had to be found for crossing the few yards of bullet-swept no man's land and effectively razing armed machine gun nests. So the tank came into existence.

Tanks at first were merely mobile self-propelled machine guns surrounded with armor plate that would stop rifle and machine gun fire. They afforded little protection against shellfire. With the first tank-led offensives the number of casualties on the attacking side dropped measurably. The following three examples show the importance of being able to withstand machine gun fire.

On the Somme in 1916, in a single day's attack, which failed to win ground, the British suffered a loss of 50,000 men.

In the autumn of 1917, at Cambrai, when they used tanks for the first time, they won a considerable victory, with fewer than 5,000 casualties.

In June, 1918, using both tanks and low-flying airplanes from which they sprayed the defending forces with machine gun fire, they smashed thru the enemy's concrete defenses and again won a great victory. Losses this time were fewer than 1,000.

Before the advent of the tank 250 to 300 shells (6 or even 8 inch caliber) had to be expended to knock out a single concrete machine gun pill box, and for an attack to have any hope of success this had to be done not once, but scores of times. The tank changed all this.

To combat the tank a new and more powerful weapon was needed. The .30 caliber machine gun no longer was sufficient. It was weak in range (approximately one and a half miles) and in penetration of its bullet. These are faults that have been corrected in the newer .50 caliber machine gun.

The .30 caliber machine gun could be kept out by about 5/8 of an inch of armor, sandbags, a few feet of earth, or a brick wall. The .50 caliber gun hits many times harder, with a bullet weighing 681 grains (as compared with 150 grains, the weight of the present day M2 .30 caliber bullet) and possesses more than four times greater power of penetration. Its heavy armor-piercing projectile will drill thru all except the thickest tank armor. The bullet riddles easily any light tank and can quickly put out of action any armored troop-carrying vehicle within range by knocking its engine block into scrap.

As an anti-aircraft weapon the .50 caliber gun can pour out a stream of bullets that is deadly to planes under 5,000 feet. The bullets are dangerous up to 10,000 or 12,000 feet. Low flying airplanes are in greater peril from the massed fire of .50s than from the fire of the slower, heavier anti-aircraft guns, such as the 20 mm. and the 37 mm. automatics, whose relatively slow rate of fire allows for only a few shots to be fired at the planes before they pass on out of range.

No airplane can carry armor thick enough to ward off the .50's high velocity, armor piercing bullets. And, tho self-sealing tanks will effectively plug the perforations made by .30 caliber bullets, the sealing is ineffective when the tanks are punctured by a few .50 caliber incendiary bullets, which quickly set fire to the leaking fuel.

Troops under the fire of .50 caliber guns rarely fail to realize the seriousness of their position. The heavier slugs of these guns make a much greater noise than the .30 caliber bullets when they cut thru the air or ricochet from metal, stones, or concrete, and, when not inflicting actual damage, go a great way toward destroying morale.

Because of their broad spread of fire, the .50 caliber machine guns are more effective than light field guns, whose shells merely sprinkle the terrain. In the type of battle now most common, where armies make contact on fast moving vehicles and where the fighting moves over a number of miles in a single day, artillery cannot be massed as it was in the slower war of 1914-'18. The .50 caliber gun, which requires few men to operate it and uses comparatively light ammunition that can be transported easily, occupies a place which the field gun cannot fill.

The .50 is an offensive as well as a defensive weapon. Ordinary protection, which stops rifle bullets, light shell splinters, and .30 caliber machine gun fire, is no protection at all against the bullets of the .50. When employed for the screening of attackers, its death-dealing fire forces the defenders to the ground, thereby allowing its own light mortar crews and grenade throwers to creep up close enough to lob their missiles into the enemy's trenches and fox holes.

In the air the .50 has shown itself to be perhaps the most effective firearm for planes. During the battle of Britain in the autumn of 1940 the royal air force's batteries of eight .30 caliber machine guns, mounted in each fighter, proved superior to the Luftwaffe's two 20 mm. and two .314 caliber guns. The 20 mm. shells were fairly dependable, except in that their sensitive fuse caps exploded them outside the armor and engine blocks of the British planes. The machine guns of the RAF, on the other hand, literally cut the wings off the German planes. The .30s lacked in one particular, however. Their range was far too short.

Altho the British were the first to recognize that it was vital to give bombers maximum armament, they still carry only .30 caliber machine guns in their planes of this type, with the exception of certain models that are armed with a 20 mm. shell-firing cannon for defense purposes. The British led the way in bomber armament by mounting their .30 caliber guns in power operated turrets, which for more than two years made them formidable to attack. But they failed to continue their advance and, according to reports, have not yet mounted .50 caliber guns.

While the 20 mm. cannon, especially the fast shooting Mauser used in the German FW-190, has a high rate of fire, the heavy weight of its ammunition (about four times as much to the round as that of the .50 machine gun) prohibits planes from carrying enough for more than a few seconds of shooting. Furthermore, the 20 mm. shell is not as effective, because it will not drill thru as much armor or engine block as will the smaller, high velocity bullet of the .50.

In an endeavor to overcome the armor of the RAF planes, the Luftwaffe began replacing the two 20 mm. shell cannon, until then the standard armament of the ME-109's, with a splendid 15 mm. (about .60 caliber) machine gun, which fires 600 rounds a minute. As excellent as this weapon is, it cannot deliver the fire power, spread of fire, and converging fire that are possible from two or three heavy machine guns mounted in each wing of a plane. With machine guns spaced several feet apart, the paths of their bullets cross about 200 feet ahead of the plane and then begin to fan out again ahead of that point. This bullet spread helps the pilot, who aims his guns by aiming his plane.

America's Flying Fortresses, each armed with nine .50 caliber machine guns, set in pairs or singly in power operated turrets, are able to defend themselves against German fighters in daylight, simply because our gunners are able to start shooting before the Germans themselves are close enough to register hits. The German armor does not protect the pilot or the engine from the fire of the hard-hitting .50s. When American fighters went into action against the Japanese it was discovered that the four .50 caliber guns of the American planes, pouring out a total of 20 heavy slugs a second, had a greater range than the enemy's 20 mm. guns and that they hit so hard that they virtually chopped the engines out of the Japanese planes.

Lieut. Comm. Edward H. O'Hare had four .50s in his plane when, last Feb. 20, he shot down five and damaged a sixth twin engine Japanese bomber. Each time he concentrated his fire on the nearest victim's engine. He could not have used more than 60 rounds to each Japanese plane. In each case he approached, fired a short burst, and the enemy engine was put out of action. It is improbable that he could have downed that number of enemy ships had he been armed with only .30 caliber guns, which would have required a great many more rounds of fire to kill the Japanese bomber crews and damage their planes sufficiently to cause them to fall.

In assessing the value of a weapon it is wise to take into account its effect on enemy morale. Once the enemy knows that his armor is inadequate to withstand the fire he is subjected to, he is not going to take as many chances as he might if he had a greater feeling of security.

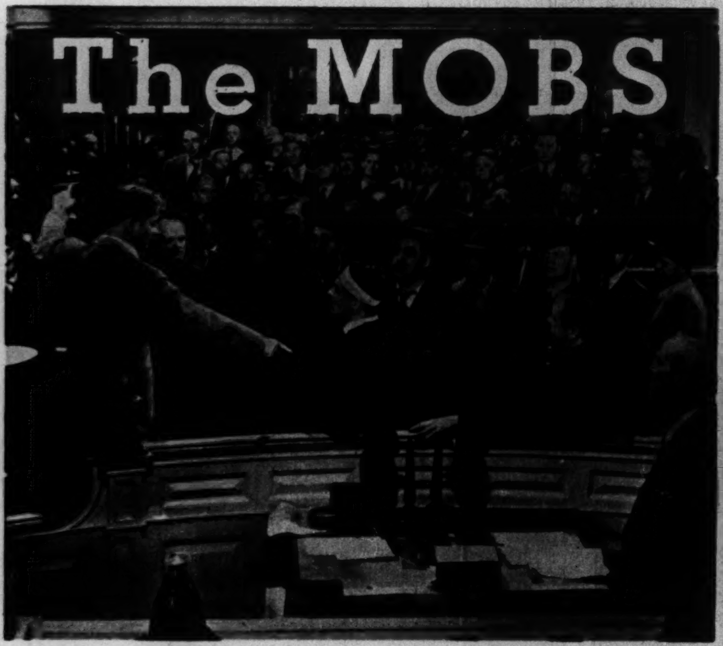
The MOBS



The extras in this mob scene from "Talk of the Town" got several days' work parading around like hoodlums.

Hollywood.

ORSON WELLES hit the top with the extras the first day of shooting on "Citizen Kane." He changed the word "extras" to "talent players," and they were very grateful. Some of them are quite snooty and well aware of their importance in picture making.

Don't let anybody kid you about the movies doing without extras. They're cutting down, but only because they have to. They might just as well shoot a picture without putting film in the camera. You might argue that if a legitimate production can be successful without them, why not a picture? Ah, but that's where the rub comes, my friends.

Motion pictures are much more elastic than the stage, and what a Broadway producer leaves to the imagination the Hollywood producer puts in. He leaves nothing to the imagination; 'cause why? An audience might begin to think—then where would he be? Sure, we've had battles royal between the better directors, who want to leave some things to the imagination of the beholder, and the producer, who doesn't—but that's another story.

When a director wants to depict pathos on the screen he'll create a scene like that in "The Pride of the Yankees" in which Teresa Wright, as Mrs. Lou Gehrig, is seen in the bleachers minus all extras. That's a scene that I'll be willing to bet will remain in your memory.

On the stage "My Sister Eileen" wowed them for a couple of years. But the picture version expanded every incident that was merely referred to behind the footlights. On the stage the famous conga took place with six Portuguese merchant marine officers. On the screen the camera followed the conga from the basement studio to Greenwich Village, where it grew in proportion to the population. All those people who joined the conga line were extras and were an integral part of one of the most amusing scenes in the picture. But even if they'd had the money they couldn't have done that on the stage.

Did you ever see a big musical without a dance sequence? In "Holiday Inn," "Panama Hattie," "You Were Never Lovelier," and many more, what created the festive spirit? You guessed it—the "talent players."

They aren't just automatons or puppets that move around as tho guided by strings or moving on a treadmill. They are "living backgrounds." Directors Mitch Leisen and Preston Sturges insist that as much care be given to selecting extras and bit players as to choosing stars. A star has an entire picture in which to establish his character; an extra does it as quickly as a finger is snapped.

If extras distract attention from the foreground action they've failed in their job. Imagine two stars talking on a busy street without any people moving behind them! Yet you as a theatergoer must not notice them. You're just aware that they're there. Extras who resort to tricks to make themselves noticed, or who "mug," are as glaringly bad in their jobs as is an artist who mixes his paints atrociously.

The mob that broke into the courthouse for "The Talk of the Town" comprised more than 200 extras who got a few days' work parading around like a bunch of hoodlums.

LUCILLE BALL . . . up from a mannequin.

Working in the extra ranks many times leads to better things. A director will spot a comer and give him or her a few lines of dialog. That little break might lead to a term contract, and that stock ticket might lead to stardom. It's happened, and some of our biggest stars used to call Central Casting every night in the hope that the next day would find them working in the background of any picture.

Joel McCrea was an extra all thru his high school years at Hollywood High. He used to double in horse-riding stunts for heroes and heroines. Those of us who know Joel well realize he's plenty smart. He merely put his brains to work to get out of the ranks. You see, kiddies, today success isn't handed to you on a golden platter. You've got to work for it. But have patience.

Jake Shubert saw Joan Crawford dancing at a club in Detroit, gave her a job in his show, "Innocent Eyes," in New York. Harry Rapf saw Joan in that and offered her a screen test. Joan's arrival in Hollywood was unheralded. On a large lot which boasted many stars she was one of a hundred attractive girls. She attracted attention as a dancer in "Sally, Irene, and Mary." After the picture had proved a success Joan was called in by the big boss, and the rest is history. Don't think Joan isn't fighting even harder today—but now it's for good parts, not only for herself but for her husband. (Well, look what she did for her former two—Doug Jr. and Franchot!)

Claudette Colbert

Clark Gable was introduced to Los Angeles when he played Killer Mears in "The Last Mile," and Lionel Barrymore, then directing at Metro, gave him his first screen test and a part in "The Painted Desert." From that he went into another part in "The Easiest Way," in which he supported Connie Bennett and Bob Montgomery. He didn't even get billing. I know, 'cause I was in it. But he surely made a powerful impression. Then he was put under contract. In his meteoric rise to fame he played the gangster in "Dance, Fools, Dance." Then came "The Secret Six," many others, and finally "Gone with the Wind."

Guess who this is.

She's flown over South American jungles to shoot crocodiles from the sky; once she took an open-cockpit plane up in freezing weather to effect the rescue of a school boy; she once played a fast game of polo; has a hobby of wood carving; gained recognition as a mannequin in "Roberta," which got her a long-term contract. Give up? Lucille Ball! Needless to say, her flying days are over. The studio ordered her grounded. She's gone from RKO to Metro—and the top rung of the ladder.

Claudette Colbert's chance meeting with Cecil B. De Mille while strolling across the Paramount lot started her off on the right foot.

"How," he asked, "would you like to play the wickedest woman in the world?"

That stopped her, and she managed to gulp, "Why, I'd love it!"

So right then and there she was cast as Cleopatra in "The Sign of the Cross." It was tough work. Thru De Mille she learned what authenticity means. De Mille has many finds to his credit, and Claudette is one little gal who proved worthy of his faith.

Now, with the shortage of man power, our producers had better look in their own back yards. There's plenty of potential star material in the ranks. Richard Simmons got his first assignment in "Seven Sweethearts," with Kathryn Grayson and Van Heflin; also "Navy Convoy," with Bob Taylor and Charles Laughton. Russell Wade is another. RKO grabbed him for better things. Keep your eye on Louise La Planche (elder sister of Rosemary). She's under contract to Paramount now—played Martha Scott's school chum in "Our Town." Johnny Bogden, an all-American boy, was tested for Bette Davis' son in "Watch on the Rhine,"—missed out because of his height. But he's had many nibbles. One day some smart director will carry thru with a screen test, and Johnny won't miss, 'cause he's good looking and has what it takes.

Today the extras have a better chance than ever, especially the men—even tho many older stars have been brought back to the screen. But you cannot expect a youngster like Kathryn Grayson to fall in love with—let's say Warner Baxter—and have it stick! 'Cause we've gone beyond that.

LOOKING AT HOLLYWOOD with HEDDA HOPPER

DISTINGUISHED AMERICANS

● This is another in a series of biographical sketches of America's historical celebrities appearing every week in the Graphic Section. The illustrations are taken from a famous work, "The National Portrait Gallery of Distinguished Americans," published in 1865.

WILLIAM PINKNEY, lawyer, statesman, and diplomat, was born in Annapolis, Md., March 17, 1764. The sympathies of his English-born father were with Great Britain in the Revolutionary war, and as a result his properties were confiscated. This made it necessary for William, who at an early age already had favored the American cause, to withdraw from King William school in Annapolis.

His eagerness for learning, however, impelled him to continue his studies independently of school. At first he decided on medicine as a profession and studied in the office of a Baltimore physician. His skill in debate and his love of oratory soon, however, caused him to switch to law. In 1783 he began reading law in the office of Samuel Chase in Baltimore, and in 1786 he was admitted to the bar. He began the practice of the legal profession in Hartford county, Maryland.

Pinkney was a member of the state convention that ratified the federal constitution in 1788, but his vote was cast against ratification, a circumstance warranting mention here in light of the fact that he later attained fame as a constitutional lawyer. From 1788 to 1792 he was a member of the Maryland legislature. Elected to the second congress in 1790, he refused to serve after his election had been contested and he had won his right to the seat.

President Washington chose Pinkney as a joint commissioner with Christopher Gore to adjust with Great Britain the American maritime claims arising from the war and the post-war situation at sea. He passed eight years in London, returning to America and to the practice of law in Baltimore in 1804. The next year he was appointed attorney general of Maryland.

In 1807 President Jefferson chose Pinkney as a joint commissioner with James Monroe to negotiate with Great Britain the subjects of reparations and impressments. The treaty that these two obtained was repudiated by Jefferson, Monroe was called home, and Pinkney was left in London as American minister. For several years he labored unsuccessfully to obtain reparations for the attack of the British ship Leopard on the American ship Chesapeake and to bring about the repeal of the British orders in council. On Feb. 28, 1811, he broke off relations with Great Britain, convinced that a war between the British and the Americans was inevitable. On his return to this country in December, 1811, he was named attorney general in President Madison's cabinet.

In pamphlets, under the pseudonym of Publius, he stanchly supported the War of 1812, and as a major of a Maryland militia battalion he took part in the battle of Bladensburg, fought just outside Washington, Aug. 24, 1814. This was a few months after he had retired from the cabinet.

Serving as a representative in congress from March, 1815, to April, 1816, he resigned to accept appointment as United States minister to Russia, with a special mission to Naples en route. Instructed by his government to procure compensation for shipping seized by the kingdom of Naples, he failed of his assignment. In Russia he was unable to negotiate a commercial treaty, but he did succeed in establishing more friendly relations between the Russian and American governments.

Pinkney's last public services were as a United States senator from Dec. 21, 1819, until his death. It was then that he distinguished himself as an interpreter of the constitution. His speeches were instrumental in bringing about the Missouri compromise.

His most distinguished labors, however, according to the "Dictionary of American Biography," were in the Supreme court, where his arguments in several important cases were his crowning achievements. Chief Justice John Marshall once proclaimed him "the greatest man I ever saw in a court of justice."

William Pinkney died in Washington, Feb. 25, 1822.

1—Milk, a pint at least, and more for children.

2—A serving of meat, fish, poultry, dried beans, or cheese.

3—Whole wheat or enriched bread, and frequently a whole-grain breakfast cereal in addition.

4—An egg apiece (or at least three or four a week).

5—Some good source of vitamin C, like fresh orange juice, canned tomato juice, grapefruit, or raw cabbage.

6—Two vegetables in addition to potatoes, one of them a green leafy one, with green and yellow vegetables appearing most often.

7—At least one fruit in addition to the orange juice—canned, fresh, or dried.

8—Butter or a vitamin A fortified margarine.

It's easy for even a "well fed" family to suffer from the effects of malnutrition. The food at the family table may be abundant, but if it doesn't contain enough of the right dietary essentials, including vitamins and minerals, members of the group may suffer from the effects of undernourishment.

Fresh vegetables are such an important part of our daily diet that every homemaker should learn to serve a variety of them, in many different ways. Take the plentiful and inexpensive cauliflower, for example. There are at least a dozen enticing ways to serve it.

Crisp, raw cauliflower pieces are enjoyed by most children because of their crunchiness, and may take the place of a salad at mealtime. Raw cauliflower may be sliced thinly or cut fine to take part in the making of many a good raw vegetable salad.

Cooked cauliflower may be creamed, served in cheese or tomato sauce, or it may be served simply with butter, salt, and pepper as its only seasonings. If the whole head of cauliflower is cooked in one piece it looks attractive on a platter with a creamy cheese sauce poured over it. This vegetable must be cooked carefully, as it belongs to the cabbage family and develops an unpleasant odor and flavor if it is overcooked.

Steaming usually isn't the best method for cauliflower, as it seems to encourage the development of strong flavor. Good results may be obtained in a pressure saucepan, however, if the cooking is timed exactly according to directions. Boiling the cauliflower in salted water, without a cover, is a good cookery method. This is easiest to do if the vegetable is cut into small pieces.

Here's an excellent cheese sauce for cauliflower: Blend 3 tablespoons flour with 3 tablespoons butter and add gradually 1½ cups milk. Cook and stir until thickened and smooth. Season with ⅛ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper, and add ½ cup grated sharp cheese. Heat until the cheese has melted.

Cauliflower is a seasonable vegetable right now. There are many attractive ways to prepare it, both raw and cooked.

Does your family get a balanced diet like this every day? These are the foods essential for good nutrition.

THE LANDING OF THE PILGRIM FATHERS IN NEW ENGLAND

By FELICIA DOROTHEA HEMANS

The breaking waves dashed high
On a stern and rock-bound coast,
And the woods against a stormy sky
Their giant branches tossed;

And the heavy night hung dark
The hills and waters o'er,
When a band of exiles moored their bark
On the wild New England shore.

Not as the conqueror comes,
They, the true-hearted, came;
Not with the roll of the stirring drums,
And the trumpet that sings of fame;

Not as the flying come,
In silence and in fear;
They shook the depths of the desert gloom
With their hymns of lofty cheer.

Amid the storm they sang,
And the stars heard, and the sea;
And the sounding aisles of the dim woods rang
To the anthem of the free.

The ocean eagle soared
From his nest by the white wave's foam,
And the rocking pines of the forest roared,—
This was their welcome home.

There were men with hoary hair
Amidst that pilgrim band:
Why had they come to wither there,
Away from their childhood's land?

There was woman's fearless eye,
Lit by her deep love's truth;
There was manhood's brow serenely high,
And the fiery heart of youth.

What sought they thus afar?
Bright jewels of the mine?
The wealth of seas, the spoils of war?—
They sought a faith's pure shrine!

Aye, call it holy ground,
The soil where first they trod;
They have left unstained what there they found,—
Freedom to worship God.

America at WAR!

A PICTURE ALBUM OF THE FIRST YEAR

This is the first of a series of special albums which will tell in dramatic, unforgettable pictures the story of America's first year in World War II. The heroes, the battles, the poignant human experiences will all be preserved in valuable reference form.

GRAPHIC SECTION Chicago Sunday Tribune THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER NOV. 22, 1942

OUT OF THE SKY on Dec. 7, 1941, war burst upon America. It struck on that Black Sunday as a bolt of fiery horror. At 7:55 a. m. 150 to 200 carrier-based Japanese warplanes roared down on Pearl Harbor, chief United States naval base in the Pacific. They swept in, wave on wave, for three thunderous hours. They knifed at the warships in the harbor and at every air base on the island of Oahu.

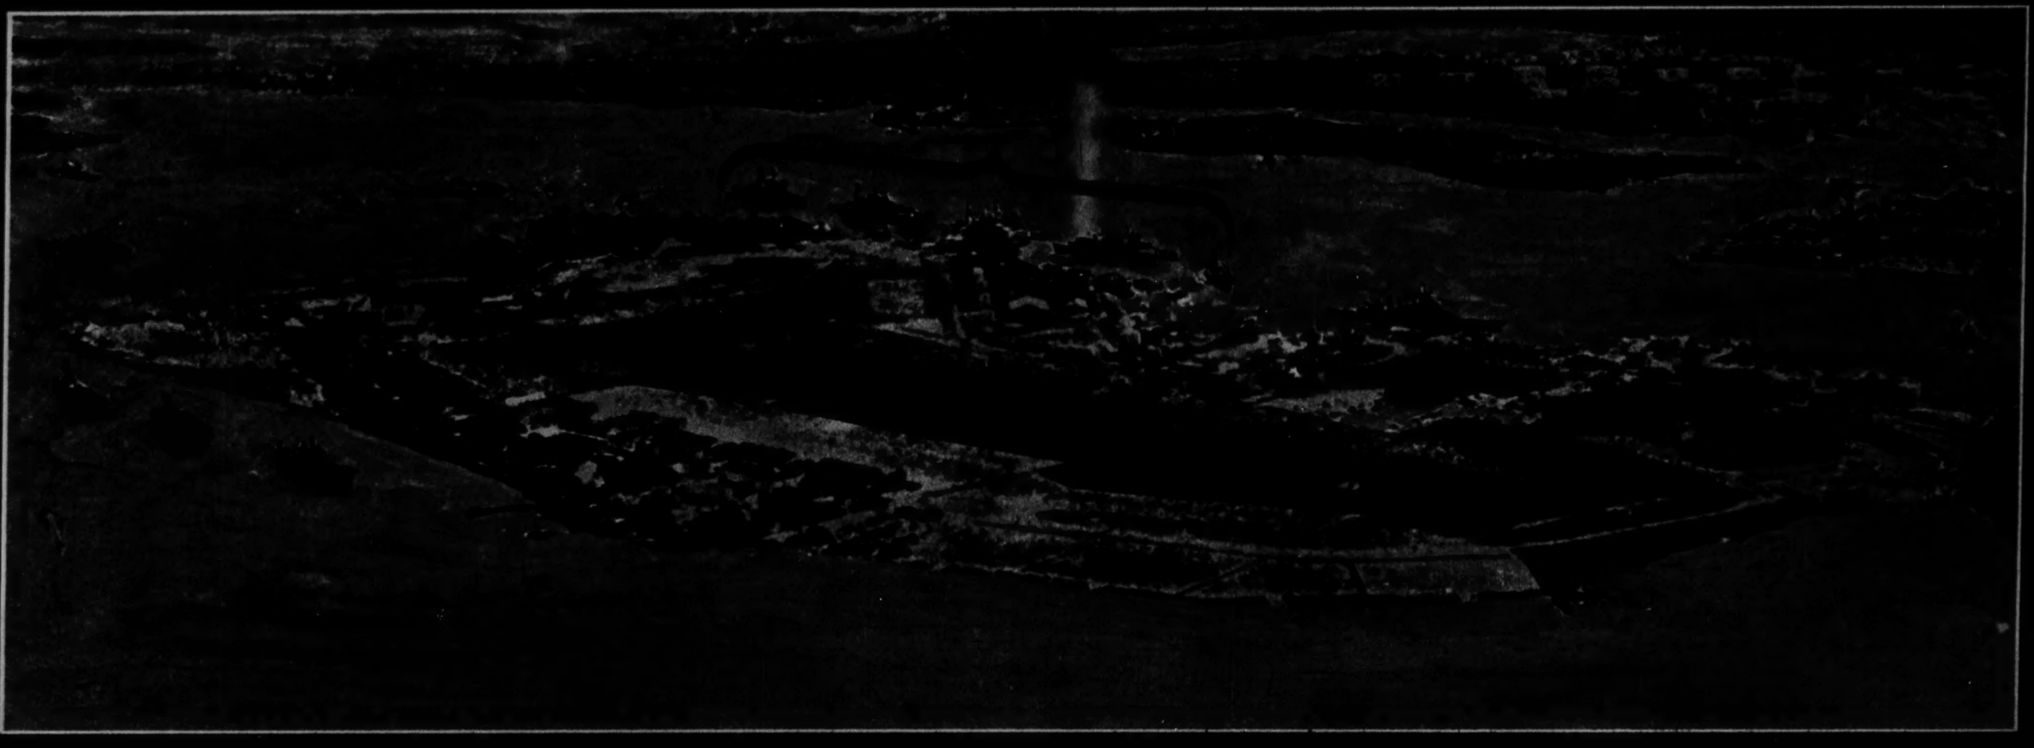
When the last hostile plane had wheeled away, a large part of the Pacific fleet had been put out of action; American planes drawn up on the island had been blasted without a chance of taking to the air; hangars and other airfield installations had been destroyed; the navy had lost more than 2,000 dead, and the army and the civilian population had suffered heavy loss of life. It was the worst naval disaster in American history.

The navy admitted these ship losses: The battleship Arizona, the target ship Utah, the mine layer Oglala, and three destroyers sunk; the battleship Oklahoma capsized, but capable of being righted and restored; other ships damaged.

One of the destroyers sunk was the Shaw. Struck by a bomb, its magazine exploded (photo above). Later it was restored to service.

Experts pointed out that the American ships had been berthed in clusters and had been potted like sitting ducks (see bracket in photo below, from Tokio via Berlin and London).

On the alert in Hawaii was Pvt. Joseph Lockard, practicing at a plane detecting unit. He reported approaching planes to an officer, who assumed they were friendly and took no action. Sent to officers' school, Lockard was commissioned July 12.



Rent by bombs and aerial torpedoes, the battleship Arizona (above) went down in flames. Among the heroes of Pearl Harbor were the Arizona's bandsmen. As Japanese bombs began bursting "they went to their battle stations, one of the most hazardous on the ship—down below," passing ammunition to the barking guns above. To a man they were killed when the vessel's magazine blew up.

While the Arizona burned (smoke pall at left), Japanese planes (circled) continued to loose bombs and torpedoes against other ships lying motionless at Pearl Harbor. Meanwhile hastily manned American anti-aircraft guns fought back (shell bursts, upper right).

After the surprise attack had ended, the naval air station on Ford Island presented this scene of destruction. Littering the shore, wreckage of navy patrol planes.

Two-man submarines, believed loosed from ships 100 miles away, took part in the Pearl Harbor surprise. One was sunk by American guns more than an hour before the air attack; a second was sunk later; this one grounded and was captured.

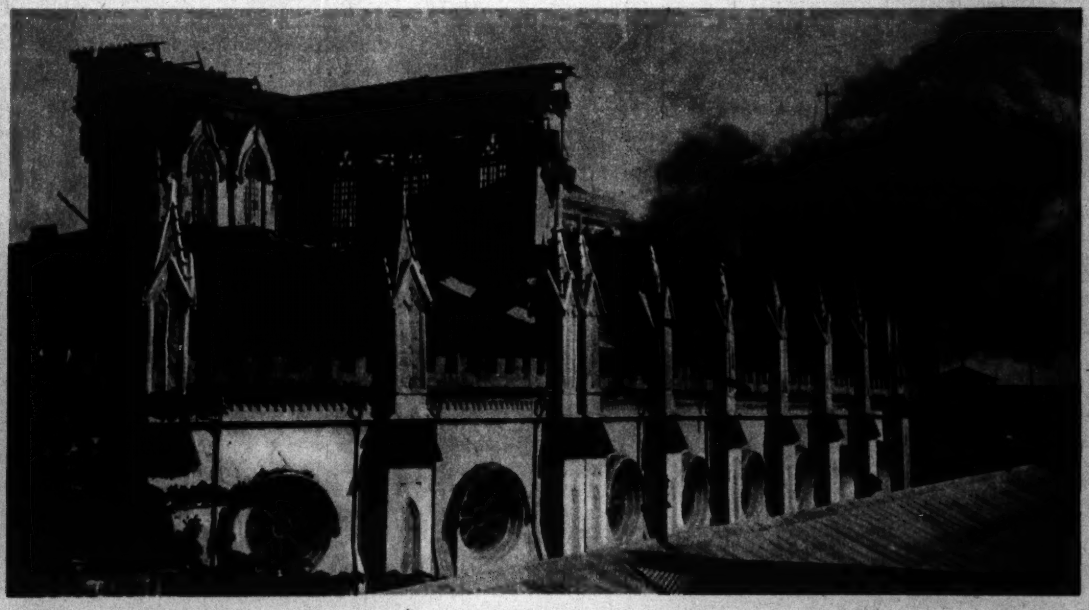
On Dec. 12 a rain of bombs started this water front blaze at the Cavite naval base; simultaneously nearby Manila also was heavily bombed. At this hour Japanese land forces were beginning their pincers drive against the Philippine capital.



General MacArthur, in the hope of saving Manila from destruction, declared it an open city; nevertheless the enemy, in defiance of civilized rules of warfare, spared no bombs. The capital's death toll was high; this church in the famous walled city was one of the ancient buildings to suffer Japanese fury.

Tragic news filtering from the Philippines was lightened by an epic deed of heroism: On Dec. 11 a bomber piloted by Capt. Colin Kelly (right) bombed heavily a Japanese battleship, the Haruna. Corp. Meyer Levin (left) released the bombs that hit the mighty vessel. Nearing the home field, Kelly's crippled engines failed. The rest of his crew, at his order, bailed out to safety, but Kelly died in his crashing plane.

Second in command under General Mc
Arthur was Maj. Gen. Jonathan M. Wa

Capt. L. A. Mason, Maj. C. H. Sm

From the harbor the navy later raised this torpedo plane bearing the red sun of Japan upon its wings; anti-aircraft fire had knocked it out of the sky. At least a fifth of the attacking planes are believed to have been shot down.

In Honolulu an emergency call for doctors and nurses was broadcast, and against a background of battle smoke these stern-faced women strode to answer the call.

Maj. Gen. Walter C. Short, army commander at Hawaii, like Admiral Kimmel, was retired on Feb. 28. Both were eligible for retirement, for which they had made application Feb. 7.

Supreme feats of valor were written into the history of the Bataan campaign by "the one-man army from Chicago," Capt. Arthur Wermuth (above). Wermuth, 31 years old, killed at least 116 Japanese, captured many others, scouted behind enemy lines again and again, was wounded three times, and was decorated with several medals. He was last seen by comrades on March 2, while fighting on the peninsula still raged; his fate is unknown.

The mosquito boat hero of the Philippines, Lieut. Comm. John D. Bulkeley, and his squadron of motor torpedo boats thrilled the nation with unprecedented exploits. To these heroes are credited four ships, including a cruiser; four planes, and two armored landing boats. In one of these small vessels Bulkeley carried General MacArthur from the Philippines to Australia. For his heroism he was awarded the congressional medal of honor and other decorations.

At right: One of the innocent Filipino victims of treacherous Japanese fury was 13-year-old Bartolon Valderema. Overworked doctors in a Bataan hospital found time to dress his abdominal wound, the work of an enemy bomb. In the Japanese invasion many Filipino civilians died; the number may never be known.

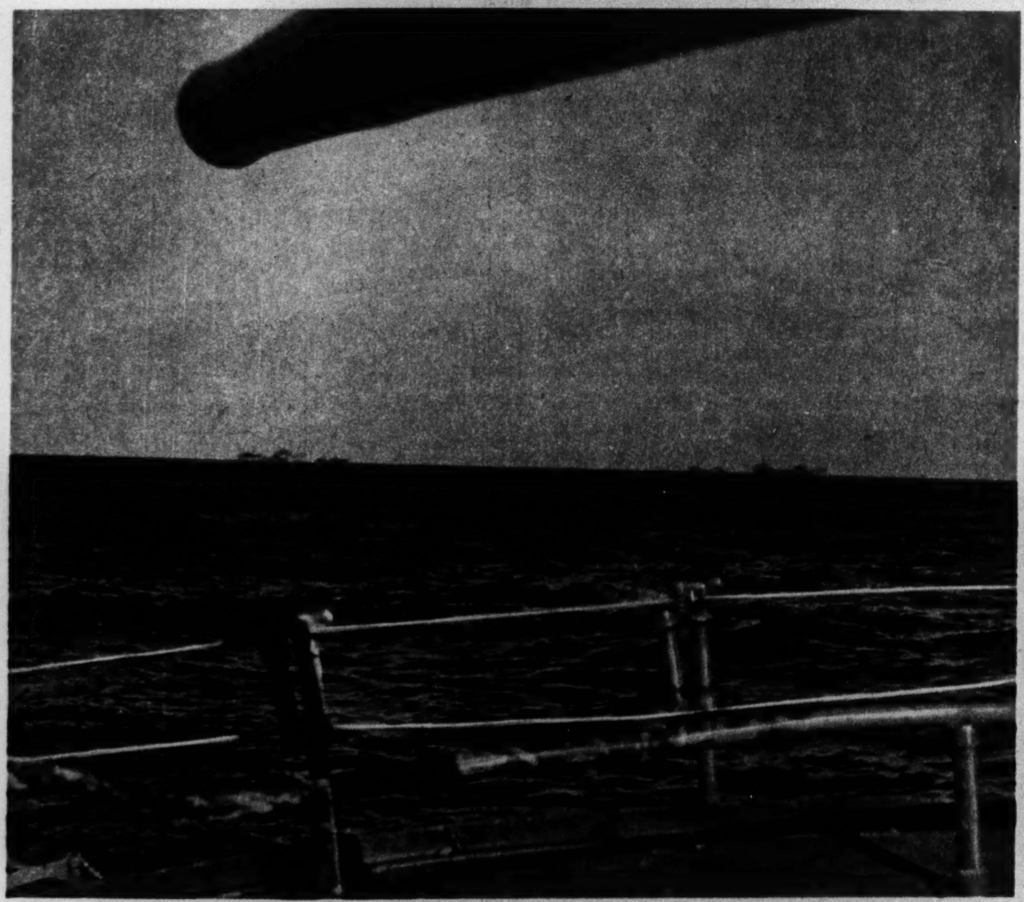
. STIRRING PHOTOS OF BATTLE ON FAR-FLUNG FRONTS OVERSEAS!

THE HOME FRONT

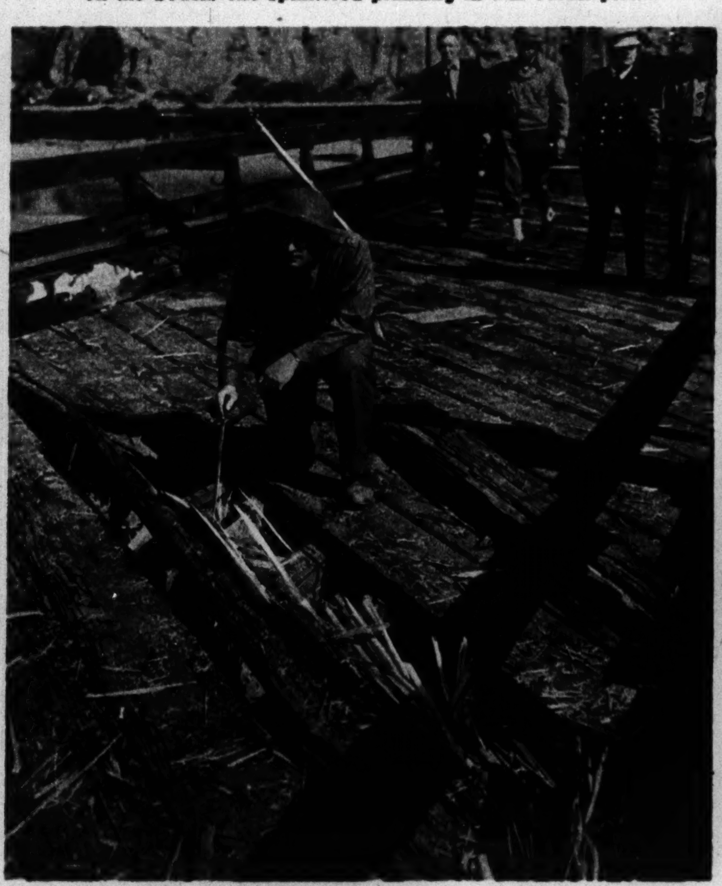
America reacted swiftly to Japanese infamy. On Dec. 8, the day following the surprise attack on Hawaii, the Philippines, and Guam, a joint session of congress heard a 10-minute message from President Roosevelt. Within 33 minutes congress declared war. Three days later Germany and Italy declared war on the United States, and America answered immediately with counter declarations. Ninety per cent of the population of the world now was involved in World War II.

To America in December flew Prime Minister Winston Churchill of Britain. At the White House he explored with President Roosevelt military, economic, financial, and supply problems of the war. The British premier arrived at Washington on Dec. 22, spent Christmas at the executive mansion, visited Canada and Florida, and returned to England by air on Jan. 17.



Axis submarines, finding the United States unprepared to combat them, sank ships in American waters by the hundred with impunity until at long last convoying, air patrols, and other measures gathered effectiveness. This is a destroyer-guarded convoy in the Pacific. (A. P. photo.)

Below: The first attack on American soil came on Feb. 23 when a Japanese submarine, lying about a mile and a half off Santa Barbara, Cal., pumped approximately 25 shells into an oil field. Some of the shells fell on the beach; one splintered planking in this ocean pier.



But the only object hit in the California oil field was the gear housing in the pumping machinery of one well. A soldier here holds a piece of corrugated sheeting blown off by the explosion. Total damage in this twilight bombardment was estimated at only $500.

We Have Just Begun to Fight!

At right: Early in February a nation shaken by an unbroken series of disasters in the Pacific was electrified by the news it had waited patiently to hear: America had taken the offensive! On Jan. 31 navy warships and planes struck at Japanese strongholds in the Marshall and Gilbert Islands in the first major move to clear the supply route to the antipodes. This striking photo, made by a navy scouting plane pilot, shows the work of shells and bombs on Wotje atoll, in the Marshalls. Ammunition and fuel dumps burn; six ships have been destroyed or sunk. Later all shore installations were demolished.

In the America at War Album next week: More thrilling pictures of the raid on the Marshall and Gilbert Islands; of the last heroic days and the surrender of the Americans on the Bataan peninsula; of the capitulation of Corregidor; and other photos of subsequent months of the struggle against the axis.

GRAPHIC LITTLE THEATER presents Loretta Young, Brian Aherne in "A NIGHT TO REMEMBER"

1 Nancy and Jeff (Loretta Young and Brian Aherne) rent a mysterious Greenwich apartment as a honeymoon home in which Jeff can get material for his latest murder mystery.

2 Unbeknown to them, they are watched by a sinister group of neighbors, all under lifetime "lease" to the landlord because of blackmail.

3 Seeking atmosphere, Nancy and Jeff visit a honky-tonk near by and learn to their consternation of two strangers who are due to have a rendezvous in their apartment that very evening.

4 In the middle of the night they are awakened by noises of a prowler. "Get out of here!" screams Nancy. Jeff investigates and says with a shudder, "He can't—he's dead!"

5 In full cry, Nancy and Jeff hunt clews. "I found one," Nancy exults. "A knife. Now we can get finger prints." "I don't think we'd better," warns Jeff, "because that knife is mine. Hide it and we'll call the police."

6 The inspector (Sidney Toler) accuses Jeff of the crime when Jeff's only alibi is that he's a mystery writer. Nancy defends him. "He doesn't know anything about the perfect crime. Read his last book!"

7 But Jeff does manage to turn suspicion on Maggie, the maid (Blanche Yurka). When she starts babbling about every one in the building, however, the inspector gives up. "I still like you as the suspect," he says to Jeff.

8 Jeff decides his only out is to solve the crime himself. He and Nancy talk with one of the tenants, Ann (Jeff Donnell), who inadvertently tells them about the mysterious blackmailer who controls the lives of the tenants.

9 The manager of the apartment where the blackmailer lives (Gale Sondergaard) is free with information about him, but in turn gets a lot from Jeff, with the result that he is marked as the criminal's next victim.

10 Jeff and Nancy get a warning and do the best they can to prepare for danger. They foil the villain all right, literally, as you can see, but how? Ah! Read Jeff's book. (THE END)

A Foreign Correspondent Writes His Boss

When John Thompson, Chicago Tribune correspondent in London, wrote to his managing editor the personal letter printed here he had no idea that the letter would be published. His informal report on life in London contains material of such widespread interest, however, that the editor of The Tribune concluded it should be printed.

By JOHN THOMPSON

DEAR BOSS: With a little leisure time, now I think a letter is in order telling you as much as I can about my work, how it's going, what the future might hold, and about dear old London, which you will remember well from the last war. It's taken me a while to get my feet on the ground and during this period I've moved slowly, trying to set up contacts, to find out the various story possibilities, and to absorb as much background from my actual relations with the army and navy as is possible, as well as to listen to the sage advice of Larry Rue (Rue is head of the Tribune London bureau).

And right here I might mention something about Rue. You have in him one of the best, if not the best, newspaper men and bureau chiefs in Europe. I've never known any one like him. There isn't any one of importance in England that he doesn't know. His news contacts range from the extreme "right" to the extreme "left." He is as loyal and intelligent a representative of The Tribune as any man could want, and, oddly enough, altho often engaged in heated debate and discussion with friends who hold completely divergent views, is regarded by these same people as one of the most honest and able men they know. . . .

As for myself, the scene for the first two weeks was quite confusing. But I've begun to sort my way thru the maze of wartime London, to learn who speaks with authority and who knows his job in the "Battle of Grosvenor Square," and to acquire more background. . . .

All of the big "do's," such as the Dieppe raid and so on, are handled thru the American Correspondents' association on a rotation basis, the armed forces usually limiting the number who can go at any one time. My name is coming up on a new list, with Seymour Korman (another Tribune staff man) and Larry Rue following in that order. Thru this we hope to be (and I am sure we will be) in on anything big.

John Thompson

For other news of the troops and our various forces I depend on contacts. In that connection I was lucky with the paratroops. I knew them from my camp trips back home and was visiting them to gather material for later release when the ban on stories of their presence here was lifted. I was the only reporter who visited them, so had the chance for two exclusive stories. Then later I again was the only reporter along on their hop to Ireland, a fact which caused a mild storm among all the opposition. . . .

London has lived up to most of my expectations. From a historical point of view the city is fascinating. There is evidence almost everywhere of the bad blitzes, but surprisingly enough this picture of destruction is not as bad as I had expected; London is so vast, and the bombed areas have long since been cleared of rubble. You know from walking about and viewing the ruins and from talking with people who lived thru the nightmare of 99 nights of fire and bomb raids what a shattering experience the city and its inhabitants endured. But their powers of resilience are amazing, and they produce in the visitor a profound admiration for the guts of the ordinary Joe Blow.

Living here is of course far more expensive under war conditions than at home, and while a pound sterling is worth about $4 in exchange, the pound actually has the buying power of about $1. Food costs are up and, of course, food is rationed, but it is possible to get a pretty fair diet when you know your way about the eating places.

As you might imagine, in a large city, well within the war zone, life is tinged with a certain amount of hysteria. Nerves are more jagged. People live from day to day in a jittering, popinjay sort of way. Friendships are quickly made and life functions on a more intense basis.

However, one soon develops a certain routine. When not actually visiting certain troop installations, you make the rounds of your "beat" during the day, calling on the military, lining up new stories. You meet for luncheon or cocktails and in the evening you usually have some one to dinner. You're at the office in the afternoon and again at night, and you forget all about eight hour days and five day weeks. And then you often wind up packed full of so much vital information that you get a bit scared, but you soon learn to turn your mind into a filing cabinet and pack the dynamite far back into the last cells, where it will color your background and your thinking, altho it may never see the light of day.

You praise Allah for the officers' post exchange, where you are permitted to buy on the officers' ration such items as six packs of cigarets (American) a week, at about a dime a pack; pipe tobacco, soap, razor blades, tooth powder, shaving cream, three cans of American beer, a bar of candy.

If any one else comes over this way, here is some advice:

In London you often wear civies. By a stroke of luck I brought one suit and two shirts. Since arriving, I've scrounged enough coupons for extra shirts and socks and am waiting for a shipment from home. If you fly over, your weight allowance is 55 pounds. That includes everything—typewriter, suitcase, etc.—except an overcoat, hat, or anything in the overcoat pockets. I brought only a trench coat. That's an error. A reporter should buy as much military equipment as possible before sailing. . . .

Bring also cigarets, pipe tobacco, chocolate bars, as much fresh fruit as you can put in your overcoat pocket, rubbers or galoshes, two or three pairs of comfortable stout shoes, muffler, warm gloves, heavy woolen underwear, woolen shirts, sweaters, etc. Matches are scarce, so bring cigaret lighters. Bring a compass and a pair of binoculars. You can't get 'em over here.

All types of luxuries are hard to get here, particularly the things that women like. The American who comes here laden with silk stockings, lipstick, perfume, powder, and cold cream can rapidly make friends. The ferry pilots are the most popular folk from home. You can imagine why.

YOUTH ON THE CAMPUS

By ELEANOR NANGLE

BLACKBURN, the two-year coöperative college in the southern Illinois town of Carlinville, may very well be, as a local signboard proclaims, "America's Most Exclusive College." Beyond doubt the student-citizens at Blackburn are quality folk.

Blackburn is a college for boys and girls who have everything but money—character, brains, and good health, plus such a love of learning they are willing to trade a little money ($225 a year for tuition, room, and three meals a day) and a lot of manual labor to get it.

Under the inspired guidance of President William M. Hudson, a Presbyterian minister with the sort of faith that moves mountains, Blackburn has been built by its students and is today operated and managed by them. It's a school where everybody works — and no one is paid with money but the faculty!

There is little money floating around Blackburn, as a matter of fact. There never has been. In his day gray-haired, twinkly-eyed Dr. Hudson has only stopped at stealing to keep his college going. He has begged and borrowed everything from cattle and chickens to stock the college farm to old railroad cars where students might sleep. Even now, when his college has reached its capacity in enrollment—325—Dr. Hudson must make many a sharp trade to make ends meet.

Work is the medium of exchange at Blackburn. Every student must give 15 hours of work a week to the college, and Blackburn students are the kind that do it joyfully and with a keen sense of responsibility. There are wheels within wheels of student management and student labor at Blackburn that operate its entire plant with maximum efficiency and minimum cost.

Highest student offices at Blackburn college are held by its work managers. These are sophomores, elected to their posts in April of their freshman year. Their weekly 15 hours of service for schooling are devoted to administrative work. The girls' work manager now is Dorothy Gale of Rockford; it is her responsibility to assign girls to their tasks in the kitchen, the dining room, the laundry, the housekeeping department, and desks and offices. There are no paid supervisors. Boyd McCracken of Greenville, Ill., is boys' work manager. He maps out the student schedules to provide the male task forces that service the school in janitor work, construction work, ground maintenance, heating plant operation, plumbing, painting, and electrical work.

Under him also are such workers as the bakers—boys, because they so often must work at night—and a kitchen crew to lift the heavy pots and pans. Students, in efficient crews that work with clockwork precision, purchase the food, plan the meals, cook them and serve them in the central dining hall. As the cooks move out to go to class the dishwashers move in! A third student work manager, Fred Rimington of Ipava, Ill., oversees the forces of boys who operate Blackburn's 180-acre farm, stocked with Holstein-Friesian cattle and Duroc Jersey hogs.

Merle Downey, sophomore from St. Louis, head of student cooks.

Blackburn students have done most of the construction work on student buildings. They did all of it on the farm barn, an immaculate two-story building with 16,500 feet of floor space, constructed of bricks begged and student-salvaged from a Carlinville street. On the great day when the barn was completed the cattle were led in wearing mortarboards, and the students, including the girls who had cooked the meals for the boys who laid the bricks, celebrated with the satisfaction born of accomplishment.

Democracy gets more than lip service at Blackburn. Here every student appreciates his personal responsibility to the community. There are no menial tasks in the Blackburn pattern of participation. The dignity of honest labor is apparent everywhere. The chairman of the student social committee is the head baker. A blind girl student accounts for her 15 hours of work by scrubbing steps, mangling laundry, drying the silverware, and doing desk work.

At the moment a much-needed tool shed is under construction. They made a deal for the bricks by offering to salvage a lot a local contractor had on hand; for their work on the lot the students were given enough to build their shed. Crews of students lay the concrete flooring, lay the bricks, and do the carpenter work. Another crew is currently building, out of lumber and wire and nails garnered by buying and barter, a hundred-yard obstacle course that will meet the physical education requirements of the government.

It is only natural, of course, that its unique plan of self-help and student management would tend to be overemphasized in any picture of Blackburn. It is important to understand that on its academic side Blackburn lacks nothing. Only students with grades that kept them in the upper third of their high school classes are admitted to Blackburn. When Blackburnites go on, as many of them do, to the junior year of any four-year college or university they are accepted without examination. And after Blackburn, where superior intelligence in the students is the rule rather than the exception, they find the academic going easier!

Blackburn students may lack money—they wouldn't be there if they didn't, since inability to go to a more expensive school is one of the unusual requirements for entrance—but they are not "poor." It's not all work and no play. Blackburnites date and dance, and sing in Mrs. Hudson's choir, and are as attractive and gay as college students we've seen anywhere. Maybe a little more.

Blackburn students, like their president, operate on the sound, old-fashioned theory that God helps those who help themselves. There is always a way at Blackburn to meet every day's difficulties. Dr. Hudson is never too proud to beg or borrow, and his boys and girls are never too proud to work.

MOSTLY ABOUT DOGS

The small bulldog is Judy, age 3 months. The larger, age 10 months, is named Lawry's Choice. Both are owned by John Lawry.

WHEN A DOG gets along in years warts may appear on its body, a development that frequently puzzles the novice owner. Not many persons are aware of the fact that warts or wartlike growths are quite common on dogs. Hardly a week goes by that we do not hear from at least one owner about the "funny growths" that are appearing on the skin of his pet and asking what should be done about it.

A short time ago we had our 10-year-old Sealyham terrier at a "canine barber shop," where he was given a stripping to take down his coat. When we called for the dog the professional handler who worked on him remarked that the terrier certainly had a big "old age" wart on one shoulder. And he added that the Sealyham (the "old man," as he called him) had reached the age where we could expect to see warts develop.

Our dog has had this single large wart for three years. We have been expecting to see others. Some dogs may not develop them until they are quite old. Some dogs develop many, others have very few warts. We have seen dogs that required help from the veterinarian because so many warts appeared on their lips.

Our policy is to let the skin warts (not in or around the mouth) very much alone. They don't bother the dog, so why remove them? If an owner wants to get them removed from his pet he should see a veterinarian and take his advice on the proper procedure.

Just as warts may be an indication of old age in a dog, so there are other signs which owners should recognize when their pets get to be 10, 11, 12, or 13 years old. Last week we talked with a woman who owns an 11½-year-old Spitz. She reported that the dog was not at all well. It wasn't as active as it used to be. The animal was having difficulty with one of its legs, so it wasn't able to get up and down steps easily.

There were other symptoms which were worrying the owner, including a slight loss of hearing. A veterinarian checked over the dog and said it was old age. The owner, however, refused to accept this diagnosis. She is positive that it isn't old age.

All of us hate to see a much-loved pet get old, altho we shouldn't forget than an 11-year-old dog is approximately equal in age to a human who is 75.

Of course there are some things all of us can do to prolong the lives of our pets and make their last years easier. We're convinced that careful attention to a dog's teeth is a help to the pet in his declining years. An infection from a loose tooth can lower a dog's health more than most owners realize.

An old dog must get more careful attention to his diet, especially if the animal has lost several teeth. Old dogs with worn-down and missing teeth must be fed softer foods, and we must make sure that the foods they get provide the correct vitamins. In some cases it may be necessary to supplement the diet with preparations that furnish vitamins to the aged pet.

Floyd Gibbons—Who Made Career of News Beats

Floyd Gibbons at work.

By LLOYD WENDT

DURING his career on The Tribune, Reporter Floyd Gibbons brought this newspaper a number of scoops. Among his first was an entire series of exclusive stories obtained when he was the only newspaper correspondent permitted to accompany Gen. Francisco (Pancho) Villa during the latter's disastrous and final campaigns against Carranza.

Gibbons was in a tiny Mexican border town on March 14, 1915, when he received instructions to cover Villa. It was an assignment that would appeal to few men. Villa, an uneducated man with a vile temper and a genius for conspiracy, was known to detest foreigners, particularly newspaper men. It was not unusual for him, during one of his frequent rages, to have the person who had aroused his displeasure immediately shot. By his gangster tactics he had made himself the law in much of Mexico, and even his friends and followers did not know when he might turn against them in a fit of passion. Pancho Villa was a dangerous man to know, but Floyd Gibbons considered him colorful, and his activities of vital importance to the United States. He undertook to meet the rebel chief.

The terrible Pancho, who had accused previous newspaper men of telling lies about him, took a fancy to young Gibbons. He provided the Tribune representative with a private office, a box car attached to his own special train, and he had painted on the special car this sign: "La Tribuna, Chicago, Ill., U. S. A.—Oficina Particular del Corresponsal Especial"—private office of the special correspondent.

Gibbons followed Pancho Villa to the wars. He reported exclusively to The Tribune the general campaign and the big battle against Gen. Obregon's army at Celaya, about 100 miles northwest of Mexico City, in which Villa's troops ran out of ammunition and suffered a severe defeat. Gibbons vividly described that retreat:

"Wounded men came limping back. Then stragglers passed, walking fast, and cowering before the gaze of every officer they met. They pointed helplessly to the empty cartridge belts and took without a whimper the cut of a whiplash across the face and the epithet of coward.

"Women straggled by, some with children. The rattle of machine guns was continuous now and we could hear the shouting—hoarse shouts and curses. I saw men dragging themselves on their hands while they trailed limp and helpless legs. Now horses and mules—some riderless, some with as many as three men clinging to them. I caught a riderless horse and joined the backward ebb. There was no organization, no order. It was mêlée—flight—rout—defeat—there was no mistaking it now."

On and on, Floyd Gibbons related the dramatic story, as only he could tell it. It was vivid, terrible—and exclusive. For months Gibbons continued to be the only correspondent with Villa, then, perceiving that the rebel leader was doomed, he made an escape . . . and escape it was, for Gibbons knew that if Villa suspected he was leaving he might be shot before he could get to the border. Pancho had formed a possessive attachment for his historian and biographer.

Villa later invaded the United States, and Gibbons was assigned to Gen. Pershing's forces on the border to cover the Americans' pursuit of the rebel chief. Then he was given his biggest assignment: The World war.

Gibbons was aboard the liner Laconia that black February night it was torpedoed by a German submarine northwest of Ireland. It was no lucky accident. He had chosen to sail on the Laconia because it was expected that the ship would be attacked, and he wanted the story. A colorful, dramatic, exclusive story it was.

The liner was carrying a cargo of arms and munitions. There were 73 passengers, including women and children, and 200 members of the crew aboard. Gibbons' story of the Laconia still brings back the horror and confusion of that terrible night, the suffering of the men and women adrift in open boats on a stormy sea, the thrilling scene of the final rescue of the survivors. Gibbons' was the first complete story of the sinking to be published. The Tribune printed it Feb. 28, 1917, under a banner headline: "HOW LACONIA SANK." Subheadlines read: "FLOYD GIBBONS CABLES FIRST COMPLETE STORY OF LINER TORPEDOING.—Concert and Dancing Change to Rush to Life Craft; Heroism and Discipline Save Many of Passengers." The story, running to 4,000 words, was superbly written and was perhaps the most sensational scoop of Gibbons' brilliant career.

After the United States entered the war, Gibbons served as a war correspondent in France, and following the armistice he became chief of the Tribune foreign service and editor of the Paris edition. Such duties would keep most persons at their desks, but not Gibbons. Foreign correspondents were finding it impossible to get into Russia to cover the story of a terrible famine, and Gibbons determined to go and cover the story himself.

He chartered a plane, flew to Latvia, and was promptly arrested for entering the country without a visa. He extricated himself from that difficulty, only to find that Maxim Litvinov, who was in Riga attempting to get foreign aid for the famine victims, was the man refusing journalists permission to enter Russia.

Gibbons had a plan. He told his pilot to keep his plane ready, and let it be known about Riga that he intended to fly into Russia, permission or not. Soon the news of his plans got to Litvinov, who, supposing he had uncovered a secret, summoned Gibbons to him.

"I know you are planning an act of deplorable rashness," Litvinov said. "I have evidence that you expect to fly into Russia."

Gibbons denied it.

"Come, Mr. Gibbons," Litvinov continued, "this is a small town, and we have ways of hearing things. Your secret has leaked out, and I know that you intend to fly to Moscow and land on the Red square."

Floyd looked embarrassed and said nothing.

"Do you realize," said Litvinov, pursuing his advantage, "that you will probably be met by a hail of bullets, and that if you succeed in landing you will be immediately imprisoned?"

Gibbons said he was sure he could persuade the Russians that he meant no harm.

"Nonsense!" said Litvinov. "You cannot risk your life this way. Besides, it might create an unfortunate incident at this stage of the negotiations."

"When Litvinov said that I knew I had him," Gibbons told friends later. Gibbons made a deal. He gave up his fictitious plans for flying to Moscow for permission to go to Russia by train. Two other correspondents were admitted with him. But Floyd, as soon as he got to Moscow, arranged a messenger system to handle his dispatches from outlying districts, a scheme his competitors did not think of. As a result, he was two days ahead of his opposition in filing stories thruout the famine region, and again he scooped the world. The newspaper men traveling with him didn't even know what had happened to them until they returned to Moscow and opened the angry cablegrams from their home offices.

In 1923 Floyd Gibbons engaged in one of his most unusual adventures. A popular book called "The Sheik" had aroused a wide interest in the veiled riders of the desert and American readers wanted to know just how such romantic nomads looked and lived. Partly because of this surge of interest in the desert, the editor of The Tribune had conceived an expedition across the Sahara by camel caravan, carrying the American flag for the first time to Timbuktu. Floyd Gibbons was the man selected to lead the expedition. He was instructed to find the tribe of Tuaregs, to study their life and habits, and to bring back, by way of Timbuktu, the story of these lawless nomads.

Gibbons obtained camels and men for his expedition at Colomb Bechard, the last civilized post on Algeria's desert border. He was warned of the terrible dangers of the desert, of the ferocity of the Tuarega, whose very name in Arabic means "God-forsaken," but, with 19 men, he set out across the nearly 2,000 miles of hot Sahara fastness.

During the course of that journey camels died, men became ill, and the entire expedition was lost for days and almost succumbed to heat and thirst, but Floyd Gibbons kept on. When, on one occasion, after being lost for days, the expedition found a tiny water hole, the men were almost undone by a thirst-maddened camel, which flung itself into the hole and wedged so tightly it had to be drawn out by ropes.

Eventually Gibbons found the Tuaregs, made friends with their chief, King Ammanuk, and got his story and pictures. Then he pushed out southwest to the Niger river and Timbuktu. There Floyd Gibbons filed his stories—another great scoop, another thrill for the world of newspaper readers.

KNOW YOUR CAMERA

By ANDREW B. HECHT, Ph.D.

Careful makeup eliminates the need for retouching and thus simplifies portrait photography. Makeup can cover skin blemishes, and it also can change the appearance of facial features.

Many a pleasing portrait could have been improved with the aid of makeup. The main job of photographic makeup is to place artificial highlights and shadows on the face, accenting or subduing certain features.

IT MAY SEEM ridiculous to the average amateur photographer that he should bother with such feminine problems as makeup, yet it is a fact that most portraits can be materially improved by the simple application of creams and powder. Not only will your portraits be more flattering to your models, but they also will be better photographs, pictures you can be proud of. In addition, using makeup will actually save you time and energy when it comes to finishing your portraits.

From the standpoint of the photographer the use of makeup offers two distinct advantages. First, by removing certain obvious blemishes on the face of the model it becomes unnecessary to retouch these blemishes on the negative or the finished prints. And it is considerably simpler to make up a living model than it is to do a good retouching job.

Second, makeup can do more than merely give your model a smooth skin texture. If you learn to apply corrective makeup you can not only cover up skin blemishes but you can change certain unpleasant features of your model and make them look better. With the aid of very simple makeup tricks you can shorten a long nose and can cause double chins to vanish.

Photographic makeup is different from ordinary makeup. It uses colors which are selected to match the properties of photographic films. Most panchromatic films are more sensitive to certain colors than they are to others. Many shades of red, for instance, photograph very light on panchromatic film, giving the cheeks and lips a pale, bloodless appearance. Properly applied panchromatic makeup can correct this color distortion. Incidentally, this panchromatic makeup is even more useful in black and white than in color photography.

There are many brands of photographic makeup materials on the market. All you need for amateur use is foundation rouge, powder, eyebrow pencil, and mascara. In the case of men you can dispense with eyebrow pencil and mascara, and you will rarely need the rouge.

All makeup materials should be used sparingly. Apply foundation of the desired shade over the entire face and neck. It will give an even skin texture and will make the other materials adhere to the skin. Next place rouge on the cheeks, blending it into the foundation. Then make up the eyes with pencil and mascara. Follow this with dusting powder onto the face, removing it later from eyebrows and eyelashes with a soft brush. Finally, make up the lips.

So much for the basic steps of normal makeup. When it comes to corrective makeup you use the makeup materials in the same manner as you apply photographic lights. You either create artificial highlights with makeup to accentuate certain features or you place shadows to subdue them.

A double chin, for instance, can be made practically invisible by applying to it foundation which is two or three shades darker than the foundation used on the rest of the face. The effect is improved by placing your lights in such a manner that the double chin receives little illumination.

A long nose can be shortened by applying darker foundation to the tip and the edge of the nostrils. Short noses can be lengthened with light foundation placed all the way down the ridge of the nose. If the nose is too wide, highlight the ridge and darken the sides; if it is too thin, darken the ridge and highlight the sides.

It is easy to widen thin lips with rouge. Thick lips should carry light makeup, lessening the contrast between lips and skin, so that they do not attract attention. A weak chin can be made more prominent with light foundation, and even the apparent position of the eyes can be changed. By darkening the bridge of the nose the distance between the eyes will appear larger, while a highlight in the same place seems to bring the eyes closer together. To change the general contours of the face, parts which are too broad should be darkened, while too narrow parts should be highlighted with makeup.

Of COURSE You're Beautiful!

(Posed by Rita Hayworth.)
The woman with a sense of importance about her looks finds ways of suggesting the effects of beauty.

By ANTOINETTE DONNELLY
(Copyright: 1942: By News Syndicate Co., Inc.)

THERE'S a so-called new school of thought being launched in connection with the Woman Beautiful. New it is not. Clever women have been practicing the theme for aeons.

It is, boiled down, to think of yourself as a beautiful woman and you'll be accepted at your own value.

Without question the idea has been put over magnificently in the realm of romance. You can make a man think you are beautiful by thinking that way about yourself. But there's a catch in it, of course. It's not thinking alone that does it. It's thinking it and following a program enforcing strong woman appeal. But we'll skip the romantic angle today and hew to the straight one of pulchritude.

Again, there is a catch in the scheme to become beautiful by thinking one is. A woman with a sense of her own value is bound to be a more decorative person than one without pride and assurance. There's a certain flair about the former type that carries convincing weight. There's an air, posture, and carriage to add distinction not only to the woman herself but to her dress and her manner, too.

Take the common scene of entering a room filled with people as a simple test. The woman who thinks of herself as beautiful does it with éclat. The woman who thinks of herself as subject to all kinds of criticism does it awkwardly, self-consciously, shyly.

The woman with a sense of importance about her looks finds ways of suggesting the effects of beauty. And in that statement lies the crux of this so-called new thought school.

But you say, perhaps, that the other woman, the diffident one, reads all the cosmetic ads, is a consistent cosmetic purchaser, has her hair done regularly and so on. She wants to find ways of suggesting beauty. True, she does. But we still insist that the philosophy of being important in one's own eyes is an impetus of enormous power. One physical feature, at least, and an extremely important one, namely posture, she has on her side. You never met a self-reliant man or woman who did not carry himself or herself with pride of bearing. It's the sickly, half-hearted appraisal of self that produces the slumped shoulders, the chin gathering head, the bad silhouette.

We are not advocating excessive vanity, understand. Nevertheless, we think excessive vanity is more productive than too little of it. However, there's a happy medium in which a woman presents herself as if she were prideful of self because she knows she has done everything within her power to be proud of herself.

Naturally, we are not speaking today of women born to the impressive beauty manner. We are speaking of the great majority who create the illusion thereof.

It has been suggested that this illusion of beauty is best created by the acquirement of two fine graces—namely, a good voice and graceful, coördinated movements. These do not have to be natural endowments. They can be acquired ones. We would include fine grooming and charm of manner in a formula for the illusion of beauty; posture and an appealing voice, by all means.

If we were forced to boil the formula down to one single ingredient, strictly in connection with thinking oneself beautiful, posture and carriage would be that ingredient. There's something psychologically prideful in the mere gesture of pulling oneself up tall that immediately subscribes to beauty; also, in the subsequent walk with chest raised, the abdomen flattened, the head where it should be, and in easy, graceful standing and sitting postures, as well in hand gestures, which of course come under the head of graceful, coordinated movements.

(Posed by Marsha Hunt.)
There's something psychologically prideful in the mere gesture of pulling oneself up tall.

"The Bohemian Girl" Sings Again

ALTHO Michael William Balfe was a prolific composer, his only really well known work was "The Bohemian Girl," which will be produced Saturday, Nov. 28, from 8 to 9 p. m. (C. W. T.) on the Chicago Theater of the Air on W-G-N and the Mutual network, starring Marion Claire, soprano prima donna of the series. "The Bohemian Girl" was first produced in London, Nov. 27, 1843, at Drury Lane. So successful was the opera that it was translated into Italian, French, and German.

The Balfe work was one of the few English operas which secured a favorable hearing even in critical Germany. In its Italian form the opera was produced in Drury Lane as "La Zingara" in February, 1858, with Mlle. Piccolomini as Arline. The opera was also honored with selection for the state performance connected with the marriage of the princess royal.

Marion Claire, who will star in "The Bohemian Girl."

The French version under the name of "La Bohemienne," for which Balfe added several numbers besides enlarging it to five acts, was produced in the Theatre Lyrique in Paris in December, 1869, and gained for him the cross of the Legion of Honor.

Balfe was born in Dublin in 1808 and showed great talent for music at an early age. Before he was 3 years old he began taking violin lessons, and at the age of 7 he had composed a polka. Two years later, at the age of 9, he had composed a ballad, "Young Fanny," which is even now remarkable for its melody.

After the death of his father a few years later young Balfe went to London, where he became a pupil of C. E. Horn and played in the orchestra of the Drury Lane theater, where his own compositions were later to be headlined. He also appeared on the stage in a version of "Der Freischutz," but was unsuccessful.

At the age of 17 Balfe went to Italy with a wealthy patron, where he studied composition at Rome with Paer, later singing in Milan with Galli and Federici. At this time he did his first work as a dramatic composer, producing a ballet called "La Perouse," which was very favorably received.

Then, after studying for a time with Bordogni, he sang under Rossini as first baritone at the Italian opera in Paris, where he made his debut as Figaro in "The Barber of Seville."

Returning to Italy, he produced his first opera, "I Rivali di se Stessi." This work was said to have been in written in 20 days, and musical critics of 1829 were unable to find any justification for even that amount of time. He quickly followed his first opera with two other Italian operas, and neither was any better received.

The next year he married Lina Rosen, the Hungarian opera star, and spent the next four years touring Europe with her, singing in Italy and Paris. In 1835 he returned to London and produced "The Siege of Rochelle." This opera was a great success, running for three months. Following this came "The Maid of Artois," with its beautiful song, "The Light of Other Days."

Between 1837 and 1841 he produced his "Joan of Arc," "Catherine Grey," "Falstaff," and "Diadeste." He also was singing in the opera in Drury Lane and in Ireland. About 1840 Balfe became manager of the Lyceum theater, producing his "Keolanthe" as the opening piece. This venture proved unsuccessful, and Balfe was invited to Paris, where he was well received and where he produced in French the operas known in English as "Geraldine" and "The Castle of Aymon."

Returning to England in 1843, he brought out "The Bohemian Girl," which was the most successful of all his operas and the high spot of his career. Following the great success of "The Bohemian Girl," Balfe was appointed conductor of Her Majesty's theater. During this time he made visits to Vienna, Berlin, Trieste, and St. Petersburg, where he brought out new operas of his own composition, making large amounts of money. Near the end of his career, from 1852 until his death, most of his time was occupied with composition. He produced more than 30 operas, as well as cantatas and ballads.

WARNING! OLD FASHIONED "SOAPING" MAKES HAIR DULL!

Halo Shampoo makes hair sparkle by banishing dull soap-film

WITH Halo your hair dries so silky-soft, so shimmering with highlights, so easy to manage—your whole personality is glorified. Your hair becomes the true beauty asset it should be.

You see, "soaping" your hair with any soap or soap shampoo always leaves a dingy soap-film that hides color, dims highlights. But Halo is different. Halo contains no soap, cannot leave soap-film.

Halo's new-type patented lathering ingredient, immediately washes away all old soap-film, loose dandruff, leaves hair radiant . . . easy to manage, easy to curl. Halo lathers in hardest water, needs no lemon or vinegar rinse. Buy Halo Shampoo today—10¢ or larger sizes.

Private Fay on Parade!

This is another report from William C. Fay, on leave from the Tribune sports department, about his life in the army. . .

THE PERENNIAL tie and book senders among my aunts and uncles are facing a gift crisis this Christmas. Already several "What can we get you now that you're in the army?" letters have arrived.

Obviously this is not a year for foulards, and Dr. Eliot's five-foot shelf of books would not fit into those leftover cubic inches near the top of a barracks bag—the ultimate criterion of what to buy a soldier. Worse, the one thing I really need, a pocket size instantaneous water heater for early-morning shaving, hasn't been invented yet. However, there are a few hints I can pass on to anxious aunts and uncles. Here they are:

Make your gifts small and practical. Shaving, shoe-shine, and sewing kits are prized by all soldiers—especially sewing kits. Buttons keep popping off, insignia must be sewn onto sleeves, and a stitch in time can increase sox mileage tremendously. Some of our toughest sergeants are expert with thimble and needle.

A small mirror in a protective case is a handy thing to have in a barracks bag. Extra socks and shirts and caps are welcome, too, but get the correct sizes. And make certain the clothing conforms to the soldier's branch of service. An infantryman, for instance, will have no use for an overseas cap with red piping. Infantrymen wear blue piping, artillerymen wear red.

A pair of dress shoes is another luxury a soldier would like to enjoy. Again the right size is all-important; the color must be brown and the toes must be plain.

Nothing can make a pup tent habitable like a portable radio, especially when you're camped on a hillside 10 miles from the nearest crossroads store. But the radio cabinet should be a sturdy material and not susceptible to chipping or cracking.

A leather stationery folder should pay good dividends in extra letters from your soldier nephew. And if he doesn't have a fountain pen he can use one.

Be careful about sending food. Everybody likes a piece of homemade cake, but the cake will be crumbs if you live too many mailing days away or neglect to wrap the package securely.

Don't send liquor, no matter how much your nephew would enjoy a bottle of Scotch. The pink, shell-like ears of army postoffice employés leap to attention at the first gurgle given off by a package of liquor bottle dimensions. It's 100 to 1 the Scotch will end up in the postoffice sink instead of your nephew. Reason: Soldiers are forbidden to keep liquor within camp area.

Lastly, aunts and uncles, if your nephew is a proficient poker player, send him a couple of packs of tough-backed playing cards, the kind that will stand up to an all-night-after-pay-day session. If your nephew isn't a good poker player, never mind these gift suggestions. Send him cash money. He needs it.

A second lieutenant in our battalion, a radio announcer on leave for the duration, delivers our indoctrination lectures, usually about 4:30 p. m. in the shade of the oaks which border the drill field. He works hard, but the warm sunlight weaves a spell more magical than his eloquence. Many of his listeners fall asleep without waiting for station identification.

When this happens the lieutenant's voice loses its message and leaps to news flash tempo. "Men," he exclaims, pounding fist into palm, "this is war. We've got a job to do. We've got a bunch of slant-eyed little ——— ——— ———'s to lick. Now let's buckle down! Let's stay awake!"

Silence, complete and utter. Tired lids tauten. Eyeballs pop like pingpong balls.

The lieutenant-announcer really is our secret weapon. If he can keep his spiel tuned to its present commercial-perfect pitch, and if he can deliver it a few seconds before we go into action, why, every man in the battalion will be rarin' to walk a mile for a Jap, to whom something new will be added.

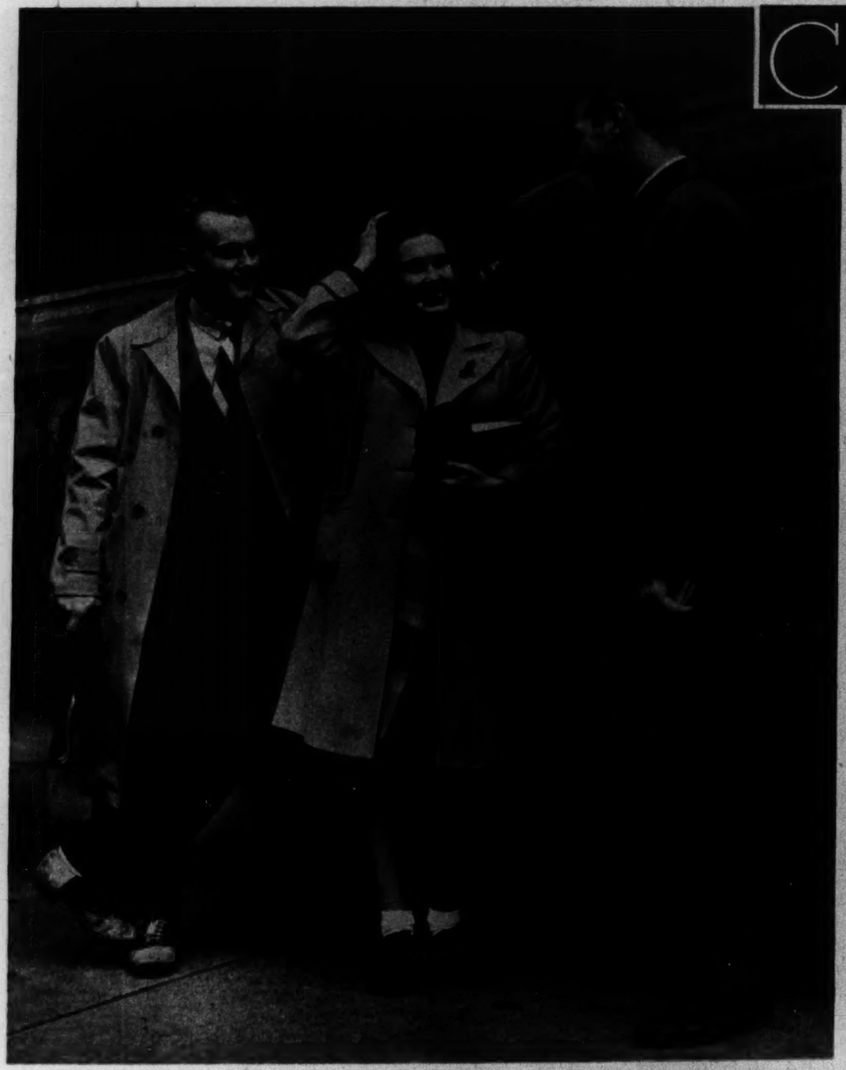
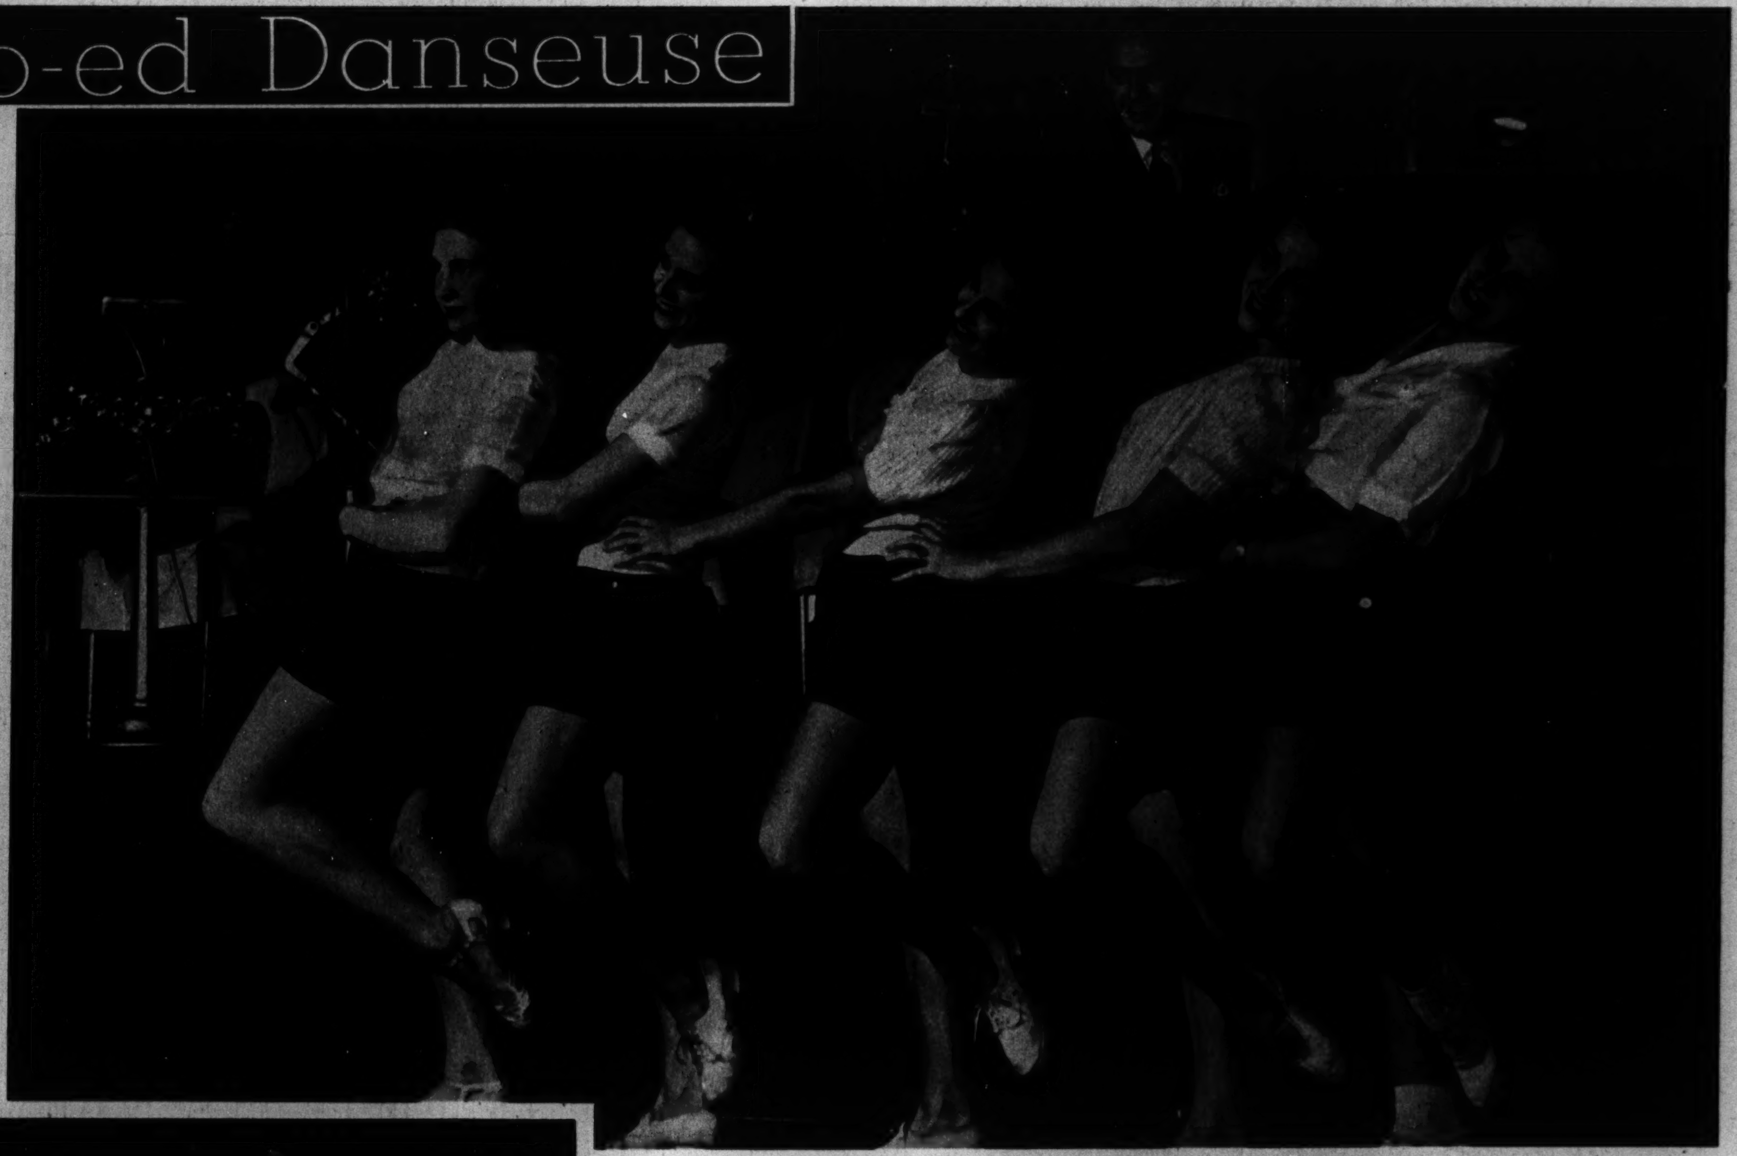
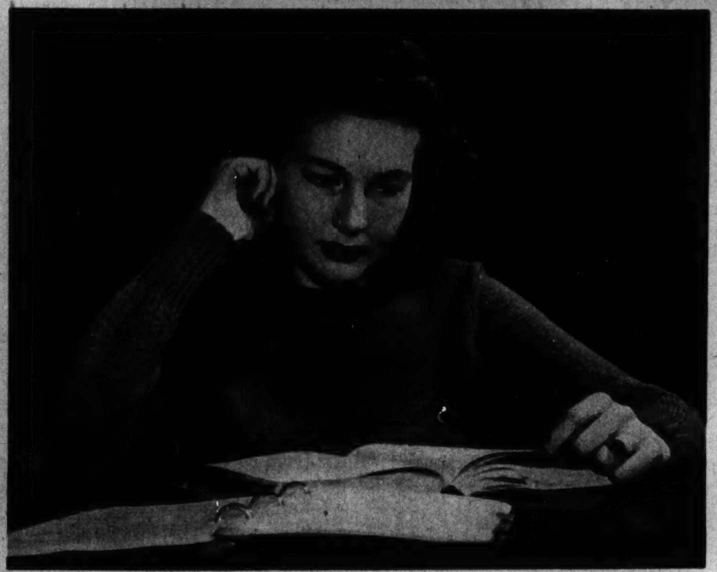
Co-ed Danseuse



Dancer by night and student by day is Carlyn Truax of 7707 South Shore drive. At the Palmer House she is the starred soloist of the Empire Room. At the University of Chicago she recently was chosen freshman queen by the magazine, Pulse. With her here: Left, Edward Nelson, Maroon basketball forward; right, Robert O'Donnell of the Chicago fencing team.



Three or four afternoons a week Carlyn (heading this line of dancers) rehearses. At the piano, Griff Williams.



Somewhere along the line she finds time to study, and study hard.

Dates? Yes. But almost without exception they must be dinner engagements. Recently these have been chiefly as guest of honor at fraternities and as rushee at campus girls' clubs.

Evenings, Carlyn arrives at the Palmer House about 9 p. m. to make up and dress. In the spotlight between 10 and 10:30, she finds it is 11 p. m. by the time she has taken off make-up and changed to street clothes again.

A Thanksgiving Gift

THANKSGIVING DAY is a mighty busy time for the Teenie Weenies. The little people usually start several days ahead of the holiday in order to make the feast a success. Every single Teenie Weenie helps with the work, and things fairly buzz under the rosebush where the little village stands.

Of course, the Cook is the busiest of all, for he has to prepare all the good things to eat. It is necessary to cook a great deal of food, for the Teenie Weenies usually entertain several of their bird and animal friends.

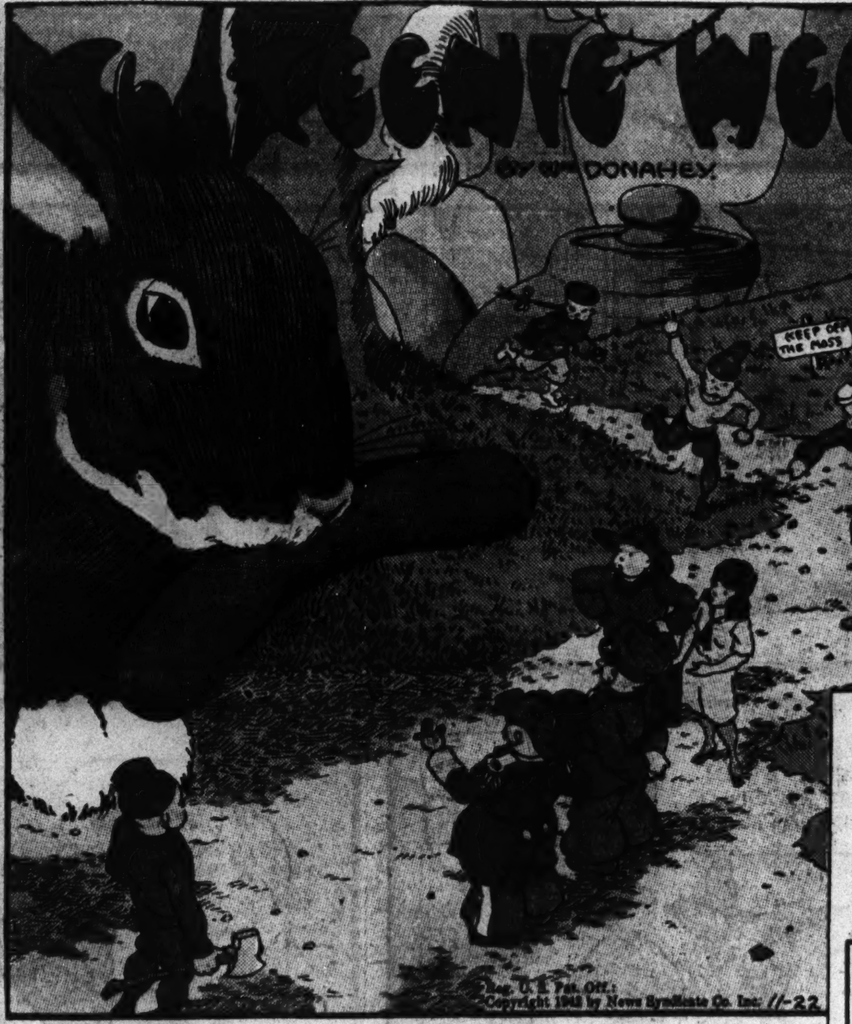
The little people always set up a long table near the shoe house and eat outdoors because it is quite impossible for Nick, the squirrel; several chipmunks; Tilly Titter, the English sparrow, and a couple of friendly mice to get inside the old shoe where the little people live. However, this year the Teenie Weenies decided to have the Thanksgiving feast inside the shoe house. The weather had been cold and wet. Then, too, the Old Soldier with the wooden leg and the Policeman had a slight touch of rheumatism.

"We'll set a table outdoors for our guests," said the General.

The Old Soldier and the Turk spent almost a whole day blasting hickory nuts and walnuts open with Teenie Weenie dynamite. They took out the nut meats and carried them to the Teenie Weenie kitchen, where the Cook chopped them into bits and made several huge nut pies for Nick and the chipmunks. The two respectable mice had been invited, and the cook made their favorite dish, a nut and cheese loaf. He also made escalloped hominy for Tilly Titter, and he made it in his biggest kettle, which was the metal top of a catsup bottle.

The Cook prepared the usual Thanksgiving frog ham for the Teenie Weenies. He selected the largest and nicest ham hanging in the Teenie Weenie smokehouse, and then he soaked it in wild grape juice for two days before Thanksgiving. There were many other dishes for the Teenie Weenie table, and the Cook was kept busy from early morning until bedtime for several days.

The Lady of Fashion and the other Teenie Weenie women scrubbed and swept the shoe house until it fairly shone. For decorations, the Dunce made several jack-o'-lanterns out of acorn shells. This work helped to keep him out of mischief, but he did manage to get into the thimbleful of doughnuts which the Cook had been saving for the feast.



OUT OF ACORN SHELLS.

The rhyming rabbit had been invited, but he was very old and seldom came to their Thanksgiving dinners. They carried half an apple over to his hole the day before Thanksgiving so the old fellow would have something good to eat. He was away, so they left it near his hole where he would be sure to find it.

Not long afterward the Teenie Weenies were surprised to see the old fellow hopping toward the shoe house. He carried a wiener in his mouth, and when the Teenie Weenies gathered around him, he dropped it on the ground. He told the little people, in very bad rhyme, that some big people had had a wiener roast in the woods near his hole the night before and that he found the wiener where they had left it in a paper bag.

"You know I never taste or eat
Anything that's made of meat,
But you, my friends, I thought, might care
To have it on your bill of fare."

The General thanked him for his thoughtfulness, and then the old rabbit hopped off toward his hole.

"We can't eat that wiener after that rabbit has had it in his mouth," said the Lady of Fashion.

"We will give it to Tomkins, the cat," said the General. "It will make a fine Thanksgiving dinner for him."

Thanksgiving Day was a great success. All the Teenie Weenies and their guests ate their fill of the good food. Everybody was happy except one of the respectable mice, who ate so much he had a stomach-ache The Doctor had to give him a couple of mustard seeds.

"I'M SAVING MY CLOTHES IN WARTIME"—says Illinois Housewife

MRS. ROBERT KIRKMAN of Chicago, Ill. knows that many of her nicest things—dresses and linens especially—can get such hard wear on washday. "From that standpoint," she says, "I can double the life of clothes washing the Oxydol way—with rich, safe washing action alone instead of rubbing things threadbare. And such beautiful washes, too! Things come so clean my wash is white without bleaching!"

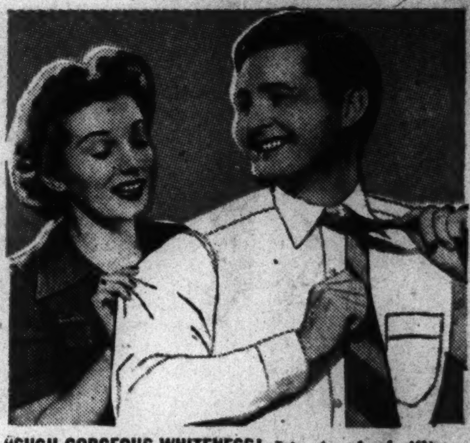
Like Millions... She uses OXYDOL's rich washing action to get clothes

WHITE WITHOUT BLEACHING CLEAN WITHOUT HARD RUBBING!

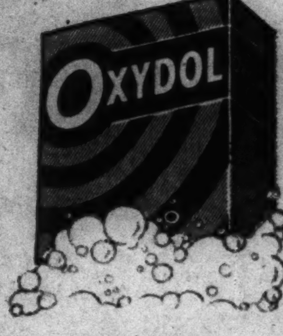
"JUDY'S LITTLE PRINT DRESSES PRACTICALLY COME CLEAN BY THEMSELVES! I find Oxydol gets clothes clean with as much as ⅓ less washer running time. And you don't have to rub things threadbare to get the deep dirt out! They look so lovely . . . and they'll last so long!"

OXYDOL'S RICHER IN WASHING POWER NOW! Those go-getting "Hustle-Bubble" suds are more active. Every ounce of new Oxydol gets more dirt! Safely, gently draws the dirt out. A quick rub here and there is all. Not the hard rubbing or long washer runs that wear clothes threadbare.



"SUCH GORGEOUS WHITENESS! It's simply thrilling how snowy white Oxydol brings my husband's shirts. Why, they're so sparkling white it's hard to believe I didn't use a bleach!"

YES, WHITE WITHOUT BLEACHING . . . when you use new Oxydol! Except for some unusual stains, your washes sparkle . . . and without the risk of harsh bleaches. What's more, new Oxydol's so safe for washable colors . . . and even dainty washable rayons! Yes . . . to make precious clothes last longer in wartime . . . do them the SAFER, NEW OXYDOL WAY!



Wash White Without Bleaching!

U. S. GOVERNMENT SAYS SO . . .

A bulletin from the Consumer Division of OPA, discussing chlorine bleaches, says in part: "Bleaching has never been a good substitute for washing . . . using too much . . . in an effort to get clothes snowy white has done much damage to fabrics."

SOUTH SIDERS PLAN THANKS SERVICES

PLAN MEMORIAL RITES AT U. OF C. FOR DR. DE LEE

To Set Up Fellowship Fund of $50,000.

Achievements of the late Dr. Joseph B. De Lee in advancing obstetrics to high levels of medical science and thereby effecting notable reductions in the death rate of mothers and babies, will be honored at 8 o'clock tomorrow evening with a ceremony in Mandel hall at the University of Chicago. Dr. De Lee died April 2 when he was 72 years old after devoting 50 years of his life to obstetrical work.

Dr. J. B. De Lee.

Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the Journal of the American Medical association, and President Robert M. Hutchins of the University of Chicago will speak at the meeting. Dr. Fishbein will talk on "Maternal Care in the Postwar Period."

Set Up $50,000 Trust.

At the same time more than $50,000 given to establish the Joseph B. De Lee Memorial trust will be presented to the University of Chicago by Dr. M. Edward Lewis, professor of obstetrics and gynecology, of the Chicago Lying-In hospital staff and a former student of Dr. De Lee. The fund, for which the goal is $100,000, will provide fellowships in the hospital for young doctors who intend to make obstetrics their specialty.

Of the contributions made so far the largest single gift is $20,000 from the Mothers' aid of the hospital. This group, organized in 1904, was of great assistance to Dr. De Lee in his work and has provided the Lying-In hospital with much of its financial support. The gift of the Mothers' aid as an organization is in addition to individual contributions made by many of the members. Other contributors to the fund include the Alumni association of the hospital, including both doctors and nurses, and former patients and friends of Dr. De Lee.

Crusade for Obstetrics.

Dr. De Lee began his crusade to make obstetrics respectable in 1895 after he had graduated from medical school. Few doctors then would accept confinement cases, for either rich or poor, and the lack of even the most elementary scientific methods resulted in the death of more than 20,000 mothers a year and the death of 100,000 babies during birth.

In 1894 Dr. De Lee, with $15 and permission to have a clinic at the South Side Free dispensary, had failed to obtain a single patient. He began again, with modest financial support he had raised himself, and opened on Feb. 14, 1895, a dispensary at 1336 Newberry avenue, in a stove heated four room flat on the ground floor of a tenement building. Dr. De Lee waited for two weeks to get his first patient and then the whole enterprise nearly collapsed because the second patient had complications which nearly caused her death.

Opened Small Hospital.

At first all the work of the new institution was done by Dr. De Lee almost single handed. Gradually he enlisted the support of the medical profession which sent him students to be trained and to join him in his work. By September, 1899, Dr. De Lee had a small hospital on Ashland boulevard near Harrison street and in 1905 efforts to build a modern hospital began.

But it was not until 1917 until the first Chicago Lying-In hospital was opened at 51st street and Vincennes avenue. In 1931 the present building was completed on the University of Chicago campus and in 1938 the hospital merged with the university clinics.

Dr. De Lee was head of the hospital until his retirement in 1939. Some 28,000 children have been born there. Dr. De Lee lived to see the results of his work reflected in a remarkably low maternal and infant death rate.

Influenced Nation's Practice.

Dr. De Lee's work has influenced obstetrical practice thruout the entire country. Most of the regulations now enforced by boards of health, according to officials of the university, were originated in the hospital which he headed. Considered to be the most important influence he had in the medical field was inducing the medical profession to accept obstetrics as a specialty as important as surgery or medicine and to require rigid training and standards for its practice.

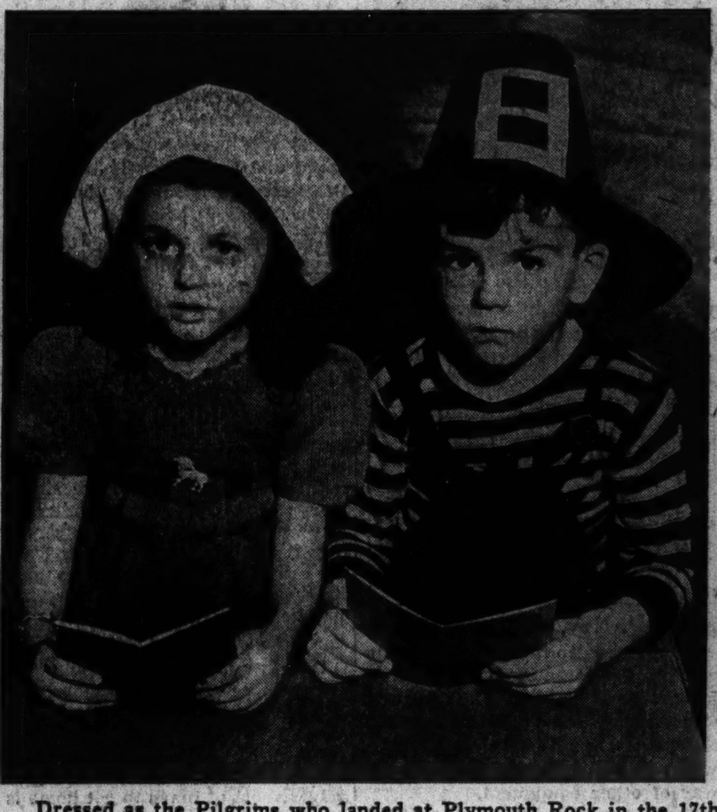
Dr. De Lee's influence as a teacher was widespread and he personally trained the largest single group of obstetricians and obstetrical nurses in the field and his students carried his methods to all parts of the world.

Dr. De Lee was born in Cold Springs, N. Y., Oct. 28, 1869. He attended high school in Chicago and was graduated from the Chicago Medical college in 1891, interning in Cook County hospital. He joined the staff of the medical school of Northwestern university in 1894 and retained this affiliation until 1929 when he became professor and chairman of the department of obstetrics and gynecology at the University of Chicago.

Kindergarten Pupils Hear First Thanksgiving Day Story, Then Dramatize It

Warren school kindergarten pupils hear the story of the "First Thanksgiving" from the lips of their teacher, Hazel King. These children, along with hundreds of others on the south side, will hold a Thanksgiving program Wednesday afternoon to commemorate the holiday before they are released for a four day recess.

[Board of Education Photos.]



Dressed as the Pilgrims who landed at Plymouth Rock in the 17th century, Joan Metzger, 5, of 9246 Saginaw avenue, and Christie Wilhelm, 5, of 9318 Crandon avenue, re-enact a scene from the "First Thanksgiving" for their classmates in the Warren school kindergarten.

Thanksgiving would not be complete without turkeys. Warren school kindergarten pupils are busy these days preparing appropriate decorations for their classroom. Mae Tor, 9325 Cregier avenue; James Byrne, 2318 East 92d street, and Kent Starke, 9154 Jeffery avenue, all five years old, design placards bearing the likeness of the traditional bird.

Indians sometimes frightened the Pilgrim fathers, but two red skinned dolls bring smiles to the face of little Joan Paruzynski, 5, of 2200 East 93d street.

Soldiers of 3 Wars Bow to His Clippers

Soldiers of three wars have sat in the barber chair of Ernst [Ernie] Klein, 74, who has plied his trade on the south side for more than 50 years. In addition to soldiers of the last three wars he recalls cutting the hair and shaving veterans of the Civil war.

"Soldiers must have short haircuts," he explained. Often men on furlough — soldiers engaged in the Spanish-American war, World War I., and World War II.—have asked him to "dress up" their army haircuts a bit. While the haircut of the soldier has changed little in the last quarter of a century, Mr. Klein has seen a gradual change in the style of peace time haircuts.

At the time of the Spanish-American war the "short pompadour" was popular. Mr. Klein explained that in this style the hair was brushed back, cut fairly short, and almost stood upright. With the exception that the hair was cut higher above the neck, he added, there was little difference between the styles of World War I. and today.

Apprenticed at 14.

Born in Stuttgart, Germany, in 1868, he arrived in New York City in 1887. When he was 14 years old he left school and was apprenticed to a barber. Instruction included wig making, but he said since he came to the United States he has done little of this type of work.

After a short stay in the east, which included work in New York City and New London, Conn., he came to Chicago in 1891. At one time he had a shop at 24th street and Cottage Grove avenue. Other sites at which he has worked include: 823 East 63d street; at Langley avenue and 63d street, and on Roosevelt road between Wabash and Michigan avenues. He now has a shop at the Hayes hotel, 6345 University avenue.

Recalls Bathtubs in Shops.

During his career he has seen his trade move from shops lined with shaving mugs to the relatively uncluttered shops of today with their electrical equipment. When he came to Chicago the bathtub was a luxury. Most of the barber shops had one or more tubs at the rear for the customers' ablutions. This service, he commented, was generally discontinued soon after he arrived.

Shelves held the shaving mugs of steady customers, each with his trade or fraternal affiliation indicated by the emblem painted and baked on when the mug was made. A butcher, he said, would have the picture of a bull, and a carpenter might have the likeness of a saw on his mug.

After World War I. shaving by barbers and mugs went into a decline. He attributed this to soldiers getting used to shaving themselves while on duty.

Dr. William J. Corcoran, pediatrician at Wesley Memorial hospital, will speak before the Young Mothers' club of Bryn Mawr Community church tomorrow evening in the church club rooms.

WILLIAM J. HOGAN, POLICE OPERATOR 39 YEARS, RETIRES

Veteran Recalls Early Newspaper Work.

Police Operator William J. Hogan, who has directed members of the Chicago department to scenes of the city's crimes and disorders for close to 39 years, retired recently. Hogan joined the department in 1904, and spent his first 15 years of service at the detective bureau, 1121 South State street. Since then, most of his assignments have been at south and southwest side stations, including the old 50th and State street station—now the 48th and Wabash—and the old Stanton avenue station along Chicago's one time gold coast.

Hogan decided he had a talent for being a policeman years ago when he was working in the reference room of the old Times Herald. He had such a keen memory for faces and names he thought he might be helpful on the department. It was while working at the Times Herald that he studied, took the police examination and passed it.

Recalls Old Friends.

He worked on that paper for several year and knew well many of the figures important in newspaper circles. In the reference room, he was associated with August Bartz, now a veteran of THE TRIBUNE's reference room. He remembers John T. McCutcheon, Tribune cartoonist; John Kelley and Charles Carpenter, Tribune police reporters, now retired; George Ade, Hoosier humorist, and a host of others. On a recent visit to THE TRIBUNE, Hogan visited the reference room, saw Bartz, and they compared notes on morgue keeping of years ago and today. Hogan found there was a vast difference.

Staying Here for Duration.

He had originally intended to make his home in Florida, where some of his old police buddies are now in retirement. Charles Carpenter told him to come on out and he'd teach him how to fish. Hogan said that would suit him fine, but he thinks he'll stay where he is until the war is over.

He makes his home at 7819 South Park avenue with his wife, Kathryn E., a son, James, a Notre Dame graduate, and daughter, Irene, a Rosary alumna now engaged in dietetic work.

Ridge Civic Council.

Delegates of the Ridge Civic council will gather at 8 o'clock tomorrow evening at the Ridge park fieldhouse, 96th street and Longwood drive.

CHURCHES HOLD DAY OF PRAYER NEXT THURSDAY

War Duties Curtail Family Dinners.

Religious services will mark annual Thanksgiving observation Thursday morning in south side churches. Traditional family dinners will be fewer this year with men and women members of the family in both military service and war industry.

Thanksgiving programs of school children will be held for the most part Wednesday afternoon. They will have a four day holiday—returning to their books Monday morning. Special masses will be said in Catholic churches. Several union services will be held in the various communities. Groups have been sending service men holiday gifts and boxes for the last several weeks. And in the industries of the south side, with the exception of a few departments, work will proceed as usual.

Plan Union Services.

Union Thanksgiving services for the churches of the Woodlawn community will be held at the Woodlawn Methodist church, 64th street and Woodlawn avenue, at 10:30 o'clock Thursday. Rev. Donald K. Evans, pastor of St. Paul's Universalist church, will speak and ministers of other Woodlawn churches will participate in the service. Dr. W. E. Bradburn, president of the Woodlawn Ministerial association, will preside.

Protestant churches of the Southtown area will join in the 16th annual union Thanksgiving services under the auspices of the Southtown Church YMCA coöperation program, according to the Rev. Stewart L. Rodgers, president of the Southtown Ministers' association.

Churches in Grand Crossing community will coöperate under the leadership of the Rev. John A. Swanson of the Grace Baptist church and will meet at the Elim Free church, 121 East 78th street, at 10:30 o'clock Thanksgiving morning. Churches taking part in this service will include Grand Crossing mission, Elm Free, Elim Baptist, and Grace Baptist. The Rev. Mr. Swanson will speak.

Sunrise, Prayer Ceremonies.

Baptist young people will sponsor three annual Thanksgiving sunrise and prayer services in the city at 7:29 o'clock Thanksgiving morning. Marion Seidler, 7246 Eberhardt avenue, is chairman for the south district service, which will be held at Englewood Baptist church. The Rev. J. Walker Martin of the Foster Park Baptist church will speak. The offering that will be taken at these services will be used for work at the Oak Forest infirmary.

Coöperating churches in the south district are: Calvary, Covenant, Bethany, Czechoslovak, Englewood, First Foster Park, German East Side, Ogden Park German, Hungarian, Hyde Park, Immanuel, Lorimer, Marquette Manor, Marquette Road, Morgan Park, Normal Park, Parkside, Parkwood, Raymond, South Chicago, and Woodlawn Baptist churches.

Thanksgiving will be the theme of the services this morning at the United Church of Hyde Park, when the pastor, Dr. George M. Gibson, will preach on "I Give You Victory."

Women's Club Dinner.

Thanksgiving cheer will be offered young men in the Hyde Park community who are away from home by the women's club of the Hyde Park YMCA, who, for the 54th consecutive year, will serve Thanksgiving dinner. The dinner will be held at 12:30 o'clock in the boy's department of the YMCA. Soldiers who are in the community are especially invited and some 300 soldiers and civilians are expected. Dr. Albert W. Palmer, president of the Chicago Theological seminary, will speak. Service men at camp are not forgotten. Last week the service men's committee of First Presbyterian church completed mailing boxes to 62 men of the church who are now in service, with the hopes that they will arrive by Thursday. The boxes contained caramels and an inspirational book "Strength for Service to God and Country," compiled by Chaplain Norman E. Nygaard, who has been serving in Ireland. Books bound in blue were in the navy and kakhi covered books went to soldiers and marines.

Soldiers in 23 States.

The boys who are to receive these boxes are in 23 states and the District of Columbia. Seven are in five different camps in Texas, six are in camp in California, four are in Washington, D. C., four in Illinois, four in Oklahoma, two in Pennsylvania, four are in Virginia, four are in Missouri, three are in Florida, three are in Maryland, two in New York, two in Arizona, and one each in Kentucky, Georgia, New Jersey, Colorado, Oregon, Indiana, Michigan, Washington, Delaware, Mississippi, and Alabama.

Robert H. Harrison is chairman of the church's serivce men's committee. Members are: Mrs. J. E. McCune, Mrs. J. W. Young, Dr. Hazel A. Dale, Carl W. Defebaugh, John W. Freels, and Paul C. Dougherty.

ILLINOIS TECH'S SAFETY COURSE TRAINS 1,012 MEN

But Industrial Accidents Still Show Increase.

With 1,500 students now undergoing instruction, the Illinois Institute of Technology is directing the largest industrial safety training program in history. Last year the institute supervised the training of 1,012 men in safety procedures, representing 300 Chicago plants. This was nearly one-quarter the number trained in all the safety schools of the nation.

While the institute no longer trains the great percentage of the national total it did last year, it stil lhas one of the largest of the nation's programs. The number of safety programs has been increased to meet the advancing rate of accidents in war industries.

Despite the efforts of these groups institute officials predict that this year 26,000 men, 20 to 45 years old, will meet death—not on the battlefield—but on the industrial front.

Hold Free Classes.

Tuition free safety classes were started by the institute last year thru the coöperation of the National Committee for the Conservation of Manpower in War Industries and the Greater Chicago Safety council. The plan of instruction and the courses outlined were adopted on a nationwide scale. Both major labor union groups coöperated in getting the classes under way.

One of the most important features of the instruction plan, according to institute officials, is the group of inspectors who visit the classes each week to prevent the instructor from dwelling too long on his specialty. The 36 instructors are drawn from all branches of industry and range from workers to plant superintendents. Classes are composed of about 25 students.

Meet in Public Schools.

Classes are held thruout the city. With the coöperation of the board of education, classroom space has been made available at the following schools: Austin, 231 North Pine avenue; Crane Technical High school, 2245 Jackson boulevard; Carl Schurz, 3601 Milwaukee avenue; Fenger, 11220 Wallace avenue; Harrison, 2850 24th boulevard; Lane Technical High school, 2501 West Addison street, and Tilden Technical High school, 4747 Union avenue.

The goal of the program is to get at least one trainee from every war plant in this area. Management or workers interested in the next classes, which will start early in 1943, should contact the war training office of the institute at 43 West 33d street.

Reports from the first trainees have just been received by Dr. J. I. Yellott, head of the war training committee, which administers the program. They indicate that where the companies coöperate with the trainees definite progress is made in the reduction of accidents. The Institute has employed a safety engineer to check accidents in its laboratories and workshops.

30,000 Are Killed.

Stressing the need for an increase in safety training, institute officials reported that industrial accidents claimed more lives the first six months of the year than did Axis bombings of Britain in three years. Since Pearl Harbor, not including casualties of the African campaign, 48,956 persons have been reported killed, wounded, or missing. During the same period industrial accidents claimed the lives of 30,000 persons, kith 2,500,000 injured.

A slight improvement of the accident rate in Chicago is shown for the last six months. The rate was 7.5 serious lost-time accidents per million man hours worked, a slight decrease from 1941 figures. The figures come from 141 plants employing 209,190 persons. However, safety council officials point out that this figure is lower by 41 per cent than in other cities which have tabulated the rate.

MUNSTER SCRAP DRIVE BRINGS 80 POUNDS PER MAN

Residents of Munster, Ind., have contributed an average of 80 pounds of scrap metal per person in their current drive. This town of approximately 3,000 persons has collected 120 tons of metal under the leadership of a woman, Mrs. A. J. Schuyler, 8254 Crestwood avenue.

In addition to the scrap metal the town found 5 tons of rubber which was contributed to that drive. The first shipment of tin cans from Munster, one month's collection, amounted to 2,390 pounds. Other members of the salvage committee are: Mrs. Herbert Berg, Mrs. Louis Hannauer, Ernest Elliott, school principal; Homer Hitt, scoutmaster; Walter Freese, and William Kliehege.

Edward Bennett, town marshal, gave the use of the town truck in collecting the scrap. A truck also was donated by William Terpstra, truck farmer, who heads the north township salvage committee. William Hitt, a high school junior, used a model T Ford to make collections.

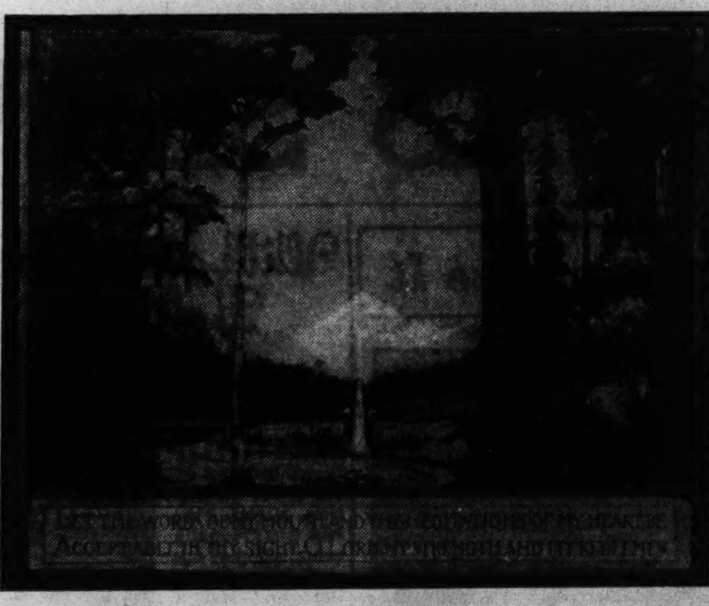
The Girl Scouts of the town are making fat collections every other Saturday. After collection they take the fats to their salvage chairman who sees that it is properly prepared.

At the same time the Boy Scouts collect tin cans and other materials which are needed, manila, rags, rubber, and scrap metal.

ADD APARTMENT HOUSE TO TECH INSTITUTE UNITS

A former apartment house on 34th street between Dearborn and Federal streets, has been added to the Illinois Institute of Technology. It has been christened Victory hall and a four foot "V" placed over the entrance to the building. Most of the classes in the new hall will probably be freshmen, as that class has increased 39 per cent. The hall provides two additional classrooms and a laboratory.

Paints Church Mural as Memorial



James Edwin McBurney, south side artist, recently painted and presented the mural to the First Presbyterian church in memory of his father, William McBurney, and his sister, Minnie McBurney, both of whom were members, years ago, of the old Woodlawn Park Presbyterian church, which later merged with First Presbyterian church.

REMODEL DUPLEX INTO SMALL WAR WORKERS' UNITS

Tenants Like Compact, New Quarters.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

Not long ago a very interesting—and patriotic—piece of work was completed in a two story greystone apartment duplex at 3253 Flournoy street.

Mrs. Katherine Kleppel and her daughter, Katharine, decided to remodel the upstairs seven room apartment of their building into two smaller apartments for war workers. They knew their residence was in a neighborhood serving many defense plants and factories and a plumbing contractor told them they would be eligible for priority assistance.

So they filled out the necessary forms and the work began. Before it was completed the new apartment had been rented to a war worker and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Scalzitti. The original renters of the apartment continued to occupy the balance of the former apartment.

Built-in Fixtures Please.

The Scalzittis are pleased with their new apartment and they like the compactness of their three rooms and bath, the efficient sink with its wooden cabinets, built to order, and the good looking bathroom with modern fixtures, including built-in tub with overhead shower.

The plumbing contractor handled the entire work of creating two small apartments out of the one large flat, and he and Miss Kleppel planned the arrangements. He also took the responsibility of getting the carpenters, plasterers, electricians, and decorators.

The seven room apartment had consisted of a front parlor and bedroom alcove, a living room, a large dining room, kitchen, two bedrooms and a bathroom.

Remove Fretted Archway.

The new apartment was created at the front and the alcove bedroom off the parlor was closed up to make a complete bedroom with a door opening into the new apartment living room. A fretted archway between parlor and living room was removed and the opening arched to separate the living room and the kitchen dinette.

To provide for a bathroom the plumbing contractor suggested building a new room to open off the kitchen, which would take part of the space of the old living room. The new room for the bath was 5½x7 feet and the remaining space provided an L-shaped room for the kitchen-dinette.

Red Accents in Kitchen.

All the fixtures in the bathroom and kitchen are white. Accents of red against the white cabinets, sink, range, and refrigerator highlight the equipment and black linoleum cabinet tops. The floor linoleum is black and grey with red. Pink and blue accessories make the bathroom attractive.

The woodwork of the new living room and bedroom was painted entirely white and the floors refinished. A new bathroom radiator, one of the modern midget wall-hung models, was installed, and the positions of radiators in the present kitchen-dinette were changed; a change for the better since the radiator in the kitchen is now under a window.

Original Tenants Satisfied.

The couple who occupied the original apartment did not need so much room and are quite satisfied with the remaining apartment which now consists of four rooms.

The former large dining room has had its buffet removed and now it is the living room. The bedrooms are the same and the kitchen and the bathroom continue to have the same fixtures. Redecoration in the kitchen, however, has made it useful and attractive as a kitchen-dinette.

This WEEK in the GARDEN

Monday, Nov. 23

Remove garden furniture and equipment to the basement or shed. Drain all hose and hang it on a broad wooden hook in a cool place or roll it on one of the specially made outfits where it is not likely to be in the way of other equipment.

Never permit garden tools to enter winter quarters without being thoroly cleaned. Clean and oil the mowing machine and sharpen the cutting edge so it will be ready for use next spring.

Unless the ground is frozen, walks can be remade and the planting of shrubs and trees continued. Planting can continue as long as the plants can be obtained. Never plant in poor soil, but remove it and replace with good, rich soil.

Tuesday, Nov. 24

There is no economy in using the tops of perennials for mulching, for they may contain insects and disease. Clear up the entire garden, destroying the tops.

Hardwood leaves are excellent for mulching, but do not spread deeply over plants or they may smother and die. Rather draw the leaves up to and around the plants. All leaves not used for mulching should be combined with soil and a compost heap started.

Manures are frequently difficult to obtain, but artificial manures are becoming more frequent.

Wednesday, Nov. 25

If the ground is not frozen it is excellent practice to spade it and permit it to lie in the rough all winter. Sod ground is best fitted in this way, for when spring comes it will have decayed and be ready for planting.

Do not dig so deep that the subsoil is turned on top, but increase the depth by spading a little deeper each spading.

If manure is available spread it over the surface before spading. Most soils require the addition of humus [manures and other vegetable material] to give the best growing conditions.

Thursday, Nov. 26

Prune vines by cutting out the diseased wood. Doing this work after the vines start in spring disturbs them and is likely to injure the young wood.

Cut back the Hydrangea paniculata grandiflora [the Peegee Hydrangea], leaving two to four buds on the shoots. Spiraea Anthony Waterer can be cut to the ground or within six inches. Tamarisk can be cut back severely to keep it low and in bush form. If allowed to grow rampant it becomes ungainly and ill shaped.

Friday, Nov. 27

The growing of plants in homes is sufficient to keep the gardener busy thruout the winter and the vast variety that is available gives every indoor gardener an opportunity to have a fine collection.

One of the finest groups are the begonias, with their remarkably beautiful foliage and exquisite flowers. These plants should be watered sparingly. The best way to water them is to place the pot in a container of water. Daily sprinkling with a fine spray tends to remove dust and preserve a halo of moisture around it.

Saturday, Nov. 28

Flowering pot plants should never be allowed to suffer from a lack of water. They will last longer if placed in a cool room at night. Most flowering plants require sun, while foliage plants do well in shade or partial shade.

Excellent effects can be obtained by using ornamental jardinieres, but water should not be allowed to stand in them or the plants will suffer because of saturated soil.

A fine palm is one of the most attractive plants for the home.

Friday Morning Forum.

J. Martin Klotsche of the department of history, State Teachers' college, Milwaukee, Wis., will speak at 10:30 o'clock Friday at the Friday morning forum of the Abraham Lincoln center, 700 Oakwood boulevard.

IN TOUGH SPOT, SOLDIER? THEN TRY RED CROSS

Home Service Helps Many Solve Problems.

"Send her one dozen roses," was the message the Red Cross received together with money from an anxious soldier at an embarkation point many miles from his wife in Chicago. The money was more than enough for one dozen and upon investigation by the Red Cross home service division two dozen were sent instead.

The anxious soldier had just become father of twins.

Not all messages received by the home service division at 616 South Michigan avenue are as poignant as that one, however. Staffed with a large group of highly trained social workers and approximately 40 volunteers, many of whom are from the north side, the division headquarters is open 24 hours a day receiving and sending messages, answering requests and making investigations. The workers and their volunteers are organized to render many services to the armed men; services not supplied by the army and navy but necessary for the maintenance of morale.

Hold Train 4 Minutes.

Once the Red Cross held a train four minutes so that a soldier might get back to camp before his furlough expired. Assisting stranded wives who have gone to visit their husbands in camp and have found themselves short of funds to get home is a common chore.

Often soldiers arrive in Chicago after the war department finance office is closed for the day and come to the South Michigan office to get personal checks cashed. Sometimes when a service man becomes ill while on furlough the Red Cross visits the home and reports, to his superior officers the seriousness of the illness.

Looking after the servicemen's families, advancing money for emergencies and obtaining lawyers for legal matters are all in the scope of home service activities.

Money Blew Away.

One soldier came in and asked for a loan to purchase a return ticket back to camp. He said his had fallen from his pants pocket and blown out the hotel window.

Another soldier wanted to send $100 home in a hurry. The Red Cross field director wired the Chicago home service office which advanced the money to the family immediately. Several days later the check arrived from the soldier and the Red Cross was reimbursed.

Broken Romances.

Even broken romances are sometimes ministered to. One Chicago girl went to visit her soldier friend in camp only to find him married to another girl. The Red Cross field director put the visitor on a train home and wired the Chicago office to meet her at the station. The train arrived but she wasn't on it. Several days were spent in tracing her to a friend's home and in getting her home safely again.

Occasionally requests are turned down. One of these was from a clothes conscious soldier who had bought more uniforms than he had money for.

Camps are equipped with field directors whose jobs are to listen to the service men's personal problems. They then relay messages and requests on to the "home front" which in Chicago is the 24 hour home service division. More than half of the Red Cross budget and personnel is being given to this branch of the service.

Busy 24 Hours a Day.

Twenty four hours a day, volunteers are busy at the office, doing clerical work, checking reports, taking messages and running errands for the large staff of specialized workers. In peace times many of these same women would be planning bridge parties, teas, and other social events. Many of their sister volunteer workers serve as nurses' aids, knit, make surgical bandages and drive automobiles in the motor corps.

The home service division uses an average of 10 cars each day from the motor corps to investigate home conditions and reported illnesses in the homes of service men.

CHRISTMAS SEAL CAMPAIGN WILL OPEN TOMORROW

War Adds to Task of Tuberculosis Fighters.

Sale of 1942 Christmas seals, sponsored by the Tuberculosis Institute of Chicago and Cook county, will begin tomorrow, it was announced by Homer J. Buckley, president of the group. Stamps will be on sale thru Christmas, Mrs. Richard M. Hallinan, 2310 East 70th place, has been appointed general seal chairman for Chicago.

"We have a greater task ahead of us this year than ever before in the 36 year history of the seal drive," Buckley declared, "since tuberculosis always spreads more rapidly and among more persons in a nation at war." He added that increases were being experienced in many nations which have felt the ravages of war. Increases are attributed to crowded conditions, fatigue, worry, lack of sanitation, poor nutrition, an insufficient or lack of case finding and facilities for treatment.

No Rise Noticed Here.

"Fortunately as yet we have had no rise in tuberculosis here," Buckley continued, "but we must fight harder than ever to make certain that no increase, either in incidence or deaths, occurs." With the war effort creating a drain on the nation's supply of doctors and nurses, he said, the menace is more serious than before.

The annual drive here is a part of the national campaign in which 1,700 affiliated tuberculosis associations thruout the United States, the Canal Zone, Alaska, and Porto Rico participate. Funds from the sale are used to maintain the institute's year around educational preventive and clinical battle to control and reduce tuberculosis.

Where Money Goes.

In Chicago the funds are used to carry out case finding by means of tuberculin testing and X-rays; to provide public health nurses who work with individual families; to finance an educational program which includes literature, motion pictures, and lectures for the benefit of public schools and public groups; to maintain an average of 21 public health clinics per month thruout the year in the country, and carry on a rehabilitation program to place ex-tuberculosis patients in useful jobs.

Civic leaders acting as campaign chairmen in south area suburbs include: Mrs. William H. Thrailkill, 548 Douglas street, Calumet City, and Mrs. Howard A. Bertram, 17937 Community street, Lansing.

Married

Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Soderquist of 1839 West 93d street, have announced the marriage of their daughter, Norma, to Whitney Paul Michaels, son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Michaels of 7134 Carpenter street. Mrs. Michaels attended Bowen High school; Mr. Michaels, Parker High school.

Washburne Is on W-G-N Program Today.

Washburne Trade school and how it trains youths to enter the fields of industry will be described at 1 o'clock this afternoon on W-G-N's half hour recorded program, "Citizens of Tomorrow." James B. McCahey, president of the Chicago board of education, will be the principal speaker, outlining the school's 24 hour a day vocational program which was instituted 10 years ago.

Six hundred Washburne students will join the chorus in the school song, "The Washburne Way."

Clarence Markus, Washburne senior student, and Miss Margaret Johnson, senior at Central High school, Lansing, Mich., will be added to the program's honor roll. Markus will be interviewed by Maxwell.

A number of special guests attended the recording and were introduced to the 800 Washburne students who attended. The guests were Dr. William H. Johnson, superintendent of schools; Philip L. McNamee, assistant superintendent in charge of vocational education; Wilson Frankland, member of the board of education; Oscar W. Rosenthal, president of the National Association of Building Trades; Samuel I. Levin and Mrs. L. Robert Mellin of the board of education; William Finkl, chairman of the educational committee, National Metal Trades association; Patrick Sullivan, president of the Chicago Building Trades council; Charles C. Polich, national chairman of research and production, Merchant Tailors and Designers Association of America, and Miss Sidonia Fried, organizer of the United Hatters, Cap, and Millinery Workers International union.

Livingston, public relations director of Illinois Manufacturers' association; Abraham Heller, executive director, Chicago Association of Dress Manufacturers; William J. Hennessy, manager, convention bureau, Chicago Chamber of Commerce; Oscar G. Mayer, member of the board of directors and senior council, Chicago Association of Commerce, and Walter Collins, secretary, Master Electrical Contractors' association.

Organized in 1917.

The school was started in 1917 when an abandoned school building at 655 West 14th street was made available for training industrial war workers. Shortly afterward it was used for the rehabilitation of disabled soldiers returning from the battle front. Later other departments were added and in 1934 it was moved to Sedgwick and Division streets.

In 1928 the training facilities of the school were opened to youth of high school age and in 1933 it was made co-educational. Organized labor groups and employer groups have worked with the school system to establish training facilities for the workers in their various fields. The school faculty has increased from a few men in 1919 to 135 members.

OPEN FRIENDSHIP HOUSE; THIRD IN NORTH AMERICA

Designed to Promote Inter-Racial Unity.

Dedicated to the Catholic church ideal of "the brotherhood of man and the Fatherhood of God" an inter-racial community center, Friendship house, recently was opened on the south side at 305 East 43d street. This is the third house of its type to be established.

Baroness Catherine De Hueck, who was born in Russia and saw her family's fortune wiped out in the revolution, is the sponsor of the three houses. One is in Toronto, Canada, and the other in Harlem, New York City.

Found Refuge in Canada.

The first house was organized more than 10 years ago in Toronto by the baroness, who had found refuge in Canada following the Russian revolution. She explained that in part its formation was prompted to offset subversive elements which were making inroads in the city's slums.

In 1937, when somewhat the same situation arose among the Negroes of Harlem, she related, the Catholic church invited her to open a Friendship house there. This house began as a one room apartment, which also served as living quarters for the baroness.

Sent Two Representatives.

Baroness de Hueck was invited to Chicago by Bishop Bernard Sheil. Unable to leave Harlem, Ann Harrigan and Ellen Tarry, one white and one Negro girl, were sent to open the house. One of its principal aims is to promote better understanding between the races. Among the activities will be weekly forums, study clubs, labor school, consumer coöperative groups, mothers' clubs, youth groups, games, dancing classes, glee clubs, story hours, sewing classes, and a dramatic club.

Miss Tarry, a native of Birmingham, Ala., lived in New York City for 13 years and was a reporter on a Negro paper. She has contributed to Catholic periodicals and is the author of two juvenile books. Miss Harrigan, who formerly taught English in Cleveland, O., has been connected with the National Conference of Christians and Jews for the last few years.

MUTUAL TO AIR NEWS COMMENTS BY UPTON CLOSE

W-G-N Carries First Talk at 4:15 Today.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

Upton Close, who has been called the Marco Polo of news commentators, will begin a new series of broadcasts over W-G-N and 55 other stations of the Mutual Broadcasting system from 4:15 to 4:30 p. m. today. The first of Close's comments on the news over Mutual will come from New York. Subsequent broadcasts will come from Chicago, New York, and San Francisco, in that order.

Close has a colorful background. He has had more than a quarter center of experience in the far east and other Pacific regions. He was born Josef Washington Hall in Kelso, Washington, and spent much of his childhood on an Indian reservation along the Columbia river.

An Investigator for United States.

After graduating from George Washington university he went to China as an investigating officer for the United States in Shantung during the Japanese invasion from 1916 to 1919.

As advisor to the Chinese student revolutionaries in Peking in 1919 and as chief of foreign affairs for the Peking Leader, reputed to be the oldest newspaper in the world, Close had an opportunity to travel extensively in all parts of China, Japan, Manchuria, and the South Pacific.

Close has contributed thousands of articles to magazines and newspapers on three continents. It was in connection with his work as a newspaperman that he acquired the name Upton Close. He signed his cabled dispatches UPCLOSE, which is simply "Close Up" when the syllables are reversed. Upton Close is an elaboration of Upclose.

Author of Book on Japan.

Between his travels, lectures, and journalistic endeavors Close has found time to write eleven books on adventure, history, romance, and biography.

His latest volume, recently published, "Behind the Face of Japan," is one of the important books dealing with the present war.

Close has been broadcasting off and on since 1924. This is his first series for Mutual. He appears on NBC's News of the World roundups at 6:15 p. m. Monday and Wednesday and is heard over WMAQ-NBC at 4:45 p. m. Saturdays and at 2:15 p. m. Sundays.

500 ENTHUSIASTS HELP KEEP STATE IN WAR BOND LEAD

Neglect Business, Wives to Carry Message.

Freeman J. Wood.

Illinois, leading the nation in war bond sales much of the time, can thank a group of 500 Chicago men who have neglected their wives, homes, business, and golf for months to win this honor for the state—and boom the war program.

THE TRIBUNE today presents two bond-selling captains and their crews, not to give them individual credit so much as to shed light on the entire group of 500 insurance men and brokers who have been giving several days a week for the last year to help bring 10,891 Illinois firms into the pay roll allotment war bond plan. Nearly 80 per cent of the 3,324,047 employés in these firms are enrolled in the plan. The captains are Freeman Wood and Earl Schwemm.

To stay in the front ranks, Illinoisans must buy more than $60,000,000 worth of bonds every month in the year. Bankers and capitalists couldn't make such continuing purchases. Only one group could—ordinary workmen, white collar or denim clad.

Rank and File Workers.

"And the ordinary workman usually don't have any money left over to buy bonds," Norman B. Collins, state administrator of war bond sales, points out. "So our staff, all volunteers, has carried the campaign into factories and offices in the form of the pay roll allotment system of buying war bonds.

"There are big names mentioned from time to time in the newspapers for their work in installing the system, but actually the bulk of the work was done by the rank and file workers—insurance men, brokers, advertising men.

"If you really want to know who has been out to the steel mills and factories and restaurants, arranging to have war bond purchases deducted regularly from waitresses' and machinists' and packers' pay checks, you'll have to meet our captains and their men."

Typical of State.

Freeman Wood, captain, is not the average bond seller, but the spirit that has set him to selling the plan to over 100 firms personally, one of the firms alone purchasing $332,000 worth of war bonds a month, is the spirit that has pushed Illinois to the fore in the sale of war bonds. His crew and he together have set up the plan in over 500 plants involving several hundred thousand employés.

Wood is head of a loop insurance agency. He lives in Winnetka with his wife and one son.

"We go out to an employé meeting at some plant, and everybody sits there glumly, wondering who we are and why we don't go away," Wood relates. "It is our job, and not an easy one, to leave the workmen singing "The Star Spangled Banner" and meaning it because they have bought a share in the war program by signing for regular bond purchases."

Recruited Own Staff.

Earl Schwemm, manager of a loop insurance agency, was named a captain more than a year ago. Since then he has installed the pay roll bond plan in nearly 100 firms. He works with a crew of 12 men.

"We were given a list of 100 corporations where we were to set up the plan," Schemm explains the routine. "We split these names up among our crew, and each man took time off to get out to his list in the daytime.

"First we called on an executive and explained the plan, arranging a second date to return and talk to an assembly of the workers. At this latter date, pledge cards were filled out by the employés authorizing a deduction from their pay checks each payday. This deduction would accumulate until a bond could be purchased and sent to the employé."

Still After Mark.

But this was not the end. At first some plants were subscribing only 1 per cent of their pay rolls. The bond selling crews returned time and again, gave more pep talks, issued 10 per cent pins to employés who pledged that proportion of their wages.

Finally, in plant after plant, the regular deduction grew nearer and nearer the 10 per cent over-all average, the treasury's goal. The majority of Schwemm's corporations now hover around 8 or 9 per cent, and he and his men are still spending one or two days a week working on them.

ANOTHER STORY OF SLAVE PRESS ON W-G-N TODAY

Drama Shows Belgium Used as Brokers' Pawn.

The story of Belgium and how that nation was used as a pawn by international financiers working under the protection of a Nazi dominated press prior to her entry in the war, will be related by Stanley Johnston, Chicago Tribune war correspondent, on the "Mightier Than the Sword" program on W-G-N from 2:30 to 3 p. m. today.

Johnston will tell how financiers in France sent iron ore to Germany for its steel stock piles, and how Germany, in return, sent fuel to France to run France's blast furnaces. Belgium, sandwiched between the two countries, was used as the traffic lane and goods were sent tax exempt.

Johnston will relate how the lid was knocked off this story by the slaying of a Belgian border guard who attempted to stop the Nazi truck transports. He will also tell how he tried to break the story to the Belgian press, only to be rebuffed by a Nazi agent posing as a newspaper editor.

The editor and his secretary tried to capture and slay Johnston thru a ruse, but the scheme back fired when Johnston escaped into Holland, from where he sent his story to the newspapers of America.

"Mightier Than the Sword" is written and produced by Jack LaFrandre and features an all-star radio cast. Music on the program is by Robert Trendler and the W-G-N Symphony orchestra.

'BOHEMIAN GIRL' NEXT ON W-G-N THEATER OF AIR

Balfe's "Bohemian Girl," starring Marion Claire and Attilio Baggiore, will be presented on the Chicago Theater of the Air from 8 to 9 p. m. next Saturday on W-G-N and the Mutual network.

Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, will speak. Miss Claire will take the rôle of Arline, daughter of an Austrian nobleman. Baggiore will portray the singing rôle of Thaddeus, an exiled Polish rebel. Supporting the principals will be Bruce Foote and Earl Wilkie. Foote will sing the rôle of Arline's father, the Count of Arnheim, while Wilkie will portray the gypsy leader, Devilshoof.

Known for its melody rather than its plot, "Bohemian Girl" is the most popular of Balfe's many works. The libretto for the operetta was written by the nineteenth century poet, Bunn.

Musical background will be supplied by the W-G-N symphony orchestra directed by Henry Weber and by the chorus led by Robert Trendler. Kenneth MacGregor, W-G-N chief of production, will produce the program.

A full cast of actors will present the dramatic rôles of the operetta. Marvin Mueller will be the announcer.

Wields Clippers for 50 Years

Ernst F. Klein, 74, who has worked as a barber on the south side for more than 50 years, tells Dr. J. David Johnston, president of the Woodlawn Lions club, about shaving and cutting the hair of soldiers of the last three wars as he cuts Johnston's hair in the Hayes hotel, 64th street and University avenue.

ISPAN, BUSY MAN, HOLDS TWO JOBS: BARBER AND COP

Works 71 Hours Week in Shop, Plant.

John Ispan of 9009 Brandon avenue is a busy man. Five afternoons a week and all day Saturday, he is at work in his barber shop at 9233 Cottage Grove avenue. Five nights a week, he is an auxiliary military policeman at the Interlake Iron corporation at 112th street and Torrence avenue. The two jobs take 71 hours a week!

Asked how he maintains energy to do both, he shrugged his shoulders and recalled days of 1917 and 1918 that were far more difficult. Then he was a soldier with the AEF in France.

Won Purple Heart.

He served thru many battles of the last war; was wounded twice at St. Mihiel in September, 1918, and was awarded the Purple Heart. He was honorably discharged from the army in 1920.

One of his stepsons is in the army, another is awaiting his army call, and two are in war industries. William McClain, 25, is staff sergeant in an anti-aircraft unit at Camp Haan, California. Charles McClain, 20, will be in the army within 10 days. Robert McClain, 26, and John McClain, 23, are steel inspectors at the Carnegie-Illinois Steel corporation.

Born in Austria-Hungary.

Ispan was born in Vukhovar, Austria-Hungary Sept. 16, 1895, arrived in America Oct. 23, 1912. After the last war, he was again in the army from 1930 to 1934, stationed at Honolulu, Hawaii. He is a member of Burke-O'Malley American Legion post.

SOUTH SIDE YMCA CENTERS ENROLL 2,700 MEMBERS

Wabash Unit May Become Largest Negro Group.

More than 2,700 new members were added to south side YMCA membership rolls as the result of the general campaign which recently closed. Top enrollment figures were turned in by the Wabash avenue center which garnered 1,615 new members.

This figure brings the total enrollment of the Wabash center to approximately 3,250, which may give it the largest enrollment of any Negro YMCA in the nation. However, officials reported that the St. Louis, Mo., YMCA, which rivals its membership, has just completed a membership drive. Latest figures show the membership of the St. Louis organization to be 3,228.

Chairman Tallies 79.

William P. Harrison, 5044 South Parkway, who was chairman of the Wabash drive, recruited 79 new members. The goal of the center was 1,000 members. They also raised more than $5,000

Second largest total of new members to be turned in on the south side was at the Hyde Park YMCA, which, with a goal of 799 new members, recruited 838. Their campaign was featured by midnight parties at which reports of the day's results were made. Honors in the campaign go to Louis Spear, chairman of the campaign, Monroe Baer, A. J. Kramer, and Mrs. E. J. Heintz.

South Shore in Race.

For the first time the South Shore YMCA entered the general campaign and 108 new members joined. Chester Hall, executive secretary, reported that memberships were still coming in to his office. While they have only a clubroom they work with about 1,000 high school girls and boys thru Hi-Y and Tri-Hi-Y clubs. W. J. Allen was chairman of the campaign, assisted by R. A. Williams and William H. Clay.

The drive at the South Chicago YMCA brought 155 new members. The campaign was carried out under the direction of Joseph A. Basso, who was assisted by Carl Elkin.

WEST AREA PLANS THANKS SERVICES

SALERNO, OCD CHIEF, IS GEM OF DIPLOMACY

Calls His Neighbors All-Americans.

Want advice on how to make persons of different nationalities get along together? Meet Joe Salerno, diplomat. He's commander of OCD community 2, the central west side. There's a miniature united nations within the community's borders—and a dozen other nationalities thrown in for good measure. But they're all Americans now, Salerno declares, and they're all coöperating with him 100 per cent.

The east portion of the community, along the canal, is almost entirely industrial property. On the northern boundary, Harrison street, the neighborhood is 95 per cent Greek. In the southeast corner of the community, along 16th street, the population is heavily Polish. To the southwest there are a number of Hollanders and Lithuanians. There are also a number of Germans thruout the southern half of the community, which extends as far west as Ashland avenue. A number of Negro families reside in the community. And the central portion is almost entirely Italian.

Gave Up Draft Job.

There had been a couple of commanders for community 2 before Joe Salerno tackled the job. The community was whipped into shape under his leadership after he gave up his chairmanship of a selective service board to devote more time to OCD activties. Since April, his OCD headquarters have been located in a small room in Hull House, 800 South Halsted street. Soon the office will be moved to 942 Taylor street, to larger quarters which will include a neighborhood center for servicemen.

There are a lot of boys in the service now from community 2. Local draft boards won both the first and second prizes the American Legion awarded recently for the most voluntary enlistments in the whole 6th corps area. Board 34, at 914 South Loomis avenue, was first, and Board 108 at 816 Taylor street, won second prize.

One of the most cosmopolitan zones within the community is that which includes the Jane Addams Housing project. Michael Fumo, 840 South Lytle street, is captain. There are 1,260 families included in the project alone, and 240 other families in private homes in the area. Almost every nationality included in the community itself can be found in this zone, including various religious beliefs, and several Negro families. There is one family of Philippine-Japanese descent.

Assisted by Son-in-Law.

George Weiser, who operates a candy store at 1260 South Union street, is one of Salerno's most active zone captains. He has lived in his community for 35 years, coming to this country from Rumania 40 years ago at the age of 13. He is assisted in his work by his son-in-law, Sam Green, 901 Roosevelt road. The 54 families in their zone include Russians, Jews, Lithuanians, Mexicans, Irish, and Negroes.

Zone Captain John De Costa, 1315 South Newberry avenue, was born in Illinois, but is of Mexican parentage. He works as a welder in a plant making airplane parts, but carries on his zone captain's duties with the aid of his wife. When John is switched from the day to the night shift Mrs. De Costa takes over the job. Their five daughters, Elvira, 23; Marie, 21; Margaret, 19; Lillian, 17, and Katherine, 15, help, too, by passing out the OCD newspaper, Alert, and by running errands for their father. Even Maria's little daughter, Petra Toribio, 4, helps her granddad with his work.

Six Week Job in Two.

One of the busiest zone captains is William Ruther, 1530 14th place, who is a screw machine operator in a war industry. Born in Chicago of Holland parents, he is captain of a zone which includes Hollanders, Poles, and Negroes. The fourth captain for the zone, he was appointed before the zone was organized, and within two weeks had accomplished the job which took six weeks in most zones. One of his flag raising ceremonies, held in the evening so war workers could attend, was the biggest affair the community had seen in months.

Several of the zones in community 2 are captained by Negroes. Alex Mitchell, 1412 Hastings street, was born in Tennessee. He is a conveyor switchman at Armour's now. More residents of his zone have taken the prescribed OCD courses than any other zone in the community. Mitchell has one small son.

William Watson, Negro tailor at 1345 South Union street, is another active zone captain. Part of his district includes a section of Maxwell street, where he has the coöperation of the merchants.

Father and Son.

In the Greek settlement between Polk and Harrison streets, from Halsted street to Des Plaines street, the zone captain is Sam Godelas. His father, Thomas Godelas, 745 South Halsted street, is captain of the block in which their candle shop is located. The elder Godelas came to America from Greece in 1912, and served in the United States army in 1918.

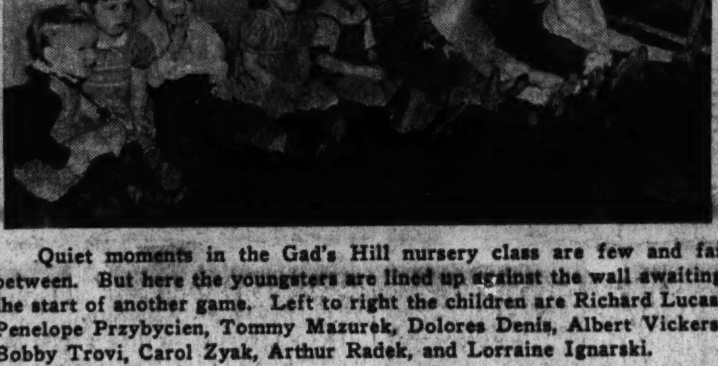
Gad's Hill Center Nursery Children Know Thanksgiving's Near

Whether the world's at war or in peace, turkeys and horns are plenty, pilgrims and pumpkins are the things that interest 5 year olds about Thanksgiving time. Lorraine Ignarski, 1807 South Ashland avenue, shows her two playmates that skill and a pair of blunt scissors can make an attractive cutout from a piece of gaily decorated crepe paper. At work on their own cutouts are Tommy Mazurek, 2243 23d street, at the left, and Arthur Radek, 2014 South Ashland avenue. The children are all members of the nursery class at Gad's Hill center, 1919 Cullerton street.

It's slow, exacting work—this cutting out. But Penelope Przybycien, 2645 21st place, gets a good grip on her scissors and settles down to the task.



Quiet moments in the Gad's Hill nursery class are few and far between. But here the youngsters are lined up against the wall awaiting the start of another game. Left to right the children are Richard Lucas, Penelope Przybycien, Tommy Mazurek, Dolores Denis, Albert Vickers, Bobby Trovi, Carol Zyak, Arthur Radek, and Lorraine Ignarski.

STUDENT TAKES CHARGE; PLANTS TAKE NEW LIFE

Big Lemon Flourishes at York High.

Ranchers in the semi-tropics might hastily pass it by, but the lemon which has reached its full size in the conservatory at York High school is a prima donna among the plants in the biology class collection. The big lemon is still green and it will be months before it ripens. When it does, it may go into a pie. Ralph Strane, supervisor, says he doesn't care for lemon pie. He does like plants.

When Ralph entered the biology class as a sophomore, he took note of the glassed-in space just off the classroom, added when the wing of the building was built in 1929. Hesitantly, he asked his teacher, Russell Palmer, if he couldn't supervise the project. That he was expressing something more than a whim has been full demonstrated as the hothouse has developed.

Reminds Him to Leave.

"Ralph is the first student to assume full responsibility for the conservatory," explained Mr. Palmer. "Instead of urging him to keep at it, I've had to remind him that it's time to leave."

It was after class hours and Ralph, professionally aproned, was busy spraying the oleander given to Miss Lois Ashton, Latin teacher, at one of the school's Roman banquets. Ralph took the plant home last spring and brought it back in the fall full of buds.

In the desert section, sprinkled with sand, stood the large cactus brought from Mexico and belonging to Miss Cuba Canan, the Spanish teacher. The avocado plant had been raised from a seed by Jacquelin Metcalfe, a senior. The empty section, Ralph explained, was being left for tomato plants to go into Victory gardens next spring.

Has Idea for Rubber.

Had he made any scientific findings of his own? the young florist was asked. He refused to be taken very seriously.

"I have an idea, tho," he ventured, "that rubber might be made from poinsetttia sap. That largest poinsettia I pulled out of an ash can and planted. The other was given us by a family in Elmhurst last Christmas."

Since taking over, Ralph gives his time after school to the greenhouse. Friday nights he gives everything a good watering and hopes that nothing will go wrong over the week-end. Students are welcomed as visitors to the conservatory.

Interested in Results.

In the conservatory there is a small aquarium that, since it leaked, has been converted into a terrarium. The occupants are two turtles owned by Gorton Herdeck, a freshman.

Appointment of Ralph Strane as supervisor of the York conservatory appears to have been a happy arrangement all around. The project has developed as never before, teacher and classmates are appreciative, and Ralph has found an extra curricular activity entirely to his liking. He puts it this way, "I'm interested in processes that get results."

Uses Clippers on 225,000 in 50 Years

BY ONEY FRED SWEET.

In his Western Springs barber shop, Otto Schreder was putting the finishing touches on what he estimated to be his 225,000th haircut. The first time he had worked on a customer was when he was a boy of 17 in London. Now, he was rounding out his 50th year at the trade.

The present customer, a youth of high school age, made use of the hand mirror to study the effect from a rear view. Otto removed the apron and shook it free of shorn locks. Perfunctorily, he uttered the word that had echoed in barber shops ever since he could remember—"Next!"

"Fifty years," Otto remarked. "Thirty-eight of them in the west suburbs, and 22 of them in Western Springs."

In England 12 Years.

He hadn't planned his career when he left Danzig, Germany, where he was born. First he had come to America, but after a short stay in the east, had worked his way across the seas on a cattle boat to London. There he had learned the barber trade and stayed for 12 years.

"At first I worked in the poorer part of London, but later shifted to the better shops in Mayfair and Bond street. I married an English girl and acquired an English accent, but have since lost the accent."

That was during the reign of Queen Victoria, it was suggested.

Saw Edward Crowned.

"Ah, yes," smiled Mr. Schreder. "I well remember the talk in the shop on the occasion of her 60 year jubilee, and I witnessed the coronation of King Edward VII. We had customers among the soldiers returned from the Boer war. A shave was tuppence, but only the actors and servants shaved close. They were all for having their beards trimmed. And men were very proud of their long whiskers. You had to lift them up and trim from the under side. Why did men wear them? To please the women, of course. And it was the women who changed the style.

"Where I worked in Blackpool, the head barber was a tooth puller as well."

There was still a hangover of the gay nineties when Mr. Schreder returned to America again and this time chose the location in Downers Grove. It was still the era of monogrammed shaving mugs. They stood in a rack on the wall, each bearing a symbol of the trade of the owner or perhaps his lodge emblem.

Mug's Owner Bewails.

"Once I broke one of these mugs," recalled Mr. Schreder, "and it all but broke its owner's heart."

"Saturday nights there was always a waiting list and we kept open late. It was unorthodox to get your hair cut on Saturday because that might prevent some one from having a smooth face for the Sabbath. We gave out pasteboard cards with numbers on them so that patrons might go out and do their shopping and take their turn later. Barber shop bathtubs? I had one of the finest of them here in my shop until about 12 years ago. It was supplied with soft water in what was then a hard water town. In those days, customers also waited for their turn at the tub. The barber shop bathtub went out when universal plumbing came in.

Ah, Those Pomades!

"Men may not have shaved as often in the old days, but they yearned to be sweet smelling when they left the barber shop. My, the pomades and the hair oil that left no doubt of a person being well groomed. When a bridegroom came in on his wedding day he demanded that he be given 'the works.' Mustaches were waxed and they were curled at the ends, and there was a dyeing of hair and mustaches that never fooled anybody."

Mr. Schreder's experience as a barber included a year in the Englewood district in Chicago and a period in La Grange.

Mr. Schreder said that it was while he was working in La Grange the conversation of customers first began to take on the subject of automobiles. It is his impression that along in 1904, there were about 30 cars in the village, and that drivers favored going north to 12th street so as to approach Chicago on a paved road. As compared to England, automobiles back in 1904 seemed plentiful in America.

Saw Them Go in '17.

War became the topic again in 1917. A barber is among the first to notice a falling off of customers among the young fellows. Mr. Schreder observed that oldsters may wait to come to the barber shop when their wives chase thoem there to get a hair cut, but that that those in their courting days need no prodding. Wide use of the safety razor became noticeable after the World War I.

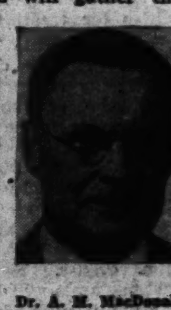
But still there were no beauty parlors, and when women began to bob their hair they were obliged to visit the barber shop. They came timidly at first, but their presence in the waiting row had an influence on barber shop decorations and reading matter. Hitherto, any real barber shop had on its walls the pictures of race horses and prize fighters, and tedious moments were whiled away with perusals of the Police Gazette.

Mr. Schreder has met all the changes that have come about thru the half century. Now, the young customers pay a last visit in uniform and he does not see them again. His son, George, is with the marines, and his son-in-law, C. J. Dean, is in the navy. His three grandchildren like to visit the shop. It seems a long time ago since a part of his duty was to curl and wash the white wigs of English barristers. He has no thought of retiring. With enthusiasm for his calling, he asks, vigorously, "Next?"

BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE TO SAY SUNRISE PRAYER

Holiday Will Stress Religious Theme.

Congregations thruout the west side and suburbs will gather this week for praise and prayer services in annual observance of the Thanksgiving season. Emphasis in most churches will be put on the responsibility of all persons to maintain a world for which thanks can be given, or "Thanks Living," as one pastor is titling his sermon. Many of the services will be held on Thanksgiving morning, some at the sunrise hour. Others will be held Wednesday evening, with some planning services for today in observance of Thanksgiving.



Dr. A. M. MacDonald.

A number of west side churches will join in a union service at 8 o'clock Wednesday evening in the Warren Avenue Congregational church, 3101 Warren boulevard. This is under general direction of the West Side Ministers' association, with Rabbi Samuel Schwartz of Washington Boulevard temple as president. The Rev. D. M. Jordan of Gammon Memorial Methodist church will be the speaker.

Young people from Baptist churches thruout the west side will attend a sunrise prayer and praise service at 7:30 o'clock Thanksgiving morning. Dr. A. M. MacDonald of the Baptist association headquarters will speak at the meeting, to be held at the Tabernacle Baptist church, 3300 Monroe street. This is one of three similar services being held in the city and suburbs, sponsored by the Chicago Baptist Young People's union.

La Grange Girl Chairman.

Chairman for the west side in this sunrise service is Marianne Dresher, 720 North La Grange road, La Grange. The offering taken at the three services will be used for furthering the church's Christian work at the Oak Forest infirmary, where Mrs. Blanche Maplesden, 5740 Lake street, is the Baptist missionary.

Churches on the west side who will coöperate include Austin, Bohemian, Epiphany, Garfield Park, Latvian, Messiah, Rumanian, Second Tabernacle, Bellwood, Berwyn, Cicero, Elgin, La Grange, Maywood, Oak Park, and Judson Baptist churches.

Austin Presbyterian church, 5720 Fulton street, will be host to congregations of five central Austin churches—the Baptist, Methodist, Congregational, Presbyterian, and Nazarene—at 10 o'clock Thursday morning. The Rev. John M. Schneider, superintendent for the Chicago western district of the Methodist church, will preach. There will be special music, presented by Robert Gomer Jones, director, and Mrs. Jones, organist.

Anniversary of Edifice.

The congregation of the Austin Presbyterian church will hold its own Thanksgiving service at the regular worship hour Sunday morning, with the Rev. Walter Henry Nugent in the pulpit, and the choir presenting special music. This also will be the eighth anniversary of the dedication of the present church edifice.

Joint Thanksgiving services will be held at 10:30 o'clock Thursday morning at Congregational B'nai Israel, 5433 Jackson boulevard. The rabbis of Austin Jewish Community center, the B'nai Israel congregation, Washington Boulevard temple, and West Suburban Jewish center will officiate.

Immanuel Lutheran church, 1134 South Ashland avenue, will hold its Thanksgiving service at 10 o'clock Thursday morning, in charge of the pastor, the Rev. E. H. Meinzen.

Plan Catholic Masses.

At Our Lady of Sorrows church, 3121 Jackson boulevard, where the Rev. Vincent Sheltinga is pastor, there will be solemn high mass and thanksgiving in the upper church at 10 o'clock Thursday morning.

There will be a special Thanksgiving mass at Our Lady Help of Christians church, 832 North Le Claire avenue, at 9 o'clock Thursday morning. Msgr. Richard S. Kelly is pastor there. Other masses will be said at 6:15, 7, 7:30 and 8 o'clock Thanksgiving morning.

St. Procopius, the church of the Benedictine Fathers at 1641 Allport street, is planning a special prayer service for soldiers and for victory to follow its high mass at 8 o'clock Thanksgiving morning. Pastor at St. Procopius is the Rev. Joseph Chvatal.

Communion at St. Barnabas.

St. Barnabas' Episcopal church, 4241 Washington boulevard, will observe Holy communion at 7:30 o'clock on Thanksgiving morning. There will be a second service at 11 o'clock that morning, which the children have been urged to attend with their parents. A musical program will be presented by the choir and organ, under direction of William B. Knaus. The Rev. Walter S. Pond's sermon will be on "Reasons for Thanksgiving." Needy families will be remembered by gifts of food from the congregation.

CHRISTMAS SEAL CAMPAIGN OPENS HERE TOMORROW

Western Suburbs Leaders Are Appointed.

The 1942 Christmas seal sale opens officially tomorrow, and will continue thru Christmas, according to Homer J. Buckley, president of the Tuberculosis Institute of Chicago and Cook county, sponsor of the campaign in this area. Civic leaders in western suburbs are helping with the Christmas seal campaign by acting as chairman in their respective communities.

"We have a greater task ahead of us this year than ever before in the 36 year history of the Christmas seal drive, since tuberculosis always spreads more rapidly and among more persons in a nation at war," Mr. Buckley declared. "Wartime rises in the disease, now being suffered to great extent in many nations which have felt the ravages of conflict, are attributed to crowded housing facilities, fatigue, worry, lack of sanitation, poor nutrition, and insufficient facilities for treatment.

More Serious This Year.

"With the war draining the nation's supply of doctors and nurses, the menace of tuberculosis facing every person is now more serious than ever before," he pointed out. "Fortunately, we have as yet had no rise in tuberculosis here, but we must fight harder than ever to keep the upper hand, and to make certain that no increase, either in incidence or deaths, occurs. Your purchase of Christmas seals will help this effort."

The annual drive here is a part of the national campaign in which 1,700 affiliated tuberculosis associations thruout the United States, the Canal Zone, Alaska, and Puerto Rico participate. Funds from the seal sale are used to maintain the institute's year round educational and clinical battle to control and reduce tuberculosis.

Funds to Nurses.

The Christmas seal sale provides funds used in Chicago and Cook county to carry on case finding by means of tuberculin testing and x-ray; provides public health nurses who work with individual families; finances an educational program which includes literature, motion pictures, and lectures for the benefit of schools and public groups; maintains an average of 21 public health clinics per month thruout the year in the country, and carries on a rehabilitation program to place ex-tuberculosis patients in useful jobs where they may support their families and the war effort.

Among those from the west side appointed to aid the drive to date are: Mrs. W. J. Buckley, 7101 34th street, Berwyn; William Phillips, Cicero; Mrs. Joseph Schaefer, Forest Park; Mrs. Harold F. Hammond, Maywood; Col. Robert Wigglesworth, Melrose Park; Mrs. Charles J. Weigel, Rivert Forest.

YORK STUDENTS TO STAGE OWN PEACE PARLEY

Debaters from York Community High school, assuming the rôles of representatives from countries now concerned with the war, will attend a "Peace Conference" tomorrow night at a meeting of the York Teachers' council at the First Methodist church, Elmhurst.

As an experiment this year, each member of the debating group has been assigned to study some world political leader with regard to the kind of peace that such a leader would want for his country and the world. Each attempts to stay "in character" no matter what his own opinions may be. At the end of the conference an open forum is held.

The meeting tomorrow night will be held in honor of Earl Heinhorst and Ralph Goodwin, York teachers, who will soon be inducted into the armed forces.

Debaters and the characters they represent are Norris Sample, Winston Churchill; Charles Aschmann, Dr. Wetter of Switzerland; John McNamara, President Roosevelt; Orville Sockett, Joseph Stalin; Don Anderson, Germany; Stuart Roeder, Chiang Kai-shek, and Oliver Burrows, Japan.

Later other departments were added and in 1934 it was moved to Sedgwick and Division streets.

In 1928 the training facilities of the school were opened to youth of high school age and in 1933 it was made co-educational. Organized labor groups and employer groups have worked with the school system to establish training facilities for the workers in their various fields. was appointed to pinch hit as zone captain for the Rev. Francis A. Vaughn of Holy Family church several months ago. Later the appointment was made official, and now Johnson, who was born in Sweden, heads the OCD work in a neighborhood comprised largely of Negroes and Italians. In his own block, where he was captain until his advancement, four of the families are on relief, but each family contributes 50 cents a week toward the purchase of war stamps. Johnson is janitor of Holy Family church and a carpenter by trade. His wife assists him in his OCD work.

The Greeks and the Italians may be enemies across the sea, the Hollanders may despise their Nazi oppressors. But in community 2 the people who came from those countries in recent years have learned with Salerno's assistance how to get along together, and how coöperation makes for common good.

RIVERSIDE FIRE DEPARTMENT TO HAVE NEW CHIEF

Veteran Will Retire After 35 Year Service.

Formal turning over of the title of chief by Asa Dearborn, a veteran with 35 years of service, to the new leader, James B. Mackey, will be a feature of the annual dance of the Riverside Volunteer Fire department on Thanksgiving eve at Melody Mill ballroom, 24th street and Des Plaines avenue, North Riverside. Mr. Dearborn, who was chief of the department 24 years, recently retired because of ill health.

Since 1896, when the growth of the village demanded that some means be taken to protect property against fire hazards, the Riverside Volunteer Fire department has been significant of the manner in which groups of individuals may be counted upon to respond to a community need. Names of families answering the call of early days are still represented in the personnel.

In the beginning, when Louis Thomas, now of Lyons, was marshal, and the late Andrew Berg was assistant marshal, none of the original 32 members received any pay. Inspired by civic pride, neighborliness, and unselfishness that was mingled with the spirit of adventure and which encouraged camaraderie, they were willing to be called out at any hour. Many a Sunday suit was ruined in an emergency.

Pay for Hours on Duty.

In 1901, the village board created a department providing pay for men while on duty. The recompense varied from 50 cents to $1.50 an hour, according to the rank of the members. Stipulation also was made that a penalty of from $5 to $25 be imposed upon any one for failing to comply with a fireman's demand for the use of a team to haul equipment to and from fires.

Fred C. Crowe has practically grown up with the department. He was chasing fires even before he joined up with the group in 1896. He has served as assistant under several chiefs. His father, Fred K. Crowe, and brother, William Crowe, also were original members. Among others were C. C. Neuschaefer, now chief of police in Riverside; Charles A. Hallam Sr., Dave Chicken, Chris Berger, Al Hinton, Mike Donahue, W. J. Opper Sr., William Taylor Sr., Fred W. Sellers Sr., and Dennis Creedon.

The two best remembered fires fought by the department occurred in 1913. That year, the original water tower, landmark of the village, was destroyed, and several lives were lost in the fire at the Scottish home. The picturesque town hall also has been scorched at various times.

Equipment Is Modern.

Modern equipment has gradually replaced that of the early days. The department possesses a life net that thus far has been used only for training purposes.

Members of the department at present are James B. Mackey, chief; Roger Coverly, assistant chief; E. E. Elm, assistan chief in charge of training; Arthur J. Crowe, captain of company 3; George J. Wainer, lieutenant of company 3; Emil C. Fail, captain of company 1; Anton Fridrych, captain, and Frank L. Schips, lieutenant of company 2; Paul W. Chandler, William Taylor, Frank Postill, Fred G. Grove, F. F. Crowe, James P. Sellers, Arthur Benwitz, Eugene T. Torrison, Charles L. Hallam Jr., William J. Opper Jr., Arthur Williams, Charles J. Schuenemann Jr., Steve D. Barcik, John F. Ryan, Frank Marousek, and Fred C. Crowe.

Capt. Emil C. Fail, general chairman of the dance this year, says the entire facilities of Melody Mill has been engaged for what is expected to be the largest crowd that has ever attended any of the department's social events.

Retiring Fire Chief Greets Successor

Asa Dearborn, left, retiring chief of the Riverside volunteer fire department, hails the new chief, James B. Mackey. The department is making plans for its annual Thanksgiving eve dance.

Home Service Helps Many Solve Problems.

"Send her one dozen roses," was the message the Red Cross received together with money from an anxious soldier at an embarkation point many miles from his wife in Chicago. The money was more than enough for one dozen and upon investigation by the Red Cross home service division two dozen were sent instead.

The anxious soldier had just become father of twins.

Not all messages received by the home service division at 616 South Michigan avenue are as poignant as that one, however. Staffed with a large group of highly trained social workers and approximately 40 volunteers, many of whom are from the north side, the division headquarters is open 24 hours a day receiving and sending messages, answering requests and making investigations. The workers and their volunteers are organized to render many services to the armed men; services not supplied by the army and navy but necessary for the maintenance of morale.

Hold Train 4 Minutes.

Once the Red Cross held a train four minutes so that a soldier might get back to camp before his furlough expired. Assisting stranded wives who have gone to visit their husbands in camp and have found themselves short of funds to get home is a common chore.

Often soldiers arrive in Chicago after the war department finance office is closed for the day and come to the South Michigan office to get personal checks cashed.

Looking after the servicemen's families, advancing money for emergencies and obtaining lawyers for legal matters are all in the scope of home service activities.

Money Blew Away.

One soldier came in and asked for a loan to purchase a return ticket back to camp. He said his had fallen from his pants pocket and blown out the hotel window.

Another soldier wanted to send $100 home in a hurry. The Red Cross field director wired the Chicago home service office which advanced the money to the family immediately. Several days later the check arrived from the soldier and the Red Cross was reimbursed.

Broken Romances.

Even broken romances are sometimes ministered to. One Chicago girl went to visit her soldier friend in camp only to find him married to another girl. The Red Cross field director put the visitor on a train home and wired the Chicago office to meet her at the station. The train arrived but she wasn't on it. Several days were spent in tracing her to a friend's home and in getting her home safely again.

Camps are equipped with field directors whose jobs are to listen to the service men's personal problems. They then relay messages and requests on to the "home front" which in Chicago is the 24 hour home service division.

Busy 24 Hours a Day.

Twenty four hours a day, volunteers are busy at the office, doing clerical work, checking reports, taking messages and running errands for the large staff of specialized workers. In peace times many of these same women would be planning bridge parties, teas, and other social events.

The home service division uses an average of 10 cars each day from the motor corps to investigate home conditions and reported illnesses in the homes of service men.

Cicero Girl Engaged

Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph J. Anderson, 5128 31st street, Cicero, have announced the engagement of their daughter, Dolores, to Frank H. Keith, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Keith, 2411 South Drake avenue.

Chicago's Retail Advertising Picture

10 YEARS AGO and TODAY

Charted here is a picture of interest to every merchant and manufacturer determined to get full value from his advertising funds in the Chicago market.

Relation of volumes of Retail Advertising carried by Other Chicago Newspapers
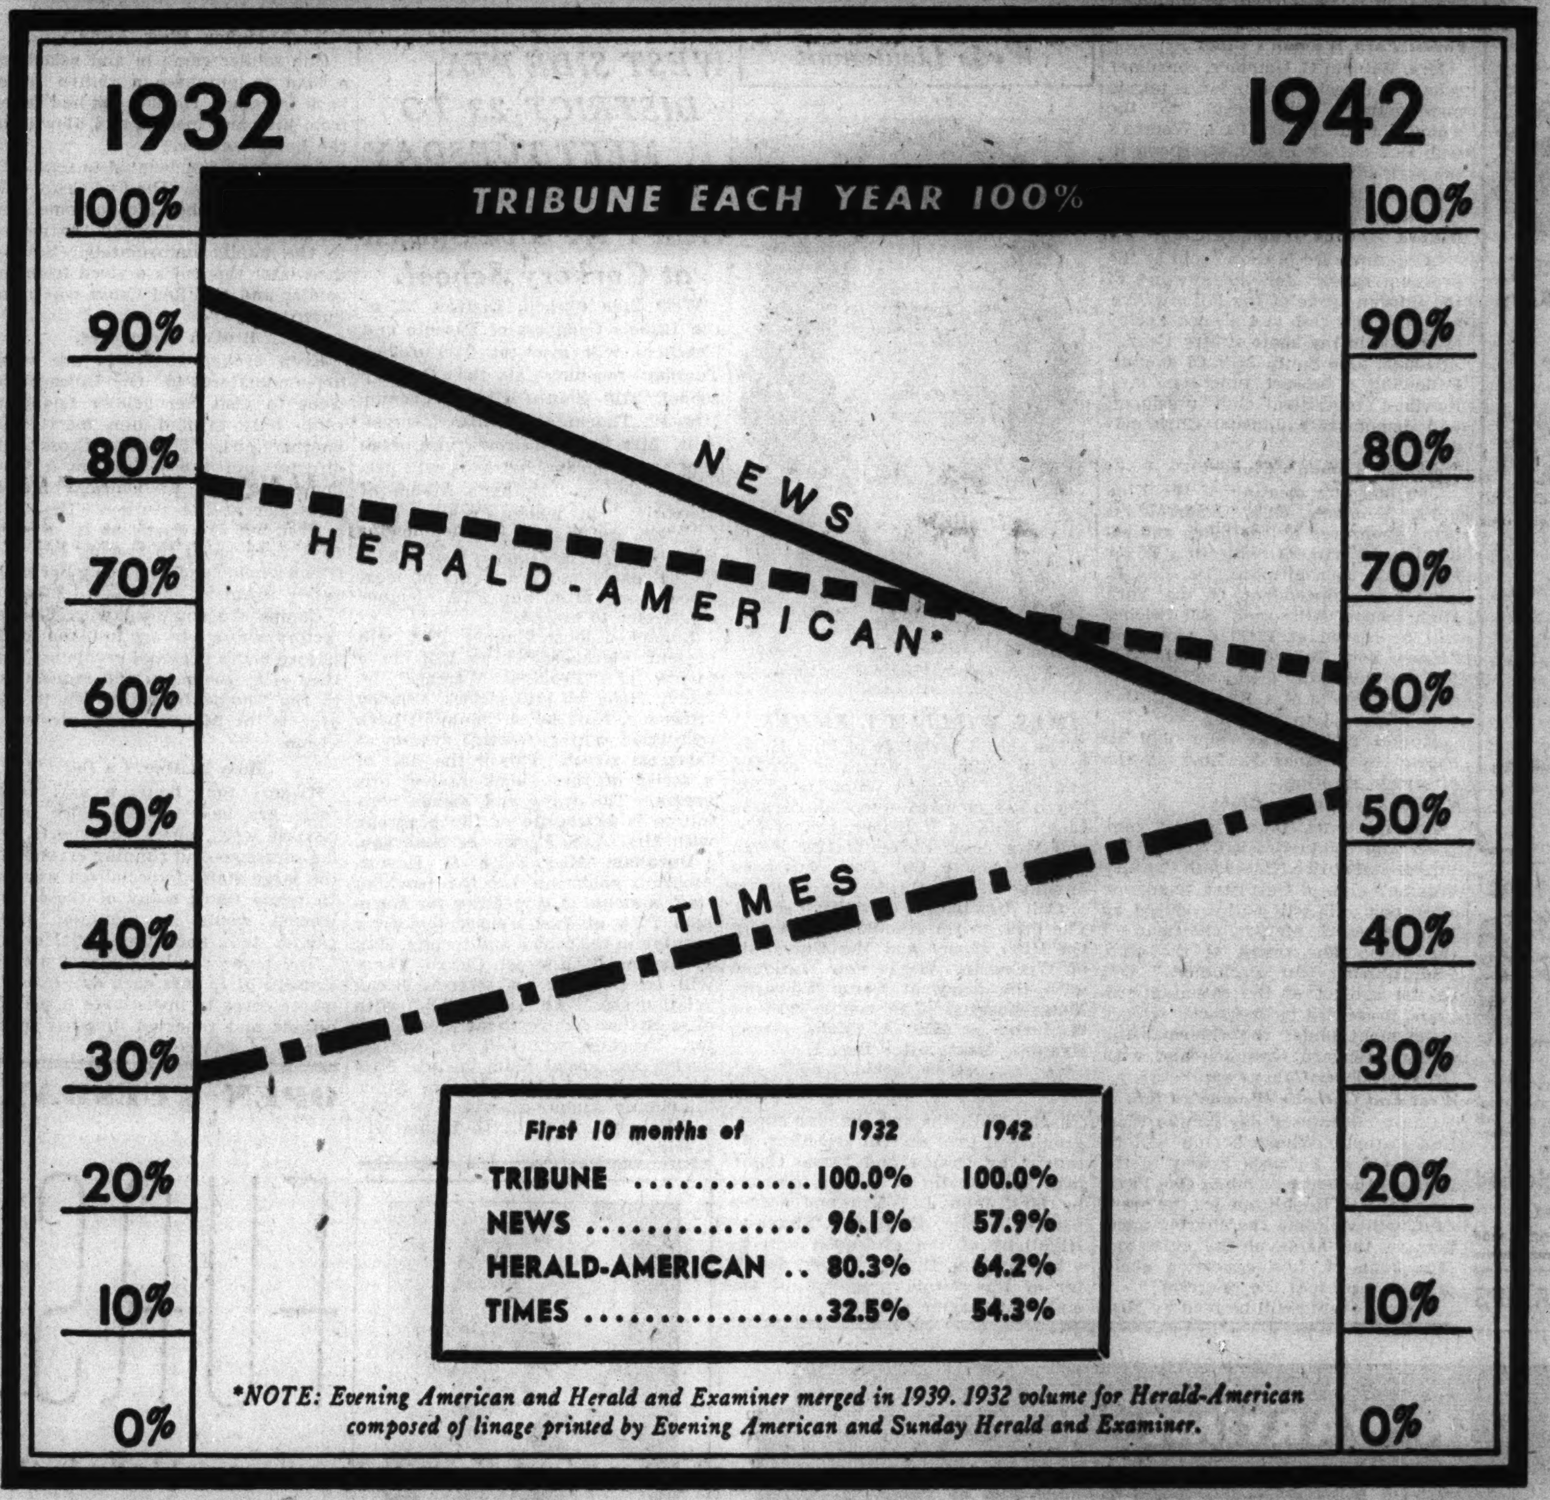
TO THE VOLUME CARRIED BY THE TRIBUNE
FIRST 10 MONTHS 1932—1942



THE CHART compares the relation of the volumes of retail advertising linage carried by other Chicago newspapers to the volume carried by the Tribune during the first ten months of 1932 and during the similar period of 1942.

In the 1932 period, for every 1,000 lines of retail advertising printed by the Tribune—

the News printed 96.1% as much, or . . . 961 lines
the Herald-American printed 80.3% as much, or . . . . 803 lines
the Times printed 32.5% as much, or . . . 325 lines

Contrast this with the record for the first ten months of 1942. For every 1,000 lines of retail advertising printed by the Tribune—

the Herald-American printed 64.2% as much, or . . . . 642 lines
the News printed 57.9% as much, or . . . 579 lines
the Times printed 54.3% as much, or . . . 543 lines

The Herald-American lost 547,278 lines, or 10.1%.

The growing leadership of the Tribune as Chicago's most productive medium for retailers is further accented by the fact that during the first ten months of the year they placed in the Tribune more of their advertising budgets than they placed in any two other Chicago newspapers combined.

This record makes plain that a newspaper produces for advertisers in proportion to the number and kind of readers it attracts and the interest and confidence with which they read it.

Tribune Circulation Up 25%

Tribune week-day circulation* during the past 10 years increased from 825,980 to 1,030,848—a gain of 204,868, or 24.8%. The Tribune's lead over the Herald-American, which was second in week-day circulation both in 1932 and in 1942, increased from 324,081, or 64.6%, to 555,691, or 116.9%.

Sunday Tribune circulation shows a similar upsurge. Sunday Tribune net paid* increased from 1,019,519 to 1,242,978—a gain of 223,459, or 21.9%.

In 1932, the Herald and Examiner led the Tribune in Sunday circulation by 9,813 copies, or 1.0%. In 1942, the Sunday Tribune led the Sunday Herald-American, which was second in Sunday circulation, by 322,209, or 35.0%.

When you can have more, why take less? With hundreds of thousands more circulation, daily and Sunday, than other Chicago newspapers, the Tribune is the one medium which delivers the breadth and penetration of coverage you need in order to get your full share of Chicago's stepped-up buying.

To make the most of your opportunities, build your program around the Tribune.

REMODEL DUPLEX INTO SMALL WAR WORKERS' UNITS

Compact Quarters Draw Tenants' Attention.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

Not long ago a very interesting—and patriotic—piece of work was completed in a two story greystone apartment duplex at 3253 Flournoy street.

Mrs. Katherine Kleppel and her daughter, Katharine, decided to remodel the upstairs seven room apartment of their building into two smaller apartments for war workers. They knew their residence was in a neighborhood serving many defense plants and factories and a plumbing contractor told them they would be eligible for priority assistance.

So they filled out the necessary forms and the work began. Before it was completed the new apartment had been rented to a war worker and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Scalzitti. The original renters of the apartment continued to occupy the balance of the former apartment.

Built-in Fixtures Please.

The Scalzittis are pleased with their new apartment and they like the compactness of their three rooms and bath, the efficient sink with its wooden cabinets, built to order, and the good looking bathroom with modern fixtures, including built-in tub with overhead shower.

The plumbing contractor handled the entire work of creating two small apartments out of the one large flat, and he and Miss Kleppel planned the arrangements. He also took the responsibility of getting the carpenters, plasterers, electricians, and decorators.

The seven room apartment had consisted of a front parlor and bedroom alcove, a living room, a large dining room, kitchen, two bedrooms and a bathroom.

Remove Fretted Archway.

The new apartment was created at the front and the alcove bedroom off the parlor was closed up to make a complete bedroom with a door opening into the new apartment living room. A fretted archway between parlor and living room was removed and the opening arched to separate the living room and the kitchen dinette.

To provide for a bathroom the plumbing contractor suggested building a new room to open off the kitchen, which would take part of the space of the old living room. The new room for the bath was 5½x7 feet and the remaining space provided an L-shaped room for the kitchen-dinette.

Red Accents in Kitchen.

All the fixtures in the bathroom and kitchen are white. Accents of red against the white cabinets, sink, range, and refrigerator highlight the equipment and black linoleum cabinet tops. The floor linoleum is black and grey with red. Pink and blue accessories make the bathroom attractive.

The woodwork of the new living room and bedroom was painted entirely white and the floors refinished. A new bathroom radiator, one of the modern midget wall-hung models, was installed, and the positions of radiators in the present kitchen-dinette were changed; a change for the better since the radiator in the kitchen is now under a window.

Original Tenants Satisfied.

The couple who occupied the original apartment did not need so much room and are quite satisfied with the remaining apartment which now consists of four rooms.

The former large dining room has had its buffet removed and now it is the living room. The bedrooms are the same and the kitchen and the bathroom continue to have the same fixtures. Redecoration in the kitchen, however, has made it useful and attractive as a kitchen-dinette.

This WEEK in the GARDEN

Monday, Nov. 23

Remove garden furniture and equipment to the basement or shed. Drain all hose and hang it on a broad wooden hook in a cool place or roll it on one of the specially made outfits where it is not likely to be in the way of other equipment.

Never permit garden tools to enter winter quarters without being thoroly cleaned. Clean and oil the mowing machine and sharpen the cutting edge so it will be ready for use next spring.

Unless the ground is frozen, walks can be remade and the planting of shrubs and trees continued. Planting can continue as long as the plants can be obtained. Never plant in poor soil, but remove it and replace with good, rich soil.

Tuesday, Nov. 24

There is no economy in using the tops of perennials for mulching, for they may contain insects and disease. Clear up the entire garden, destroying the tops.

Hardwood leaves are excellent for mulching, but do not spread deeply over plants or they may smother and die. Rather draw the leaves up to and around the plants. All leaves not used for mulching should be combined with soil and a compost heap started.

Manures are frequently difficult to obtain, but artificial manures are becoming more frequent.

Wednesday, Nov. 25

If the ground is not frozen it is excellent practice to spade it and permit it to lie in the rough all winter. Sod ground is best fitted in this way, for when spring comes it will have decayed and be ready for planting.

Do not dig so deep that the subsoil is turned on top, but increase the depth by spading a little deeper each spading.

If manure is available spread it over the surface before spading. Most soils require the addition of humus [manures and other vegetable material] to give the best growing conditions.

Thursday, Nov. 26

Prune vines by cutting out the diseased wood. Doing this work after the vines start in spring disturbs them and is likely to injure the young wood.

Cut back the Hydrangea paniculata grandiflora [the Peegee Hydrangea], leaving two to four buds on the the shoots. Spiraea Anthony Waterer can be cut to the ground or within six inches. Tamarisk can be cut back severely to keep it low and in bush form. If allowed to grow rampant it becomes ungainly and ill shaped.

Friday, Nov. 27

The growing of plants in homes is sufficient to keep the gardener busy thruout the winter and the vast variety that is available gives every indoor gardener an opportunity to have a fine collection.

One of the finest groups are the begonias, with their remarkably beautiful foliage and exquisite flowers. These plants should be watered sparingly. The best way to water them is to place the pot in a container of water. Daily sprinkling with a fine spray tends to remove dust and preserve a halo of moisture around it.

Saturday, Nov. 28

Flowering pot plants should never be allowed to suffer from a lack of water. They will last longer if placed in a cool room at night. Most flowering plants require sun, while foliage plants do well in shade or partial shade.

Excellent effects can be obtained by using ornamental jardinieres, but water should not be allowed to stand in them or the plants will suffer because of saturated soil.

A fine palm is one of the most attractive plants for the home.

WASP DISASTER SPLITS TWINS—BUT NOT FOR LONG

West Side Pair, on Leave, Tell Tale of Attack.

Edward and Charles Lutze, 19 year old twins, of 520 North Wayne avenue, who enlisted in the marines here last March, came back a few days ago to tell what their service career has included since last spring. Edward is a graduate of Lake View High school, and Charles of St. Michael's High school.

They were aboard the United States aircraft carrier Wasp when it was torpedoed by a Jap sub last Sept. 15. With all that followed the moment three torpedoes plowed into the side of the carrier, they were somehow able to get together—tho they were not reunited until two days after the carrier went down.

Both Machine Gunners.

On a three week furlough, which they are spending with their mother, Mrs. Ann Lutze, the youths have separate stories to tell. Both, however, were in the marine detachment aboard the vessel, and both were assigned to machine gun posts.

Charles, the shorter of the two, was reading in his chain suspended bunk when the first torpedo hit. The chain broke and he was dropped to the floor. Running on deck, he heard the command to abandon ship just before another torpedo roared thru the hull of the carrier.

Charles went down one side of the vessel on a rope, Edward down the other. They were not afraid, they say, because a circle of American destroyers ringed the carrier. Edward got into a life raft, which kept filling with water. After three hours, he was picked up with others by a destroyer.

Tossed by Blasts.

At about the same time, Charles was swimming in the high waves. The water bubbled all about him as depth charges from allied forces sought to destroy the sub. In a short time Charles was picked up by another destroyer.

Two days later the brothers met on a cruiser to which they were transferred. They had suffered only from shock. Given a furlough, they headed at once for home.

"We were pledged to secrecy about the Wasp," Edward said. "But now we can talk, and boy, that really is something to talk about."

CITY TO INSTALL NEW LIGHTS FOR TRAFFIC SAFETY

New and improved street lights for the Ashland avenue and Lake street intersection, one of the most dangerous in the city, are expected to be installed by early in December. Four other bad crossings on Ashland and Western avenues, will get the same type of lights.

The Ashland-Lake location was chosen for new lights on the basis of its 1941 record of 11 night and three day accidents, according to a survey by Floyd Johnson of the city commission of streets and electricity in coöperation with the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

The intersection will have five instead of three fixtures, designed to give two "foot candles" of illumination over traffic lanes, compared with .002 foot candles as at present. The new lights are designed to silhouette persons and objects against a background of light on the pavement, according to Leslie Sorenson, city traffic

DOWNERS GROVE FIREMEN TO AID YANK YULE FUND

Community Sending Gifts to Service Men.

More funds for the Downers Grove Yanks' Yule gifts project will be raised Thanksgiving eve when the Downers Grove fire department holds its annual ball in the Masonic temple. Hitherto, profits from the ball have gone to the firemen's fund, but this year they will supplement funds already raised for the purchase of leather writing kits, planned for each man from the village in the nation's armed forces.

The Merry Christmas idea for service men has been enthusiastically received in the suburb. The sum of $925.79 was raised at a tag day held Oct. 17. Proceeds of a football game between the Downers Grove Mustangs and the Elmhurst Travelers netted another $500.

Lions Club Starts It.

The program started by the Downers Grove Lions club has been given backing by the entire community. Last Christmas, gifts were sent to the local men by the American Legion and its auxiliary, with the two groups bearing all the cost. Authorization for the tag day was given by the village council. Mrs. Helen Griffiths was tag day chairman. Charles Barkell was elected treasurer of the gift committee with authorization to dispense the funds.

One of the problems faced by the committee headed by Henry J. Larsen was the gathering of names and correct addresses of all the boys in the service. For this purpose the mailing list of the Downers Grove Reporter was used as being the most accurate. The Reporter office has been used as headquarters for addressing the packages. Each week some 20 changes of address are required, and the work is handled by Miss Valeria Matuzas.

The Victory center, 1013 Curtiss street, aided in providing the name list, and before Nov. 1, more than 150 packages had been sent to the men overseas. Arrangements have been made to have gifts for all the 525 men and women from the village now in uniform in the mail by Dec. 1.

Greetings with Each.

Wrapping of the packages is being carried out by the Downers Grove Service Mothers' club of which Mrs. John B. Fitzgerald is president. With each package goes a greeting "From All the Folks at Home" which reads:

"You may be in a training station in the United States; you may be in England, in Australia, or in the icy regions of the Aleutians, or fighting our battles in some other remote part of the world, but you may rest assured that Downers Grove is thinking of you; hoping that you are well and happy and that you will enjoy the Christmas customs of the land where you are now stationed. May God bless and keep you until you return to your families and friends back here in Illinois."

Those from Downers Grove in the army nurse corps, the WAACs, the WAVES, or any other branch of the regular service are included.

May Extend Plan.

Each writing kit contains pockets for stamps, envelopes, pencil, and address book, and a space for holding a photograph.

Because funds from the tag day and the benefit football game were generous, the proposal has been made that a gift, exactly like those being mailed to the boys now in service, be given each boy as he leaves for the army or navy. Also, it has been proposed that the group in charge of the yule gift project be made a permanent one for the duration.

GARDEN CLUB IN MAYWOOD PLANS CHRISTMAS SHOW

"How to Decorate the Home for the Holidays" will be the theme of the fifth annual Christmas show to be held Dec. 12 by the Maywood Garden club at the Maywood Legion hall. Mrs. F. N. Flynn is president of the club. Mrs. J. H. Chapman is chairman of the show to which the public is invited.

The schedule calls for the table settings, window decorations, arrangements, wreaths, swags, and garlands.

Maj. Alexander De Seversky, Juan T. Trippe, and Prof. Lawrence Wyly will discuss the relation of aviation to total war, the problems in production of airplanes, and the possible uses to which airplanes can be put in the war effort.

Dr. James H. McBurney will be the moderator.

Crooked football pools, short odds, and thrown games will be the subject of the "Easy Money" program to be aired from 6:30 to 7 tonight on W-G-N when Mike Trent, magician turned detective, upsets the plans of a racketeer who operates a weekly football pool.

MUTUAL TO AIR NEWS COMMENTS BY UPTON CLOSE

W-G-N Carries First Talk at 4:15 Today.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

Upton Close, who has been called the Marco Polo of news commentators, will begin a new series of broadcasts over W-G-N and 55 other stations of the Mutual Broadcasting system from 4:15 to 4:30 p. m. today. The first of Close's comments on the news over Mutual will come from New York. Subsequent broadcasts will come from Chicago, New York, and San Francisco, in that order.

Close has a colorful background. He has had more than a quarter center of experience in the far east and other Pacific regions. He was born Josef Washington Hall in Kelso, Washington, and spent much of his childhood on an Indian reservation along the Columbia river.

An Investigator for United States.

After graduating from George Washington university he went to China as an investigating officer for the United States in Shantung during the Japanese invasion from 1916 to 1919.

As advisor to the Chinese student revolutionaries in Peking in 1919 and as chief of foreign affairs for the Peking Leader, reputed to be the oldest newspaper in the world, Close had an opportunity to travel extensively in all parts of China, Japan, Manchuria, and the South Pacific.

Close has contributed thousands of articles to magazines and newspapers on three continents. It was in connection with his work as a newspaperman that he acquired the name Upton Close. He signed his cabled dispatches UPCLOSE, which is simply "Close Up" when the syllables are reversed. Upton Close is an elaboration of Upclose.

Author of Book on Japan.

Between his travels, lectures, and journalistic endeavors Close has found time to write eleven books on adventure, history, romance, and biography.

His latest volume, recently published, "Behind the Face of Japan," is one of the important books dealing with the present war.

Close has been broadcasting off and on since 1924. This is his first series for Mutual. He appears on NBC's News of the World roundups at 6:15 p. m. Monday and Wednesday and is heard over WMAQ-NBC at 4:45 p. m. Saturdays and at 2:15 p. m. Sundays.

'BOHEMIAN GIRL' NEXT ON W-G-N THEATER OF AIR

Balfe's "Bohemian Girl," starring Marion Claire and Attilio Baggiore, will be presented on the Chicago Theater of the Air from 8 to 9 p. m. next Saturday on W-G-N and the Mutual network.

Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, will speak. Miss Claire will take the rôle of Arline, daughter of an Austrian nobleman. Baggiore will portray the singing rôle of Thaddeus, an exiled Polish rebel. Supporting the principals will be Bruce Foote and Earl Wilkie. Foote will sing the rôle of Arline's father, the Count of Arnheim, while Wilkie will portray the gypsy leader, Devilshoof.

Known for its melody rather than its plot, "Bohemian Girl" is the most popular of Balfe's many works. The libretto for the operetta was written by the nineteenth century poet, Bunn.

Musical background will be supplied by the W-G-N symphony orchestra directed by Henry Weber and by the chorus led by Robert Trendler. Kenneth MacGregor, W-G-N chief of production, will produce the program.

A full cast of actors will present the dramatic rôles of the operetta. Marvin Mueller will be the announcer.

War Worker Father Will Tell of 2 Fighting Sons

Paul Paskvan, father of George Paskvan, former football player and now stationed at the navy's preflight training school at Iow City will be interviewed on the "Victory Is Our Business" program to be broadcast on W-G-N from 12:30 to 12:45 p. m. today. Paskvan, who is employed in General Motors' electro-motive plant at La Grange, has another son who is captain in the army air force. In the interview Mr. Paskvan will tell how he is aiding the war effort. Lowell Thomas is the narrator on the program.

Vincent Youmans Medley on Jack Pearl Carnival

A Morton Gould arrangement of a Vincent Youmans medley will highlight the musical portion of Jack Pearl's Carnival, to be broadcast from 8:30 to 9:15 p. m. Wednesday on W-G-N. The medley will include "Hallelujah" and "Tea for Two." Other numbers to be presented by Gould and the orchestra are Swift's "Fine and Dandy" and Cole Porter's "Begin the Beguine."

Quiz Kids to Present Show from Des Moines

Today's Quiz Kids program [6:30 p. m. WENR-Blue] will originate from the Shrine auditorium in Des Moines, Ia., before an expected crowd of 4,500. Making the trip will be, Joe Kelly, master of ceremonies; Margaret Merrick, 14; Richard Williams, 12; Ruth Duskin, 9; Harve Fischman, 12, and Gerard Darrow, 10.

'Crisis Administration' Is Topic of Round Table

The topic of discussion for the University of Chicago Round Table at 1:30 p. m. today on WMAQ-NBC will be "Crisis Administration." This is the second program of a series of three on "Democratic Government in Crisis." Speakers will be Don K. Price, Neil H. Jacoby, and I. F. Stone.

Commentator

Upton Close, authority on western Pacific affairs, will begin a new commentary series on W-G-N and 55 other Mutual stations at 4:15 p. m. today.

ANOTHER STORY OF SLAVE PRESS ON W-G-N TODAY

Drama Shows Belgium as Bankers' Pawn.

The story of Belgium and how that nation was used as a pawn by international financiers working under the protection of a Nazi dominated press prior to her entry in the war, will be related by Stanley Johnston, Chicago Tribune war correspondent, on the "Mightier Than the Sword" program on W-G-N from 2:30 to 3 p. m. today.

Johnston will tell how financiers in France sent iron ore to Germany for its steel stock piles, and how Germany, in return, sent fuel to France to run France's blast furnaces. Belgium, sandwiched between the two countries, was used as the traffic lane and goods were sent tax exempt.

Johnston will relate how the lid was knocked off this story by the slaying of a Belgian border guard who attempted to stop the Nazi truck transports. He will also tell how he tried to break the story to the Belgian press, only to be rebuffed by a Nazi agent posing as a newspaper editor.

The editor and his secretary tried to capture and slay Johnston thru a ruse, but the scheme back fired when Johnston escaped into Holland, from where he sent his story to the newspapers of America.

"Mightier Than the Sword" is written and produced by Jack LaFrandre and features an all-star radio cast. Music on the program is by Robert Trendler and the W-G-N Symphony orchestra.

SPELLING BEE TO BE INTRODUCED ON W-G-N TODAY

An old-fashioned spell-down will be introduced on W-G-N when "Spelling Bee," a new weekly series is presented for the first time from 12:05 to 12:30 p. m. today. Harold Isbell will be teacher and master of ceremonies on this weekly program.

Eight contestants will participate in each program and all will receive cash prizes. The contestants will be divided into two teams and the winning team will receive a special prize as will the winning individual. The first person to go down on the program will be awarded a booby prize.

On the initial program the two contesting teams will represent two very different walks of life. One team will be composed of dancing girls appearing in the "Priorities of 1942." The other team will consist of four members of the Tired Business Men's association. The program will be open to the public and a gala time will be offered.

Special Show Launches 'Women at War Week'

America's "Women at War Week" will be launched today with a special show at 6 p. m. over WBBM-CBS. Actor Fredric March acts as master of ceremonies. Mrs. Henry Morgenthau Jr. will speak briefly. Others to appear are Florence Eldridge, Gracie Fields, and Dorothy Maynor. Orchestra and chorus will be under the direction of David Broekman.

N. Y. Philharmonic Plays Shostakovich's Fifth

Artur Rodzinski returns to conduct the New York Philharmonic Symphony at 2 o'clock this afternoon over WBBM-CBS. A program consisting of Shostakovich's Fifth Symphony, opus 47, and Beethoven's Second Symphony in D major, opus 36, will be presented. Deems Taylor is intermission annotator.

Benchley Guest Tonight.

Robert Benchley, actor-author, will appear in "Symptoms of Being 35" on Radio's Reader's Digest to be presented at 8 p. m. today over WBBM-CBS.

'Bomber Command' Story on Britain to America

Britain to America, weekly program shortwaved from England, will present "Bomber Command" at 5:05 p. m. today on WCFL-Blue. The story, written by Allen Michie, takes the listener on an imaginary flight, and several officers who participated in the Cologne raid will be interviewed.

GULLIVER TALE COMES TRUE IN SKOKIE SCHOOL

Small World Is Like Lilliput.

Gulliver, in one of his travels, visited the fantastic land of the Lilliputians—a race of tiny men living in a world built on a miniature scale.

Little did Jonathan Swift realize that his fable foretold a similar world that actually exists in one of Chicago's suburbs. Thru the years a small community of 450 little people within the boundaries of the village of Winnetka has set up its own system of taxation, its own insurance company, bank and credit company, several manufacturing and production companies, and is governed by its own system of laws built within the framework of national and state laws.

Still Expect to Grow.

Most of the people in this community are less than four and a half feet in height—they are only 11 to 13 years of age. The citizens of this community are the students of Skokie Junior High school.

As is true of most schools, Skokie long has had a representative student council as its legislative body. Occasionally this body has incurred expenses in providing for the common good. After many suggestions for raising the money had been rejected, some brave soul suggested a general tax. At the word the council gave a collective shiver. They had heard their parents say things about taxes.

After great discussion, however, a special committee was appointed to investigate, and later a system of taxation was adopted. Every member of the school, from the principal down, was assessed a per capita tax of 5 cents a year, and bicycle riders were nipped for an additional 5 cent license tax. The money is spent for various local improvements and for a guard in the bicycle shed. A sales tax and a corporate income tax are now being considered.

Then Came the Crash.

At various times the council listened to sad and harrowing tales of dishes dropped in the school cafeteria and the dire financial consequences. After one particularly trying story of the havoc played with the allowance of one small girl who chanced to drop a whole tray of dishes, a council member shouted out his conviction: "There ought to be insurance!"

After months of investigation into the complexities of the insurance business, a company was incorporated and ready to issue policies providing 80 per cent coverage for breakage of dishes and other school property. The coverage is now 100 per cent and the premium payments vary between 4 and 8 cents a year, depending upon the tray carrying ability of the students of the year before.

A group of embryonic scientists cast contemplative eyes on the student owned school store. Shortly thereafter corporation papers were obtained from the student council for the Research and Production company. The store now sells ink, paste, and a few other items produced by the company. Winnetka women also may purchase facial cream manufactured by the young entrepreneurs. Research has developed an ink that changes color, and the problem of lumpy paste is being investigated.

Handsome Dividends.

Two other corporations have rewarded their stockholders with handsome dividends for several years. The Livestock company breeds and raises rabbits, mice, and chickens for sale as pets. It also manufactures cages and sells feed. The 80 stockholders, who buy their way into the company at 25 cents a share, are ready at any time to dispense free information on the care and feeding of the purchases.

The present stock of the company consists of 10 guinea pigs, seven rabbits, and two mice, according to Barbara Dowd, 1301 Asbury avenue, 13 year old chairman of the board of directors. An increase in the number of mice is expected shortly.

The Biology Bureau of Bees offers honey and live bees for sale to the interested, plus considerable free information to any one willing to listen. For those who chance to have a swarm of bees but no hives in which to put them, the members of the B. B. B. will construct a complete apiary.

The Credit Union is another lusty young business firmly entrenched in the Skokie economic world. Student members financially embarrassed for the moment may borrow 50 cents without a co-signer and up to 75 cents if the loan is guaranteed by a fellow member.

$500 Loaned in Year.

The loans, tho small, have totaled as much as $500 in a year, and there has yet to be a default in payment. The loans nominally are due within two days and carry no interest charges. After that time the charge is two cents per day. This year the union has already made about 300 loans, according to Robert Jones, 13, 264 Tower road, treasurer, and expects to double that number before the new officers are elected in January.

All these corporations are chartered under the laws of the school council,

Naval Radio Seamen Find Evanston Center a Homelike Place

Miss Paula Juric, 3853 North Leavitt street, gives a beckoning smile to Bob Semray, second class seaman of Detroit, Mich., and his escort, Miss Ruth Smithson, at the Evanston Service Men's center, 514 Davis street. Altho the center is open every day, large groups of apprentice seamen from the naval radio school at Northwestern flock there Wednesday nights and week-ends for the home cooked food Evanston housewives and mothers provide. Mrs. Harry R. Hargis of Evanston, director of the center, greets each boy as he enters and sees that he has a good time. She started the center last June and is assisted each week by a volunteer group of women. The sailors are Robert Stewart of Oakland, Cal., left, and Robert Smith of Burghill, O. Mrs. Alphonse Roche of Evanston comes to the center each Wednesday night and makes sketches for the boys to send home to their sweethearts. Her model is James H. Dixon of Long Beach, Cal.

The old-fashioned round table in the far corner of the center's front room is one of the chief attractions. Each Wednesday night and all day on Saturdays it is ladened with home cooked delicacies which "just hit the spot," the service men say. Women's groups solicit the food. When asked what he liked best about the center, Nick Helbling of Racine, Wis., right, answered promptly, "the food." His companion, too busy to look at the photographer, is Jim Purdy of Brookville, Ind. Mrs. W. P. Gossett of Evanston, left, headed the Methodist church women's group which recently served one of the popular Wednesday buffet suppers. Mrs. J. C. Ott, 910 Lawrence avenue, was one of her assistants. The gas stove and refrigerator in the back room were donated by civilians. (Story on page 8.)

SOLDIER IN ENGLAND DECLARES TRIBUNE IS BEST GIFT POSSIBLE

Soldier Bill Dolan writes from England that his recent gift of a subscription to the THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE is the best present he possibly could have received.

William Dolan.

The papers are read from start to finish and then reread. "And we don't even mind their being a month old," he continues. "They keep us in touch with all that's going on."

Dolan, a private first class is the son of Mr. and Mrs. V. J. Dolan, 2042 Morse avenue. He was inducted into the army last Jan. 7 at Camp Grant. After training in camps in Wyoming, Texas, and South Carolina, he embarked for England three months ago. Two of his three months in England were spent in an army hospital, but young Dolan is again on his feet and realizing a lifetime ambition—working with trains and transportation problems.

HELPERS SOUGHT FOR NORTH SHORE RED CROSS QUOTA

The quota of four million surgical dressings a month for the Chicago area represents a challenge to Red Cross production volunteers, according to Mrs. E. L. Ryerson, chairman of the volunteer corps in Chicago.

"The north shore will have to carry much of the burden of this new quota," Mrs. Ryerson stated. "And we shall need many more volunteers if it is to be reached."

Information about the formation of new production units or the location of operating units on the north shore may be obtained from the Red Cross North Shore depot, Patricia Morrison.

MRS. JENKINS IS NEW LIEUTENANT IN CANTEEN WORK

Mrs. Paul Jenkins of Mundelein has been appointed a lieutenant in the Red Cross Canteen corps for the Libertyville and Mundelein area, Mrs. Henriques Crawford, chairman of the Chicago canteen, has announced.

Immediately after her appointment Mrs. Jenkins called for volunteers to register for the canteen corps. Women with eyperience in large scale feeding, such as church suppers, will be especially welcomed, she stated.

A tentative start in canteen work has been made in Libertyville by serving informal luncheons to production workers in the Red Cross workroom in the public service building. If this service proves that it fulfills its real purpose and increases production, it will be continued on a permanent basis, Mrs. Jenkins said.

IN TOUGH SPOT, SOLDIER? THEN TRY RED CROSS

Home Service Helps Many Solve Problems.

"Send her one dozen roses," was the message the Red Cross received together with money from an anxious soldier at an embarkation point many miles from his wife in Chicago. The money was more than enough for one dozen and upon investigation by the Red Cross home service division two dozen were sent instead.

The anxious soldier had just become father of twins.

Not all messages received by the home service division at 616 South Michigan avenue are as poignant as that one, however. Staffed with a large group of highly trained social workers and approximately 40 volunteers, many of whom are from the north side, the division headquarters is open 24 hours a day receiving and sending messages, answering requests and making investigations. The workers and their volunteers are organized to render many services to the armed men; services not supplied by the army and navy but necessary for the maintenance of morale.

Hold Train 4 Minutes.

Once the Red Cross held a train four minutes so that a soldier might get back to camp before his furlough expired. Assisting stranded wives who have gone to visit their husbands in camp and have found themselves short of funds to get home is a common chore.

Often soldiers arrive in Chicago after the war department finance office is closed for the day and come to the South Michigan office to get personal checks cashed.

Looking after the servicemen's families, advancing money for emergencies and obtaining lawyers for legal matters are all in the scope of home service activities.

Money Blew Away.

One soldier came in and asked for a loan to purchase a return ticket back to camp. He said his had fallen from his pants pocket and blown out the hotel window.

Another soldier wanted to send $100 home in a hurry. The Red Cross field director wired the Chicago home service office which advanced the money to the family immediately. Several days later the check arrived from the soldier and the Red Cross was reimbursed.

Broken Romances.

Even broken romances are sometimes ministered to. One Chicago girl went to visit her soldier friend in camp only to find him married to another girl. The Red Cross field director put the visitor on a train home and wired the Chicago office to meet her at the station. The train arrived but she wasn't on it. Several days were spent in tracing her to a friend's home and in getting her home safely again.

Camps are equipped with field directors whose jobs are to listen to the service men's personal problems. They then relay messages and requests on to the "home front" which in Chicago is the 24 hour home service division.

Busy 24 Hours a Day.

Twenty four hours a day, volunteers are busy at the office, doing clerical work, checking reports, taking messages and running errands for the large staff of specialized workers. In peace times many of these same women would be planning bridge parties, teas, and other social events.

The home service division uses an average of 10 cars each day from the motor corps to investigate home conditions and reported illnesses in the homes of service men.

which has written and printed its own book of laws built within the framework of the state and federal statutes. The president and vice president of the council are elected by the total membership of the school, and the other members are representatives of their home rooms.

These various projects are carried on by the children under the protective wing of teacher-sponsors. However, a minimum of control is given or required.

The one or two hours of classroom work lost weekly thru business meetings is amply made up in the information and interest the children gain in the ways of the world, in the opinion of S. R. Logan, principal of the school.

"We think it is good to have cooperative enterprise, profit enterprise, and public enterprise operating side by side in the free and friendly atmosphere of the public school," he explained. "Children grow up by doing, individually and in organized ways, what seems to need doing. We have tried to make our school a community, including in it institutions that one finds in the world at large."

Speaking the complex language of corporate business with the ease of a wall street financier, John Kadyk, 12, diminutive, be-spectacled president of the council, summed up the student's attitude with the statement: "It is swell to work in these corporations. It's a lot of fun and now we can understand some of the things our dads talk about at home."

FUTURE CITIZENS SHOW TO HONOR TRADE STUDENTS

Washburne Is on W-G-N Program Today.

Washburne Trade school and how it trains youths to enter the fields of industry will be described at 1 o'clock this afternoon on W-G-N's half hour recorded program, "Citizens of Tomorrow." James B. McCahey, president of the Chicago board of education, will be the principal speaker, outlining the school's 24 hour a day vocational program which was instituted 10 years ago.

He will be introduced by the master of ceremonies, Philip Maxwell of The Tribune's editorial staff. The Washburne chorus, directed by Peter A. Cavalla Jr., will sing two numbers, "We're All Americans," by J. T. Mangan, and "I Want to Be Happy," by Youmans. Six hundred Washburne students will join the chorus in the school song, "The Washburne Way."

Clarence Markus, Washburne senior student, and Miss Margaret Johnson, senior at Central High school, Lansing, Mich., will be added to the program's honor roll. Markus will be interviewed by Maxwell.

Jerry and Jimmy, the show's two comedian students played by Beryl Vaughan and Bob Jellison, will report on a tour thru Washburne Trade school. The program was recorded Wednesday in the W-G-N studio.

Guests Are Introduced.

A number of special guests attended the recording and were introduced to the 800 Washburne students who attended. The guests were Dr. William H. Johnson, superintendent of schools; Philip L. McNamee, assistant superintendent in charge of vocational education; Wilson Frankland, member of the board of education; Oscar W. Rosenthal, president of the National Association of Building Trades; Samuel I. Levin and Mrs. L. Robert Mellin of the board of education; William Finkl, chairman of the educational committee, National Metal Trades association; Patrick Sullivan, president of the Chicago Building Trades council; Charles C. Pulich, national chairman of research and production, Merchant Tailors and Designers Association of America, and Miss Sidonia Fried, organizer of the United Hatters, Cap, and Millinery Workers International union.

Others will be Joseph Seppi, president of the Council of Pressroom Workers; Charles A. Livingston, public relations director of Illinois Manufacturers' association; Abraham Heller, executive director, Chicago Association of Dress Manufacturers; William J. Hennessy, manager, convention bureau, Chicago Chamber of Commerce; Oscar G. Mayer, member of the board of directors and senior council, Chicago Association of Commerce, and Walter Collins, secretary, Master Electrical Contractors' association.

Organized in 1917.

The school was started in 1917 when an abandoned school building at 655 West 14th street was made available for training industrial war workers. Shortly afterward it was used for the rehabilitation of disabled soldiers returning from the battle front. Later other departments were added and in 1934 it was moved to Sedgwick and Division streets.

Washburne Pupils Sew for Army

Learning to sew canvas pads for United States army stretchers is one of the many industrial arts projects taught at the Washburne Trade school, 343 West Division street. The school will be saluted at 1 o'clock this afternoon on W-G-N's half hour recorded program, Citizens of Tomorrow. The two girls working on the strechers are Angela Santangelo, left, 338 West Goethe street, and Jean Bianchi, 1005 South Ashland boulevard.

GLENVIEW ARTIST DESIGNS SEALS FOR YULE DRIVE

Sale Raises Funds to Fight Tuberculosis.

As much a part of the Christmas scene as holly and mistletoe are the Christmas seals of the National Tuberculosis association which go on sale tomorrow.

This year the theme is "Christmas in the Country." Two frosty horses draw an old fashioned swell front sleigh. In the background are the typically American red barn and white farmhouse. Designer of the seals is Dale Nichols, Glenview artist.

According to Homer J. Buckley, president of the Tuberculosis Institute of Chicago and Cook County, sponsor of the campaign in this area, the need this year is greater than it has ever been in the 36 year history of the Christmas seal drive.

Spreads During War.

"Tuberculosis always spreads more rapidly in wartime." Buckley declared. "This is due usually to inadequate housing facilities, fatigue from long and irregular hours, worry, lack of sanitation and poor nutrition."

"With the war effort creating a drain on the nation's supply of doctors and nurses, the menace of tuberculosis facing every person is now more serious than ever before," he pointed out. "As yet we have had no rise in the number of cases, but we must make certain that no increase, either in incidence or deaths, occurs.

The purchase of Christmas seals will help this effort.

Where Money Goes.

Money derived from the sale of Christmas seals is used locally to carry on case finding by tuberculin testing and X-ray. It pays public health nurses, finances educational literature, movies and speakers for school and public groups. It helps maintain an average of 21 public clinics.

Mrs. Richard M. Hallinan, 2310 East 70th place, is general seal chairman for Chicago. Chairmen appointed in the north suburbs to date are Mrs. C. O. Skinrood of Evanston; Mrs. L. F. Buescher of Glenview; Mrs. Charle E. Emery of Northbrook, and Mr Sanborn Hale of Winnetka.

"We's two lit'l tootsies what's been dooding double duty. We's been tooking. We's been tweeping. We's been scubbing. We's been karing for the kids. We's been rub-a-dubbing the twothes in tuds an' we's been ironing 'til we're cwying big, big tears. Mrs. Peter Drivel, the wadey what we's so attached to, used to buy us size 4 shoos, but since Hilda, the maid, left to work in a de-fense plant and we's been wunning all over the pwace, size 7 feels so much better so she buys us 8's."

CHRISTMAS TREE LANE BAZAR SET FOR DEC. 2 AND 3

Evanston Church Event to Aid Missions.

Mrs. Clifford W. Dittmar, president of the Woman's Society of Christian Service of the First Methodist church of Evanston, heads a large committee which has been working since spring for Christmas tree lane, annual bazar of the society, to be held Wednesday and Thursday, Dec. 2 and 3, in the community house of the church.

Mrs. Clifford W. Dittmar.

The home and foreign missions projects of the society will benefit from the "lane."

The name of the bazar is derived from the lane of Christmas trees in which the women's handwork and home prepared foodstuffs are exhibited for sale.

On the entertainment schedule for the first day of the bazar are a dessert-bridge and book review at 1:30 o'clock and a candlelight concert at 8:15 o'clock in the evening. The book reviewer will be Mrs. Sarah Weidner Youngren of Glencoe, who will discuss "Van Loon's Lives" by Henrik Willem Van Loon. During the concert Mrs. Herbert Stoetzel, for many years soprano soloist in the First Methodist church, will be featured.

Musical numbers will be presented by a string trio composed of Arthur T. Clark, assistant minister of the church, violinist; Albert Verbrugghen, cellist, and George McClay, pianist. Dr. Emory L. Gallup, minister of music, will play a Christmas organ number, and the High School Fellowship choir will sing Christmas carols.

Assisting the president and chairman of the bazar are Mrs. Foster W. Irish, Miss Ethel Zimmerman, Mrs. J. P. Becker, Mrs. Olive Houston, Mrs. Frederick E. McCord, Mrs. Clarence Long, Mrs. H. Olin Cady, Mrs. William Fenner, Mrs. Victor J. Olson, Mrs. Bradley P. Williams, Miss Ada Townsend, Miss Louise E. Whitehead, Mrs. Paul E. Lundquist, Mrs. L. A. Kempf, Mrs. J. H. Dr. Adolph Bohn of the Edgewater Presbyterian church, Bryn Mawr and Kenmore avenues, announces the opening of a service men's club at 8 o'clock this evening. The main lounge is specially constructed in rustic, hunting lodge style with a large wood burning fireplace. Mounted deer heads and game skins decorate the walls. The church gymnasium with facilities for playing basketball, badminton, softball, pingpong, and dart games will be open to the service men.

During dedication ceremonies to which the public is invited, a chorus of 70 navy men from Navy pier, directed by Storm Bull, will sing. Chief Chaplain Philip Nicholas of Navy pier will deliver the address. Members of the Boy Scout troop of the church will serve as hosts.

W-G-N Carries First Talk at 4:15 Today.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

Upton Close, who has been called the Marco Polo of news commentators, will begin a new series of broadcasts over W-G-N and 55 other stations of the Mutual Broadcasting system from 4:15 to 4:30 p. m. today. The first of Close's comments on the news over Mutual will come from New York. Subsequent broadcasts will come from Chicago, New York, and San Francisco, in that order.

Close has a colorful background. He has had more than a quarter century of experience in the far east and other Pacific regions. He was born Josef Washington Hall in Kelso, Washington, and spent much of his childhood on an Indian reservation along the Columbia river.

An Investigator for United States.

After graduating from George Washington university he went to China as an investigating officer for the United States in Shantung during the Japanese invasion from 1916 to 1919.

As advisor to the Chinese student revolutionaries in Peking in 1919 and as chief of foreign affairs for the Peking Leader, reputed to be the oldest newspaper in the world, Close had an opportunity to travel extensively in all parts of China, Japan, Manchuria, and the South Pacific.

Close has contributed thousands of articles to magazines and newspapers on three continents. It was in connection with his work as a newspaper man that he acquired the name Upton Close. He signed his cabled dispatches UPCLOSE, which is simply "Close Up" when the syllables are reversed. Upton Close is an elaboration of Upclose.

Author of Book on Japan.

Between his travels, lectures, and journalistic endeavors Close has found time to write eleven books on adventure, history, romance, and biography.

His latest volume, recently published, "Behind the Face of Japan," is one of the important books dealing with the present war.

Close has been broadcasting off and on since 1924. This is his first series for Mutual. He appears on NBC's News of the World roundups at 6:15 p. m. Monday and Wednesday and is heard over WMAQ-NBC at 4:45 p. m. Saturdays and at 2:15 p. m. Sundays.

SPELLING BEE TO BE INTRODUCED ON W-G-N TODAY

An old-fashioned spell-down will be introduced on W-G-N when "Spelling Bee," a new weekly series, is presented for the first time from 12:05 to 12:30 p. m. today. Harold Isbell will be teacher and master of ceremonies on this weekly program.

Eight contestants will participate in each program and all will receive cash prizes. The contestants will be divided into two teams and the winning team will receive a special prize as will the winning individual. The first person to go down on the program will be awarded a booby prize.

On the initial program the two contesting teams will represent two very different walks of life. One team will be composed of dancing girls appearing in the "Priorities of 1942." The other team will consist of four members of the Tired Business Men's association. The program will be open to the public and a gala time will be offered.

Benchley Guest Tonight.

Robert Benchley, actor-author, will appear in "Symptoms of Being 35" on Radio's Reader's Digest to be presented at 8 p. m. today over WBBM-CBS.

Commentator

Upton Close, authority on western Pacific affairs, will begin a new commentary series on W-G-N and 55 other Mutual stations at 4:15 p. m. today.

'BOHEMIAN GIRL' NEXT ON W-G-N THEATER OF AIR

Balfe's "Bohemian Girl," starring Marion Claire and Attilio Baggiore, will be presented on the Chicago Theater of the Air from 8 to 9 p. m. next Saturday on W-G-N and the Mutual network.

Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of The Chicago Tribune, will speak. Miss Claire will take the rôle of Arline, daughter of an Austrian nobleman. Baggiore will portray the singing rôle of Thaddeus, an exiled Polish rebel. Supporting the principals will be Bruce Foote and Earl Wilkie. Foote will sing the rôle of Arline's father, the Count of Arnheim, while Wilkie will portray the gypsy leader, Devilshoof.

Known for its melody rather than its plot, "Bohemian Girl" is the most popular of Balfe's many works. The libretto for the operetta was written by the nineteenth century poet, Bunn.

Musical background will be supplied by the W-G-N symphony orchestra directed by Henry Weber and by the chorus led by Robert Trendler. Kenneth MacGregor, W-G-N chief of production, will produce the program.

A full cast of actors will present the dramatic rôles of the operetta. Marvin Mueller will be the announcer.

Quiz Kids to Present Show from Des Moines

Today's Quiz Kids program [6:30 p. m. WENR-Blue] will originate from the Shrine auditorium in Des Moines, Ia., before an expected crowd of 4,500. Making the trip will be, Joe Kelly, master of ceremonies; Margaret Merrick, 14; Richard Williams, 12; Ruth Duskin, 9; Harve Fischman, 12, and Gerard Darrow, 10.

'Crisis Administration' Is Topic of Round Table

The topic of discussion for the University of Chicago Round Table at 1:30 p. m. today on WMAQ-NBC will be "Crisis Administration." This is the second program of a series of three on "Democratic Government in Crisis." Speakers will be Don K. Price Neil H. Jacoby, and I. F. Stone.

SPEECH DEFECTS IRONED OUT FOR ARMY BY CLINIC

N. U. Class Salvages Men for Selection Board.

Minor speech defects no longer need spell rejection by the armed forces, because Northwestern university's Speech clinic can and is supplying a remedy for most of them.

The program of salvaging man power for Uncle Sam began last July when the clinic was approached by Lieut. Robert Ward, axamining doctor at the naval aviation cadet selection board in Chicago. Dr. Ward was concerned with having to turn away applicants who had only slight lisps or stutters, and still it was necessary because of the important rôle communications play in the war.

90 Day Treatment.

On a "no charge" basis, the clinic worked out a program with the cadet selection board. Boys who qualify in all ways except speech are sworn in the navy air corps. They are referred to the speech clinic for examination and therapy. If in 90 days the defect is eliminated, the boys is called for training. Otherwise, he receives an honorable discharge. To date 12 boys have passed the course.

Because of its success with potential flyers, the clinic voluntarily has undertaken work with all men referred to it by any selective board of the army, navy, or marines. Lisping is the fault most easily cured and slight cases of stuttering have been remedied satisfactorily. In these cases, however, the danger of relapse in time of stress is always present, according to Dr. Clarence T. Eimon, director of the clinic.

The young men who come for treatment are examined thoroly before any work is begun. Recordings of their speech are made. They are given hearing tests and speech tests which include pronunciation of all sounds and combinations of sounds. The mouth and teeth are examined carefully for the presence of structural impediments.

After the cause is ascertained, a set of exercises is prescribed. First the men are taught correct pronunciation, then it is largely a matter of practice. Weekly or semiweekly conferences are arranged with an instructor. The clinic currently is working with four young men.

Historically, speech impediments have barred men from armed service. During both the Civil war and World War I. stutterers were draft exempt. It is believed such men do not make good soldiers because they easily become the butt of camp jokes and even in the relatively unimportant matter of counting out in platoons, a man who has any kind of a speech blockage is handicapped. While some doctors believe that speech defects indicate emotional instability, this has never been proved.

ANOTHER STORY OF SLAVE PRESS ON W-G-N TODAY

Drama Shows Belgium Used as Brokers' Pawn.

The story of Belgium and how that nation was used as a pawn by international financiers working under the protection of a Nazi dominated press prior to her entry in the war, will be related by Stanley Johnston, Chicago Tribune war correspondent, on the "Mightier Than the Sword" program on W-G-N from 2:30 to 3 p. m. today.

Johnston will tell how financiers in France sent iron ore to Germany for its steel stock piles, and how Germany, in return, sent fuel to France to run France's blast furnaces. Belgium, sandwiched between the two countries, was used as the traffic lane and goods were sent tax exempt.

Johnston will relate how the lid was knocked off this story by the slaying of a Belgian border guard who attempted to stop the Nazi truck transports. He will also tell how he tried to break the story to the Belgian press, only to be rebuffed by a Nazi agent posing as a newspaper editor.

The editor and his secretary tried to capture and slay Johnston thru a ruse, but the scheme back fired when Johnston escaped into Holland, from where he sent his story to the newspapers of America.

"Mightier Than the Sword" is written and produced by Jack La-Frandre and features an all-star radio cast. Music on the program is by Robert Trendler and the W-G-N Symphony orchestra.

ROGERS PARK 'Y' TO HAVE PARTY, FUND CAMPAIGN

Fun Fest to Precede Drive for $3,712.

Two fund raising projects are taking the spotlight for the next few weeks over other activities of the Rogers Park YMCA, Harry Hansen, executive director, has announced.

Letters were sent last week to old and to prospective contributors to the annual finance campaign which will begin with a kick off dinner Nov. 30.

The second project is the annual fall fun fest to be given Friday and Saturday nights at the YMCA, 6908 North Clark street. Proceeds from the fest will be divided among the 17 boys and girls' clubs which have extensive activity programs.

Four Captains Named.

Four captains, Howard Buescher, Roy Clark, J. D. Heath and R. H. Dawson, will head the finance drive. They will be assisted by 40 workers. They will begin soliciting immediately after the kick off dinner which is being given for the workers by the Mothers' club at the YMCA.

A budget of $3,712 has been proposed by the board for 1943. This is expected to take care of a staff of four workers and the building. Letters asked that all pledges be mailed or given to the solicitors by Dec. 4. The solicitors will call on new prospects the week of Dec. 6. The campaign will close with a victory meeting Friday night, Dec. 11, when the total pledges will be counted.

Dividends Listed.

"Invest in Youth Today" is the finance campaign theme. Circulars included in the letters, list dividends from the 1942 budget. An average of 101 campers per week attended the 10 week camping season last summer at Camp Rogers near Lake Villa, the circulars say. Trips are planned almost every week-end to the Y cabin in Northbrook Forest preserve. There is an annual mother-daughter banquet and a craft and physical education program including a "learn to swim" campaign.

The YMCA is the headquarters for 11 American Youth Reserve groups. This fall the Y coöperated with the Clark Street Business Men's association in a Holloween parade and with the civilian defense in a salvage parade. They assist at community Easter services and with the weekday vacation Bible school each summer.

700 Are Expected.

The staff includes Miss Mildred Mouw, women's and girls' secretary; Robert Smith and Dale Williams, boys' secretaries, and Hansen. William H. Haight is chairman of the board.

Approximately 700 persons are expected to attend the two night fun fest. Tickets are being sold by the club members and at the Y office. There will be games, movies, floor shows and refreshments both nights.

Lake View Women to Hear Bundles for America Talk

Mrs. Arthur B. Crane, head of the salvage sewing division of Bundles for America, will speak Tuesday afternoon at a meeting of the Lake View Woman's club in Granada hotel. Her talk will be preceded by a luncheon at noon and a business meeting at which committee chairmen will report on their activities.

GLENCOE JEWS TO HOLD THANKS PROGRAM TODAY

Join Others in Community Rites Thursday.

Services in North Shore Congregation Israel, Glencoe, at 11 o'clock this morning will be devoted to a special Thanksgiving prayer service conducted by Rabbi Charles E. Shulman. In the spirit of the first community Thanksgiving celebrations, the sermon will be omitted and the service given over to special hymns and prayers.

On Thanksgiving day the temple will join with Glencoe churches for the annual union service in the Glencoe Union church. Dr. Douglas Cornell, pastor of the Union church, will deliver the sermon, and all ministers of Glencoe will participate.

The temple announces that it has inaugurated a series of 11 o'clock Sabbath services each Saturday morning.

"Global War and Global Peace" is the subject Gael Sullivan, Illinois director of the Federal Housing administration, will discuss at a meeting of the West Rogers Park Lodge B'nai B'rith tomorrow evening in Cine hall, Devon and Maplewood avenues. Louis Kaplan, president of the Chicago B'nai B'rith council, also will speak. Members are invited to bring their friends.

Dr. Frederick L. Schuman, Woodrow Wilson professor of government in Williams college, Williamstown, Mass., will address the Anshe Emet forum, Pine Grove avenue and Grace street, at 8:15 o'clock Tuesday evening on "The Peace We Want." For 15 years the former University of Chicago professor traveled and studied in Europe.

The men's club of Anshe Emet will have a dinner meeting at 6:30 o'clock tomorrow evening in observance of the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the Jewish Theological seminary and in memory of its founder, Dr. Solomon Schechter. Dr. Meyer Waxman, author, and Dr. A. Eustace Haydon, professor of comparative religions at the University of Chicago, will be guest speakers.

The Institute of Jewish Studies, sponsored by the Temple Sholom Men's club, will present Rabbi Samuel Blumenfield discussing "Hebraic Influences in American Democracy" from 8 to 9 o'clock and Dr. Fritz Bamberger on "Modern Anti-Semitism in the Making" from 9 to 10 o'clock Wednesday evening in the Frankenstein Memorial center, 3480 Lake Shore drive.

140 N. U. Students Offer Blood to Traveling Unit

More than 140 Northwestern university students signed up to give their blood for the armed forces when the Red Cross mobile unit visited Evanston last Thursday. The response has been so good, officials said, that plans are being made for the unit to visit the campus every eight weeks.

BUSINESS WOMEN PLAN WAR FORUM ON PROFESSIONS

A forum by women whose work has taken on emphasis during the war will be conducted tomorrow night by the research committee of the Business and Professional Women's Club of Evanston. The program will follow a dinner at 6:15 o'clock in First Methodist church.

Miss Margaret Grobman, director of publicity of the Pure Milk association, will explain "How the Lend-Lease and Food Program for Armed Forces is Affecting the Dairy Industry."

REMODEL DUPLEX INTO SMALL WAR WORKERS' UNITS

Compact Quarters Draw Tenants' Attention.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

Not long ago a very interesting—and patriotic—piece of work was completed in a two story greystone apartment duplex at 3253 Flournoy street.

Mrs. Katherine Kleppel and her daughter, Katharine, decided to remodel the upstairs seven room apartment of their building into two smaller apartments for war workers. They knew their residence was in a neighborhood serving many defense plants and factories and a plumbing contractor told them they would be eligible for priority assistance.

So they filled out the necessary forms and the work began. Before it was completed the new apartment had been rented to a war worker and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Scalzitti. The original renters of the apartment continued to occupy the balance of the former apartment.

Built-in Fixtures Please.

The Scalzittis are pleased with their new apartment and they like the compactness of their three rooms and bath, the efficient sink with its wooden cabinets, built to order, and the good looking bathroom with modern fixtures, including built-in tub with overhead shower.

The plumbing contractor handled the entire work of creating two small apartments out of the one large flat, and he and Miss Kleppel planned the arrangements. He also took the responsibility of getting the carpenters, plasterers, electricians, and decorators.

The seven room apartment had consisted of a front parlor and bedroom alcove, a living room, a large dining room, kitchen, two bedrooms and a bathroom.

Remove Fretted Archway.

The new apartment was created at the front and the alcove bedroom off the parlor was closed up to make a complete bedroom with a door opening into the new apartment living room. A fretted archway between parlor and living room was removed and the opening arched to separate the living room and the kitchen dinette.

To provide for a bathroom the plumbing contractor suggested building a new room to open off the kitchen, which would take part of the space of the old living room. The new room for the bath was 5½x7 feet and the remaining space provided an L-shaped room for the kitchen-dinette.

Red Accents in Kitchen.

All the fixtures in the bathroom and kitchen are white. Accents of red against the white cabinets, sink, range, and refrigerator highlight the equipment and black linoleum cabinet tops. The floor linoleum is black and grey with red. Pink and blue accessories make the bathroom attractive.

The woodwork of the new living room and bedroom was painted entirely white and the floors refinished. A new bathroom radiator, one of the modern midget wall-hung models, was nstalled, and the positions of radiators in the present kitchen-dinette were changed; a change for the better since the radiator in the kitchen is now under a window.

This WEEK in the GARDEN

Monday, Nov. 23

Remove garden furniture and equipment to the basement or shed. Drain all hose and hang it on a broad wooden hook in a cool place or roll it on one of the specially made outfits where it is not likely to be in the way of other equipment.

Never permit garden tools to enter winter quarters without being thoroly cleaned. Clean and oil the mowing machine and sharpen the cutting edge so it will be ready for use next spring.

Tuesday, Nov. 24

There is no economy in using the tops of perennials for mulching, for they may contain insects and disease. Clear up the entire garden, destroying the tops.

Hardwood leaves are excellent for mulching, but do not spread deeply over plants or they may smother and die. Rather draw the leaves up to and around the plants. All leaves not used for mulching should be combined with soil and a compost heap started.

Manures are frequently difficult to obtain, but artificial manures are becoming more frequent.

Wednesday, Nov. 25

If the ground is not frozen it is excellent practice to spade it and permit it to lie in the rough all winter. Sod ground is best fitted in this way, for when spring comes it will have decayed and be ready for planting.

Thursday, Nov. 26

Prune vines by cutting out the diseased wood. Doing this work after the vines start in spring disturbs them and is likely to injure the young wood.

Cut back the Hydrangea paniculata grandiflora [the Peegee Hydrangea], leaving two to four buds on the the shoots. Spiraea Anthony Waterer can be cut to the ground or within six inches. Tamarisk can be cut back severely to keep it low and in bush form. If allowed to grow rampant it becomes ungainly and ill shaped.

Friday, Nov. 27

The growing of plants in homes is sufficient to keep the gardener busy thruout the winter and the vast variety that is available gives every indoor gardener an opportunity to have a fine collection.

Saturday, Nov. 28

Flowering pot plants should never be allowed to suffer from a lack of water. They will last longer if placed in a cool room at night. Most flowering plants require sun, while foliage plants do well in shade or partial shade.

WILMETTE USES SALVAGE TO PAY FOR OCD ACTIVITY

Need 18 Trucks to Haul Month's Scrap.

Civilian defense in Wilmette drains neither the village treasury nor the pocketbooks of individual citizens. Thru a plan evolved by Village Manager W. A. Wolff, the cost of all civilian defense activities is offset by the proceeds from salvage the suburb has been collecting regularly since last April.

Recently total net income from the sale of salvaged materials has amounted to $3,152. Actual cost of the salvage collections to the municipality was $91.

When the defense council was created in Wilmette last Dec. 16 there arose the question of financing its work. Under the law the corporate fund could not be raised to provide for it. Officials felt that individuals were approached too often for contributions to a variety of causes. Paying for civilian defense by collecting salvage was selected as most feasible.

Village Trucks Used.

All municipal trucks were drafted for the job of pickup. On the first collection in April which included only newspapers, magazines, rags, and metals, a fleet of eight trucks completed the work in eight hours. Rubber was added in the pickup in May, and in August tin cans were added.

During Oct. 18 trucks were needed to haul away the vital scrap materials Wilmette residents piled on the curbs. Volunteers from the public works department drove the vans each manned by four volunteers from the civilian defense rolls.

The method of collecting aims at the greatest efficiency, Wolff said. The village is divided into six sections with three trucks assigned to each section. One collects newspapers and magazines, another metals, rags, and rubber, and the third tin cans.

Firemen Do Sorting.

Fire department employés sort the salvage during their working hours and because of this sorting the materials command a higher price.

Wolff also states that continuous publicity and education have resulted in improvement in the preparation of salvage. Newspapers and magazines are tied in neater and more secure bundles. A greater number of tin cans are being prepared properly.

The problem of sufficient volunteer man power to handle the work each month had become serious after the first few months of the drive. To remedy this situation it was decided that each block warden would assign one man or boy from his area to assist. In this way the work is evenly distributed.

In seven salvage pickups, 776,175 pounds of newspapers, magazines, loose paper, rags, rubber, cast iron, iron, tin, aluminum, tin cans, and coat hangers were collected.

3 CLERICS TO SPEAK AT HIGHLAND PARK THANKSGIVING FETE

The religious significance of Thanksgiving will not go unobserved in Highland Park. More than 250 business men will gather at 7 o'clock tomorrow night for the second annual religious program and dinner in Moraine-on-the Lake hotel. The program will include talks by the Rev. Louis W. Sherwin of the Presbyterian church, the Rev. J. D. O'Neill of the Immaculate Conception church and Rabbi Charles E. Shulman of the North Shore Congregational Israel. Music will be furnished by an instrumental quintet from Highland Park High school.

Rabbi C. E. Shulman.

The idea of the religious dinner at Thansgiving time started with the Highland Park Kiwanis club. Its purpose is to bring together Highland Park business men of all religious faiths to eat and sing together and to hear the community's religious leaders. This year members are inviting service men to be their guests.

Organizations coöperating with the Kiwanis club are Rotary, Lions, Elks, American Legion, and improvement associations in Highland Park and vicinity. John Munroe, Kiwanis club president, will be master of ceremonies.

CAKE, JUST LIKE MOTHER'S, DRAWS MEN IN SERVICE

Evanston Women Supply Davis Street Center.

"Umm—chocolate cake. Just like my mother's," mused a lad from Texas, now a second class seaman in radio school at Northwestern university. He was munching a large piece of chocolate cake covered with thick fudge icing at the Service Men's center, 514 Davis street, Evanston.

The chocolate cake was surrounded by a table of other delicacies—white, yellow, and spice cakes, baked ham, spaghetti, casserole dishes, chocolate drop cookies, jello, milk, and sandwiches which thoughtful mothers and housewives had provided for the regular Wednesday night buffet supper at the center.

Three times a week service men may come to the center for free home cooking. Meals are served Wednesday and Saturday nights and all day Sundays, beginning with early morning breakfast.

When one sailor was asked what he liked best about the center he promptly answered, "Food," and added another sandwich to his heavily laden plate.

"If the boys have Thursday off at radio school we're going to serve them a Thanksgiving dinner with turkey and all the fixings," Mrs. Harry R. Hargis, director, has promised. "If they are in school Thursday I guess we'll have to celebrate Wednesday night."

Ask—and They Get It.

Boys have to ask only once for a favorite dish and—presto! it is on the table next time. Apple pie has been a favorite with the boys and cake is more popular than cookies. Pancakes are a Sunday morning treat.

Recently one woman baked pancakes from 8 o'clock in the morning until noon. Sweet potatoes and baked ham is a repeated call and "cocoanut cake with lots and lots of lemon filling" often is requested.

One woman who lives in a tiny apartment with only limited kitchen facilities bakes five dozen Parkerhouse rolls each week-end. The food is prepared by Evanston women who volunteer their services. Usually a church organization or some other group takes charge of a meal and solicits food.

Fry Chicken on Spot.

Formerly the food was brought in all ready prepared and then kept warm by two hot plates which had been donated to the center. However, so many requests came in for southern fried chicken and biscuits that Mrs. Hargis made a plea for a gas stove. Now fried chicken served the southern way has been added to the list.

The center which was started last June by Mrs. Hargis is open every day. Girls from Northwestern campus serve as hostesses. They play ping-pong, dance or just sit and talk with the boys.

The center is small—only two rooms—but everything in it has been donated or loaned by Evanston and north shore civilians. There's a piano in one corner, radio in another, always an abundance of writing paper and religious literature and in a far corner of the front room is a large old-fashioned round table for food.

Form Men's Quartet.

Ray Kraft, a musician, comes in each Wednesday night and plays the piano. The boys have worked up a quartet which practices at the center and sings at programs in Northwestern's Scott hall. An artist, Mrs. Alphonse Roche of Evanston, also spends Wednesday nights at the center drawing sketches of the boys which they may send home to their sweethearts.

Anywhere from 75 to 200 sailors drift into the Service Men's center Wednesday nights and week-ends. Sundays many of them go to church for their pancakes, then go to church and come back for more pancakes. Food is kept there for them until 5:30 p. m., when they have to report back to school.

In addition to serving meals at the center, the women volunteer 200 cakes a month to the Chicago Service Men's center and send magazines, books, cards, and games to the Great Lakes Naval Training station each Friday.

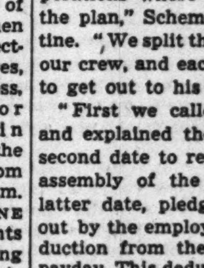
Neglect Business, Wives to Carry Message.

Illinois, leading the nation in war bond sales much of the time, can thank a group of 500 Chicago men who have neglected their wives, homes, business, and golf for months to win this honor for the state—and boom the war program. THE TRIBUNE today presents two bond-selling captains and their crews, not to give them individual credit so much as to shed light on the entire group of 500 insurance men and brokers who have been giving several days a week for the last year to help bring 10,891 Illinois firms into the pay roll allotment war bond plan. Nearly 80 per cent of the 3,324,047 employés in these firms are enrolled in the plan. The captains are Freeman Wood and Earl Schwemm.



Freeman J. Wood.

To stay in the front ranks, Illinoisans must buy more than $60,000,000 worth of bonds every month in the year. Bankers and capitalists couldn't make such continuing purchases. Only one group could—ordinary workmen, white collar or denim clad.

Rank and File Workers.

"And the ordinary workman usually don't have any money left over to buy bonds," Norman B. Collins, state administrator of war bond sales, points out. "So our staff, all volunteers, has carried the campaign into factories and offices in the form of the pay roll allotment system of buying war bonds. . .

"There are big names mentioned from time to time in the newspapers for their work in installing the system, but actually the bulk of the work was done by the rank and file workers—insurance men, brokers, advertising men.

"If you really want to know who has been out to the steel mills and factories and restaurants, arranging to have war bond purchases deducted regularly from waitresses' and machinists' and packers' pay checks, you'll have to meet our captains and their men."

Typical of State.

Freeman Wood, captain, is not the average bond seller, but the spirit that has set him to selling the plan to over 100 firms personally, one of the firms alone purchasing $332,000 worth of war bonds a month, is the spirit that has pushed Illinois to the fore in the sale of war bonds. His crew and he together have set up the plan in over 500 plants involving several hundred thousand employés.

Wood is head of a loop insurance agency. He lives in Winnetka with his wife and one son.

"We go out to an employé meeting at some plant, and everybody sits there glumly, wondering who we are and why we don't go away," Wood relates. "It is our job, and not an easy one, to leave the workmen singing "The Star Spangled Banner" and meaning it because they have bought a share in the war program by signing for regular bond purchases."

Recruited Own Staff.

Earl Schwemm, manager of a loop insurance agency, was named a captain more than a year ago. Since then he has installed the pay roll bond plan in nearly 100 firms. He works with a crew of 12 men.

"We were given a list of 100 corporations where we were to set up the plan," Schemm explains the routine. "We split these names up among our crew, and each man took time off to get out to his list in the daytime.

"First we called on an executive and explained the plan, arranging a second date to return and talk to an assembly of the workers. At this latter date, pledge cards were filled out by the employés authorizing a deduction from their pay checks each payday. This deduction would accumulate until a bond could be purchased and sent to the employé."

PREPARE ALTARS FOR HARVEST FETE

RATEIKE FARM SET FOR REAL THANKSGIVING

21 to Put Feet Under 'Groaning Board.'

Thankful on Thanksgiving day, 1942, is Paul Rateike, farmer, whose 94 fertile acres are rolling countryside cradling a tiny lake eight miles as the crow flies north from Roselle. Today the Rateike family numbers 21, with members contributing to every vital phase of the war effort—farming, soldiering, mechanics, carpentry, and mothering the future generation.

They will all be home for Thanksgiving as they have for 30 years, even perhaps the soldier son-in-law, Corp. Norman Pfortmiller, stationed with the air corps in Michigan. Year after year the circle around the dining room has grown. They added the kitchen table to the dining room table and the double festive board now stretch the entire length of the big dining room, with its perky starched curtains and warm black stove in the corner.

Goose Hangs High.

Mr. and Mrs. Rateike's four daughters, their husbands and their children, and the two Rateike sons will share the plump Thanksgiving goose this year. The Rateike farm is part of the great breadbasket of the republic, and the war brings its problems to the farm. But, war problems or none, Thanskgiving will be the same happy day, with its solemn blessing, its rapid conversation, its peace as still as the little lake, like a splash of silver dropped among the rolling fields now ripe for harvest.

Home for Thanksgiving on Thursday will be the eldest daughter, Mrs. Elmer Schuler; her husband, who is a war worker in the Buick plant, and children, Elaine, Robert, and Carolyn. The family of Walter Schuler, a war worker in the Douglas aircraft plant, will sit with his wife, Viola, and their five children, Walter Jr., James, Leonard, Shirley Mae, and Roger. Mr. and Mrs. Harold Benhart will bring their only daughter, Ruth Ann. Benhart knows the Roselle farm land as an auctioneer and a florist. Mrs. Norman Pfortmiller expects her husband, Corp. Pfortmiller, home from Kellogg field. There will be 17 year old son George and 11 year old Paul.

Can't Forget Chores.

This is Thanksgiving on an Illinois dairy farm. It begins with chores, as do all days on the farm. There are 20 head of cows to be milked, giving 500 pounds a day. "I can increase my milk supply by 20 per cent," explains Farmer Rateike; "that is, if I can keep my son, George, at home to help. Without George I would have to cut the supply."

The cows must be fed, and it is up to George to do the ploughing, run the combine, and do the harvesting. His job begins at 5 o'clock in the morning and ends at 9:30 o'clock at night. His mother, dad, and little brother, Paul, work the same hours at different chores. Paul and mother do a large percentage of the milking.

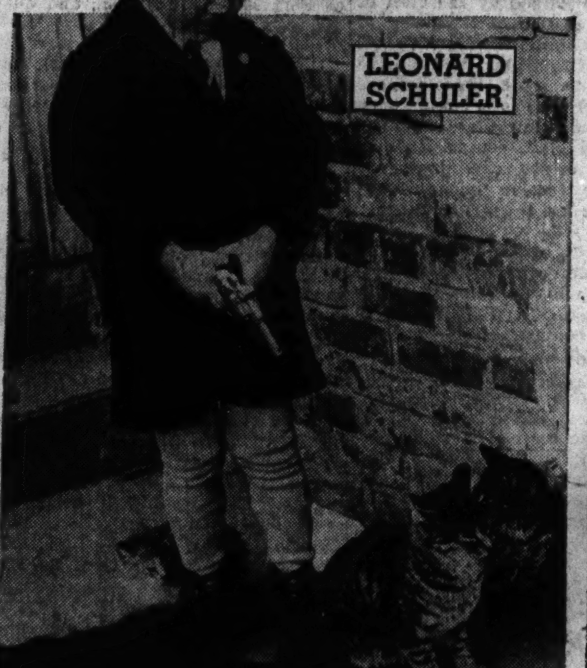
The Rateikes bought a new tractor in 1941, and they are glad they did. Auctioneers claim that a corn picker which sold for $500 new will sell now for $750. Mr. Rateike says he can still buy repair parts, but nothing new. The Rateikes do their own butchering and their own canning, with 600 cans of vegetables on the shelves when the winter sets in.

Bring Own Coffee, Sugar.

Today they will hold their Thanksgiving in church at the St. Peter's Lutheran in Arlington Heights. This year the 21 members of the family will bring their own bags of sugar and coffee because of the rationing. The plumpest goose will be chosen for the center of the feast. There will be tart cranberries and sage dressing and rich goose gravy poured lavishly from the bowl.

George goes hunting in the morning, but he says, "Even rabbits are scarce this year." The girls help with the dishes and the men sit around and talk politics. This Thanksgiving there is talk of government regulations. "How will they affect the 5 to 9:30 o'clock work day of the dairy farmer?"

Farm Family Symbolizes Thankfulness for Nation's Greatness



This is Thanksgiving in Illinois, 1942. Deep rooted in American history is the commemoration of the day when a band of Pilgrims gave their thanks for a meager harvest. Today hundreds of farms comparable in size and industry to the Paul Rateikes' 94 acres, located eight miles north of Roselle, are supplying peoples from North Africa to Australia with the necessities of life. This one unit out of the richest bread basket in the world will produce its 500 pounds of milk on Thanksgiving day as on any other day in the year. For the festive part of the day the entire family will meet, the two daughters who married the Schuler boys, and their children, Mrs. Norman Pfortmiller, whose husband is a corporal in the air corps, and daughter, Gladys, who married Harold Benhart, and their daughter. And there will be sons, George and Paul, who help work the farm. Today Farmer Paul Rateike's dairy farm is a symbol of industry, national pride and the country's greatness. His six sons and daughters, his nine grandchildren, his rolling fertile land, his 20 head of plump cattle, the little church he goes to on Sunday—for these and all the simple things of life Farmer Rateike gives thanks in 1942. Then he turns to work his own farm from sunup until the blackness of night has blended his farmhouse into the overall peaceful Illinois scene in spite of all the war around him.

Rain or Shine, Grandma's on Duty as Cop

Mrs. John Connolly, 1505 North Laramie avenue, is a 44 year old grandmother. If it weren't for the war, Mrs. Connolly would spend her days baking, dusting, and watching Granddaughter Patricia Ann and her evenings in a rocking chair. But since Aug. 24 Mrs. Connolly has been a traffic cop.

Rain or shine, this grandma traffic cop stands at Augusta boulevard and Kildare avenue for eight hours a day directing traffic and seeing that children get safely to the neighborhood's three schools, the Orr public, St. Francis, and St. Cyril Catholic. She stands from 7:30 o'clock to 3:30 o'clock with 15 minutes for rest in the morning, 15 minutes in the afternoon, and a half hour for lunch. Then at 3:30 o'clock she skips home and does the washing and ironing or dusting. She does her shopping and patriotically carries groceries home in a market basket.

Serves Two Dinners.

At 4 o'clock she has a hot, well balanced dinner on the table for son Thomas who leaves then for his job and an hour later she duplicates the dinner for husband John, a railroad worker, and her son, James, 20. Then she washes the dishes and goes over to take care of Patricia Ann if Patricia's mother wants to go out for the evening. Saturday and Sunday are Mrs. Connolly's days of rest.

The five room flat run by this feminine traffic cop in her spare time is spick and span. The grandmother's cheeks are a little pinker from the wind smacking them. She still feels awfully self-conscious about blowing her whistle.

In order to be a traffic cop Mrs. Connolly made an application with 950 other women at the park district. There were 42 selected and on Aug. 24 they entered training school and learned what were traffic violations, what were speed limits, and how to direct traffic. They even had a lesson blowing the whistle, of which Mrs. Connolly says, "I felt awfully silly."

Liked by Children.

"The public has accepted me," says Mrs. Connolly, who wouldn't be late to her station for anything in the world. "Teachers have commented that the children like the women better than the men as crossing guards." Mrs. Connolly wears a blue uniform, a man's white shirt with black tie, and an emblem on her cap. She has a white belt and white gloves.

"I wanted the job to keep my mind off my own worries," said Mrs. Connolly. "You see, my son, Thomas, leaves for the army on Tuesday."

"I feel fine," says Mrs. Connolly after almost four months of guard duty out in the weather. "The air gives me an appetite."

AREA CHURCHES PLAN SERVICE IN THANKSGIVING

Celebrate Birthday in Bensenville.

The fruit of the fields will be placed on altars of northwest area churches today and Thursday as Methodists, Lutherans, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, and Episcopalians worship together with hymns and sermons of Thanksgiving for another harvest in this land.

A double Thanksgiving is being celebrated this morning at the First Evangelical church of Bensenville with prayers of thanks for the successful termination of 105 years of history and in celebration of the national holiday. The anniversary celebration which will be climaxed at 10:45 o'clock this morning opened last Thursday and has included banquets, teas, historical pageants, and old fashioned song fests. This morning the church pastor, the Rev. R. F. Joop, will preach the 105th birthday sermon. At 3 o'clock this afternoon there will be a tea for all confirmation class members and their parents and for all new residents in Bensenville.

Other Churches Join.

On Thanksgiving day at 10 o'clock in the morning the old church will be the scene of community services in which the congregations of Freidens church, St. John's, Emmanuel, the Bible church, and First Evangelical church will participate. The sermon will be delivered by the Rev. Elmer M. Ringe. More than 300 persons are expected to attend.

One hundred and five years ago First Evangelical church saw its beginnings with services held in the neighboring woods then called Dunkle's Grove. They were continued later in the home of a Mr. Deibert whose first name has been lost in the annals of village history. When Mr. Deibert moved away the people worshipped in a little schoolhouse on what was known as Dunlap's land.

As the congregation grew a church building was erected about a mile from the present church and it was dedicated by Bishop John Seybert on Aug. 12, 1854. After 12 years it was moved to Cogswell's corner and after another nine years the present church was built. In 1887 this building was moved into Bensenville which had become a small village.

Tornado Hit Steeple.

The only casualty in the story of the church growth was in 1932 when a tornado struck the 150 foot steeple on the white frame colonial building. The damage was quickly repaired and First Evangelical church stands as the oldest one in Bensenville.

The congregations of the Community church and the Methodist church of Park Ridge will unite for service on Thanksgiving day at 10 o'clock in the Methodist church, Touhy avenue avenue near Prospect avenue. The Rev. Orvis F. Jordan will deliver the sermon. The service will be read by the Rev. T. Harry Kelly and the Methodist choir directed by F. B. Hunt will sing.

On Friday evening the new chancel at the Itasca Evangelical church was dedicated and made ready for the Thanksgiving service this morning. Thanksgiving also was celebrated by a thanks offering for the needy. Holy communion will be celebrated this morning.

Trinity Lutheran Services.

At 9:30 o'clock Thursday morning Thanksgiving services will be held in the Trinity Lutheran church of Des Plaines with the Rev. Paul K. Nordsiek preaching the sermon.

The Presbyterian church of Itasca will have a special thank offering of canned goods for the benefit of the Presbyterian hospital war relief. Donations also will be accepted on Thanksgiving morning at the 9 o'clock worship service sponsored by the Tuxis society.

At Our Savior's Lutheran church, Northcott and West Circle avenue, there will be a harvest home festival held at 10:30 o'clock Thanksgiving morning. Donations of food will be sent to the Addison Orphan's home and baskets will be taken to needy families in the community. The ceremony will be held in the schoolhouse and school children will sing. The Rev. George L. Lueke is pastor of the church.

Neglect Business, Wives to Carry Message.

Illinois, leading the nation in war bond sales much of the time, can thank a group of 500 Chicago men who have neglected their wives, homes, business, and golf for months to win this honor for the state—and boom the war program.

Freeman J. Wood.

THE TRIBUNE today presents two bond-selling captains and their crews, not to give them individual credit so much as to shed light on the entire group of 500 insurance men and brokers who have been giving several days a week for the last year to help bring 10,891 Illinois firms into the pay roll allotment war bond plan. Nearly 80 per cent of the 3,324,047 employés in these firms are enrolled in the plan. The captains are Freeman Wood and Earl Schwemm.

To stay in the front ranks, Illinoisans must buy more than $60,000,000 worth of bonds every month in the year. Bankers and capitalists couldn't make such continuing purchases. Only one group could—ordinary workmen, white collar or denim clad.

Rank and File Workers.

"And the ordinary workman usually don't have any money left over to buy bonds," Norman B. Collins, state administrator of war bond sales, points out. "So our staff, all volunteers, has carried the campaign into factories and offices in the form of the pay roll allotment system of buying war bonds.

"There are big names mentioned from time to time in the newspapers for their work in installing the system, but actually the bulk of the work was done by the rank and file workers—insurance men, brokers, advertising men.

"If you really want to know who has been out to the steel mills and factories and restaurants, arranging to have war bond purchases deducted regularly from waitresses' and machinists' and packers' pay checks, you'll have to meet our captains and their men."

Typical of State.

Freeman Wood, captain, is not the average bond seller, but the spirit that has set him to selling the plan to over 100 firms personally, one of the firms alone purchasing $332,000 worth of war bonds a month, is the spirit that has pushed Illinois to the fore in the sale of war bonds. His crew and he together have set up the plan in over 500 plants involving several hundred thousand employés.

Wood is head of a loop insurance agency. He lives in Winnetka with his wife and one son.

"We go out to an employé meeting at some plant, and everybody sits there glumly, wondering who we are and why we don't go away," Wood relates. "It is our job, and not an easy one, to leave the workmen singing 'The Star Spangled Banner' and meaning it because they have bought a share in the war program by signing for regular bond purchases."

Recruited Own Staff.

Earl Schwemm, manager of a loop insurance agency, was named a captain more than a year ago. Since then he has installed the pay roll bond plan in nearly 100 firms. He works with a crew of 12 men.

"We were given a list of 100 corporations where we were to set up the plan," Schemm explains the routine. "We split these names up among our crew, and each man took time off to get out to his list in the daytime.

"First we called on an executive and explained the plan, arranging a second date to return and talk to an assembly of the workers. At this latter date, pledge cards were filled out by the employés authorizing a deduction from their pay checks each payday. This deduction would accumulate until a bond could be purchased and sent to the employé."

Still After Mark.

But this was not the end. At first some plants were subscribing only 1 per cent of their pay rolls. The bond selling crews returned time and again, gave more pep talks, issued 10 per cent pins to employés who pledged that proportion of their wages.

Finally, in plant after plant, the regular deduction grew nearer and nearer the 10 per cent over-all average, the treasury's goal. The majority of Schwemm's corporations now hover around 8 or 9 per cent, and he and his men are still spending one or two days a week working on them.

WAR WORKERS STUDY PRECISION MEASUREMENT

Learn History and Use of Instruments.

Maine Township High school is one of a handful of educational institutions in the Chicago area to offer a course in the care and use of precision measuring instruments—much used in war material manufacture. Taught by Lawrence Cruise, young research engineer of Contour Saws, Inc., of Des Plaines, the course is in its second 10 week session this fall. Twenty students meet on Monday and Wednesday evenings to become acquainted with gauges, indicators, micrometers, verniers, comparators, and optical measuring instruments.

It is not intended that the course will train its students to become specialists in linear measurement. They learn the use and history of each instrument. Adults from 24 different factories are represented in the sessions held this fall. After completion of their 10 weeks' training, they return to their work with a greater appreciation of the precision instruments they see or use daily.

Checks Production Flow.

One war worker is a woman who checks on the production flow of her company and keeps records of raw stock in process and finished articles. Another woman is in charge of an inspection department, and one of the men does assembly and inspection work with an engineering concern.

Five educational sound films have been shown this fall, two engineers have lectured before the class, and three field trips to war plants have been taken by his classes, Cruise explained. He feels that visits to war industries where instruments are observed in actual use, are immeasurably more informative than the mere handling of them in class, where equipment is limited.

Taught in Rochester.

Obtaining his bachelor's degree from the University of Iowa, Cruise took his master's degree in science at Kansas State college, Hays, Kas., and then did work toward his doctorate at the University of Minnesota. He also taught at Rochester Junior college, Rochester, Minn.

The text used for the course was written in the University of the State of New York and is a part of the vocational education program for national defense industries.

IN TOUGH SPOT, SOLDIER? THEN TRY RED CROSS

Home Service Helps Many Solve Problems.

"Send her one dozen roses," was the message the Red Cross received together with money from an anxious soldier at an embarkation point many miles from his wife in Chicago. The money was more than enough for one dozen and upon investigation by the Red Cross home service division two dozen were sent instead.

The anxious soldier had just become father of twins.

Not all messages received by the home service division at 616 South Michigan avenue are as polgnant as that one, however. Staffed with a large group of highly trained social workers and approximately 40 volunteers, many of whom are from the north side, the division headquarters is open 24 hours a day receiving and sending messages, answering requests and making investigations. The workers and their volunteers are organized to render many services to the armed men; services not supplied by the army and navy but necessary for the maintenance of morale.

Hold Train 4 Minutes.

Once the Red Cross held a train four minutes so that a soldier might get back to camp before his furlough expired. Assisting stranded wives who have gone to visit their husbands in camp and have found themselves short of funds to get home is a common chore.

Often soldiers arrive in Chicago after the war department finance office is closed for the day and come to the South Michigan office to get personal checks cashed.

Looking after the servicemen's families, advancing money for emergencies and obtaining lawyers for legal matters are all in the scope of home service activities.

Money Blew Away.

One soldier came in and asked for a loan to purchase a return ticket back to camp. He said his had fallen from his pants pocket and blown out the hotel window.

Another soldier wanted to send $100 home in a hurry. The Red Cross field director wired the Chicago home service office which advanced the money to the family immediately. Several days later the check arrived from the soldier and the Red Cross was reimbursed.

Broken Romances.

Even broken romances are sometimes ministered to. One Chicago girl went to visit her soldier friend in camp only to find him married to another girl. The Red Cross field director put the visitor on a train home and wired the Chicago office to meet her at the station. The train arrived but she wasn't on it. Several days were spent in tracing her to a friend's home and in getting her home safely again.

Occasionally requests are turned down. One of these was from a clothes conscious soldier who had bought more uniforms than he had money for.

Camps are equipped with field directors whose jobs are to listen to the service men's personal problems. They then relay messages and requests on to the "home front" which in Chicago is the 24 hour home service division.

Busy 24 Hours a Day.

Twenty four hours a day, volunteers are busy at the office, doing clerical work, checking reports, taking messages and running errands for the large staff of specialized workers. In peace times many of these same women would be planning bridge parties, teas, and other social events.

The home service division uses an average of 10 cars each day from the motor corps to investigate home conditions and reported illnesses in the homes of service men.

428 ARE SIGNED TO DONATE BLOOD IN NORWOOD PARK

Because 428 residents of Norwood Park volunteered their blood to the Red Cross, the visit of the organization's mobile blood donor unit to the Norwood Park fieldhouse tomorrow and Tuesday will be extended to Wednesday. The announcement was made by John H. Kerr, Red Cross chairman in the community.

Kerr predicts that more than 500 residents will have volunteered by tomorrow. Joseph H. King, chairman of the Red Cross blood donor service in Chicago, congratulated Norwood Park on its successful campaign.

Directed by Mrs. L. A. Berghouse, representing the Woman's club, and Mrs. E. B. Allabough of the Parent-Teacher association, the blood donor committee got 428 registrations in two weeks.

STUDENTS TALK VICTORY; 2,000 LISTEN TO THEM

North Park Collegians Are in Contest.

North Park college students who are members of the Phi Rho Pi, national oratorical society, are talking victory. The Victory Speakers corps is an outgrowth of the efforts of the local Phi Rho Pi chapter and its sponsor, Dr. P. Merville Larson, to procure local participants in the National Victory Speaking contest sponsored by the society.

With the forensic students busily writing four minute speeches in the national competition, Dr. Larson was searching for audiences to hear them. He found interested listeners in Maurice Nathanson, morale chairman for the Albany Park community and originator of the morale warden program in civilian defense, and Albin Erickson, chairman of the college civilian defense committee. On Oct. 13 these civilian defense workers spoke to the speaking corps on the place of speech in civilian defense.

Address 2,000 Persons.

Since then block and zone meetings, morale wardens' meetings, and consumers' groups have been the audiences which have heard the North Park college speakers. On Nov. 16 when the national contestants from North Park were chosen the corps speakers had addressed an aggregate audience of more than 2,000 persons. By Dec. 1 the winners of the national preliminaries will be announced. The written manuscripts are being judged by three members of the executive council of the society.

The 10 high ranking students will provide recordings and an additional manuscript for the final contest which will be judged by the staff of the speakers section of the Office of Civilian Defense in Washington, D. C. The winner of first place will receive one-half as many 10 cent defense stamps as there are total contestants, the second place contestant, one-third, and the third place contestant, one-fourth. Each of the remaining seven winners will receive one-tenth as many stamps as there are contestants.

Recordings Available.

One copy of each of the 10 final manuscripts will be sent to every chapter and student participating in the national contest. These and the recordings will be made available to the victory speaking units of the Office of Civilian Defense.

By the end of the year it is anticipated that the more than 20 victory speakers will have reached a total audience of more tahn 25,000 persons on the northwest side. Talks concern such things as bond sales, salvage collections, morale building, civilian protection, and recruiting.

NORWEGIAN HOME BAZAR RECEIPTS HIGHEST IN YEARS

The recent bazar for the benefit of the Norwegian Lutheran Children's home at 6000 North Canfield avenue brought total sales at the booths of $3,417, about the highest receipts of any bazar for the home in the last 40 years.

Proceeds will be used to care for the 136 children now in the home, representing 70 families. Increase in the number of children is due to fathers entering the army, death of the husband, and war work disruptions.

Recently the home lost the services of its attending physician, Dr. R. J. Harr who entered the army medical corps.

NEW STAR LOOMS IN SERVICE FLAG AT MOORE HOME

Nurse in Iceland Is First of Three from Family.

They are adding stars one after another to the service flag that hangs in the window of the James Moore home at 4340 North Mason avenue. The star that has been there the longest is for their daughter, Second Lieut. Lillian Moore, a nurse now on duty overseas with the army.

A star added six weeks ago is for Jack Moore, sworn into the navy and planning to specialize as a diesel engine technician. In December a third star will be added to the flag when 20 year old daughter, Joan, who has been accepted by the WAVES, will leave for duty.

Mrs. Moore was surprised and proud when her daughter Lillian announced on Valentine's day in 1941 that she had enlisted in the army. She packed her suitcase and went off to Fort Sheridan and by the summer was transferred to Fort Dix in New Jersey.

Today Mr. and Mrs. Moore pore over geographies at home and wonder where Lillian is stationed. For months she served in Iceland. A first letter came from that windy outpost a year ago this month.

Saved from Wind.

In April she wrote, "the weather up here is almost as cold as it was in January. They say the icebergs are breaking up and sending the cold down here."

The wind was so strong she was almost blown into the sea but was gallantly rescued by a soldier. For a daughter in the army, mother and father send cosmetics. "In Iceland a 10 cent box of cleaning tissues cost 50 cents," wrote Lillian. "A 10 cent bottle of nail polish costs a dollar. Send any kind of hosiery you can find. I can't buy silk or nylon here."

Mrs. Moore complains that her daughter's letters are always empty. For pages she will go on in a verbal supposition about how things are at home. What she is doing is completely omitted. Friends tell Mrs. Moore the reason is the personal censorship that Lillian imposes on herself.

Too Cold for Bottle Hose.

The personal things are completely lacking in Second Lieut. Moore's letters. She did confide one time that a nurse had received from home a bottle of brown lotion to be used in lieu of silk stockings. The girls all doctored their legs and then went out into the wind. "We almost froze to death," she reported.

The Moore family is sending Lillian cosmetics for Christmas. Last July her parents mailed a birthday present.

CHRISTMAS SEAL SALE WILL OPEN HERE TOMORROW

Local Chairmen Named for North Suburbs.

Predicting a wartime rise in tuberculosis because of bad housing facilities, irregular hours, worry and shortage of welfare workers, Homer J. Buckley, president of the Tuberculosis Institute of Chicago and Cook county, has designated tomorrow as the official opening date of the 1942 Christmas Seal sale.

The seal this year, designed by Dale Nichols of Glenview, is a rural scene featuring a sleigh ride and patriotically using the colors red, white and blue. The annual drive in the northwest area is a part of the national campaign in which 1,700 affiliated tuberculosis associations thruout the United States, the Canal Zone, Alaska, and Puerto Rico participate.

The sale provides funds used in this area to carry on case finding by means of tuberculin testing and x-ray, provides public health nurses who work with individual families, finances an educational program which includes literature, motion pictures and lectures for schools and public groups, and maintains an average of 21 public health clinics per month.

"We have a greater task ahead of us this year than ever before in the 36 year history of the Christmas seal drive, since tuberculosis always spreads more rapidly and among more persons in a nation at war," said Mr. Buckley.

Christmas seal campaign chairmen have been appointed in the various communities to promote the sale. In the northwest area they are Mrs. Marjorie B. Allen, Arlington Heights; Mrs. Howard R. Brintlinger, Barrington; Mrs. William Koehler, Des Plaines; Dr. J. B. Deutsch, Elmwood Park, and Mrs. F. S. Hayles, Park Ridge.

ABBOTT WORKERS PUSHING PAY ROLL DEDUCTION PLAN

Employés of Abbott Laboratories, North Chicago, have started a voluntary drive which they expect will result in all 3,000 of the plant's workers joining the 10 per cent war bond club.

Not satisfied with only half of the employés belonging to the pay roll allotment plan whereby 10 per cent of a salary is taken out each pay day by the company, 87 workers made plans for a drive which was started last week. Walter Hoffman of Waukegan is chairman and Miss Lorraine Henderson of Lake Forest is co-chairman.

Other members of the committee are Roy Hansen, Virginia Hamm, Dorothy Graff, Bernice Johnson, Cora Blazon, Dorothy Seybold, Loretta Kennedy, Lorraine Danielson, Arcelle Turk, Grace Baron, and Mack Beeman. S. DeWitt Clough, president, has consented to the plan.

Inspiration for the drive came when Abbott Laboratories was awarded the Army-Navy E pennant for its participation in the war effort.

Collects Her Dolls from Many Nations

DOLLS OF MANY LANDS TELL OF PATTY'S TRAVEL

Schurz High Junior Has Picturesque Group.

History floats like a wraith over the heads of several dolls which are members of Patty Hagey's little family of adults and babes from many nations.

Patty, 16, who is a Schurz High school junior and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George L. Hagey, 3900 North Kildare avenue, has visited Mexico eight times, attended high school there for one year, and has taken trips to Europe, Canada, Cuba, and sections of the United States.

Like Dorothy from Kansas who traveled in the mythical land of Oz, Patty has made good friends among all the peoples she has visited. Many have accompanied her back to America.

Contrast to Homelands.

There are the boys and girls from Europe, for instance, who were charmed by the smiling American girl. Well dressed, confident, the European children are in strange contrast to the stories coming today from their beleaguered countries. One could, if one wished, almost believe that present day human counterparts floated ghostily beside them, whispering: "Yes, look at us in our glory, as we were in 1937 when Patty Hagey and her father and mother came to visit our countries."

Imperious Vlasta from Prague, Czecho-Slovakia, stamps her foot in its black leather boot, and demands with 1937 forthrightness and freedom: "See my red bolero, my lace cap, and handsome skirt. Do I not look fine?" Elise, jeune fille from Alsace-Lorraine, who was in Paris when Patty Hagey walker into a doll shop, cries: "Ah, see my pretty costume and the tricolor I wear in my headdress. Was there ever anything finer?" and she lowers her long lashed eyes disarmingly demure.

Pig Goes to Market.

Plantin and Jeanne from Brussels, Belgium, cling hand in hand. "Tip tap," Jeanne sings, and clatters her wooden shoes in a little dance. Tony and Maria were on their way to market in Florence, Italy, when Patty met them. Tony with a pink felt pig under his arm turns an angelic face toward equally angelic Maria, "Now, Maria," he commands, "watch the fighting cock while we go with the little Americano." Maria hugs the big felt rooster closely.

Over in England, Reggie, the Buckingham palace guard, stands stiffly at attention. King George in uniform passes by. When Patty first met King George he was in Winnipeg, but consented to accompany her to Chicago. There he met two British tars, who saluted smartly, their hands touching caps printed "Duchess of Atholl and Empress of Australia," the ships on which the Hageys traveled to and from Europe.

Tall Indian Warrior.

The Tall Man's club in Patty's collection includes King George, a Chinese bridegroom, a Blackfoot Indian, and two upper class Mexicans. The Indian, Pilkaman, or Running Eagle, has beady black eyes peering forth from a wrinkled face made of a dried apple, cured for a month by the Blackfoot Indians of Montana. The Chinese gentleman in his satin robes is Patty's most expensive doll. He came from Los Angeles, Cal.

Patty's grandmother, Mrs. L. F. Blakeman of St. Cloud, Fla., has contributed two Negro field hands, a black mamm and her mate whose faces are painted on black rubber nipples. Sixty years ago when Mrs. Blakeman went to a church bazar she was given a Japanese shogun doll. It is now in her granddaughter's collection.

Made on the principle of a "tea cozy," an "egg-warmer" doll has a heavy wool skirt which drops over a circle of warm eggs at the breakfast table. It is a sprightly addition tendered by an 80 year old friend.

Elegant Cuban Dancers.

Guatemala is represented by a colorful pair—the man with machete, hoe, cheeses, and produce in a wooden crate, and the woman with a basket of nuts on her head. Fernando and Keta of Cuba are slim, elegant creatures fashioned of black silk, who wear graceful dance costumes. The Moslem lady from Sind, India, is silently withdrawn into contemplation, mistily enwrapped in a thin cerise veil edged with gold.

Patty has purchased all her dolls with her own savings. She had added tremendously to her knowledge of foreign countries, she says. Immediately upon arrival at home, Patty has gone to a library to seek a suitable name for her new doll and to read up on its country.

RED CROSS WORK GOES ON IN BOX CAR CLUBHOUSE

Idea Once Scorned Now Is Praised in Bensenville.

There was a time when the village board of Bensenville had a row with the Milwaukee Railway Woman's club. "Build a clubhouse out of old box cars in their town? Nothing doing," said the village board.

The women won. Today the box car clubhouse on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad right of way also is used as the headquarters for the Bensenville Red Cross and the sturdy 40 foot car bodies have lost their identity in the little bungalow where 92 volunteer workers put in 1,239 hours a month sewing and making bandages.

Red Cross workers can put their arms out of the clubhouse windows and touch the trains as they go roaring by. The workers stop talking until the whistling scream of the streamliners is still. Between Center street and York road the little clubhouse has become the village's place for parties, club meetings, and now Red Cross war work.

First Meeting in 1924.

The Milwaukee Railway Woman's club had its initial meeting on Oct. 30, 1924, and Mrs. W. F. Ingraham was first president. Her husband was assistant superintendent of Chicago terminals for the railroad. The club members were all wives, sisters, or mothers of the railroad employés and the purpose of the club was to help employés financially in time of illness or death in the family. After meeting for a while in the homes of the members, the club asked the railroad management for a clubhouse.

The railroad management granted the request in the form of two 40 foot cars which they set side by side along the railroad. Leo Denz, chief carpenter of the railroad, converted the cars into a little bungalow with rows of windows, a peaked roof, a kitchen, and a comfortable lodge hall. W. F. Ingraham and Joe Bodenberger, general master mechanic, helped with the project.

The railroad gave the women some fine plush furniture discarded from the Pullman cars and some dishes from the railroad's diners. The plush furniture today is pushed aside all day Tuesdays and on Friday evenings to make way for the work tables of the Red Cross unit of which Mrs. Jesse O. Capoot is general chairman.

Son Is in Army.

Mrs. Capoot also is a charter member of the Milwaukee Woman's club. Her son is First Lieut. Lowell Capoot, serving in the reconnaissance division of the United States army. Her assistants are Mrs. Marguerite Oakes, chairman of surgical dressings, and Mrs. Alice Harney, subchairman of Red Cross for the Milwaukee club.

Another service to the community in the box car clubhouse is the library—the only public library in town. Residents borrow books on Tuesday nights and Mrs. Estelle Newcomer serves as librarian. There are 1,667 books in the library.

And another sign of the times is the fully equipped first aid cupboard in the clubhouse. The one time box car also is serving Bensenville as a subfirst aid station in case of air raid or accidents during black-out.

Army Air Cadet Takes Bride

Cadet and Mrs. Leonard B. Kwiatkowski were married recently in Santa Ana, Cal. The bride is the former Loretta E. Bartha, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Bartha, 4720 Addison street. Cadet Kwiatkowski, who is in the army air force, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley P. Kwiatkowski, Elmwood Park.

JENSEN CHILDREN MARK CENTENARY OF LATE PARENTS

A unique event recently was the gathering of Jensen kinfolk in the old John Jensen residence, 3843 North Tripp avenue, to honor the 100th anniversaries of the births of John Jensen, an early Chicago builder, and his wife, Sabine, in Denmark in November, 1842.

Altho both John and Sabine Jensen died several years ago, this month marks the 50th year of residence in the Irving Park home for the Jensen family. Charles H. Jensen, a son, and his two sisters, Emma and Lilian, live in the house. Charles, who was struck by the coincidence of the 100th and 50th anniversaries falling within the same month and year, suggested the pre-Thanksgiving fête.

Elmer C. Jensen, South Haven, Mich., architect, was named "Master of the House" for the day. With his brothers, Clarence A. of Park Ridge, and Charles, he retold stories of family events.

John Jensen was born in Schlagelse, Denmark, and his wife in Copenhagen. They were married in Chicago in 1865 and had nine children, five of whom are living. Many of the older Chicago storefronts bear his name in stone letters.

THREE WOMEN TO TALK BEFORE NORTH END CLUB

Ida Carauthers Merriam, psychologist and dramatic teacher; Mary Berkeimer Quinn, Chicago lawyer, and Irene B. Reidy, club woman, will speak tomorow before the North End Woman's club in the clubhouse, 6200 Sheridan road.

Mrs. Merriam will speak on "Youth in Home Defense." Mrs. Quinn, who also is chairman of the Cook county council of the Legion auxiliary, will talk on "Important War Legislation" and Miss Reidy will talk on "Women's Activities in War Work."

The three talks will be preceded by a parliamentary law class, current events at 11 o'clock and luncheon at noon. The program will be in charge of Mrs. Edgar B. Penny, chairman of American citizenship, and Mrs. David H. Jackson, legislative chairman.

The Falconer PTA is working in conjunction with the club women of Belmont park, Gethsemane church and St. Peter's church.

The production unit is open from 9 until 3:30 o'clock on Thursdays in room 312 of the school, 3000 North Lamon avenue. Mrs. O. E. Ecklund is chairman with Mrs. B. G. Johnson as co-chairman. Mrs. Carl Hendricks is in charge of sewing and Mrs. Harry Waghorne is in charge of knitting. In charge of surgical dressings is Mrs. Emil Kellar and Mrs. Sigwald Grunlee is her co-chairman. Mrs. Chester Wellman is treasurer and Mrs. R. F. Jacobson, secretary and registrar.

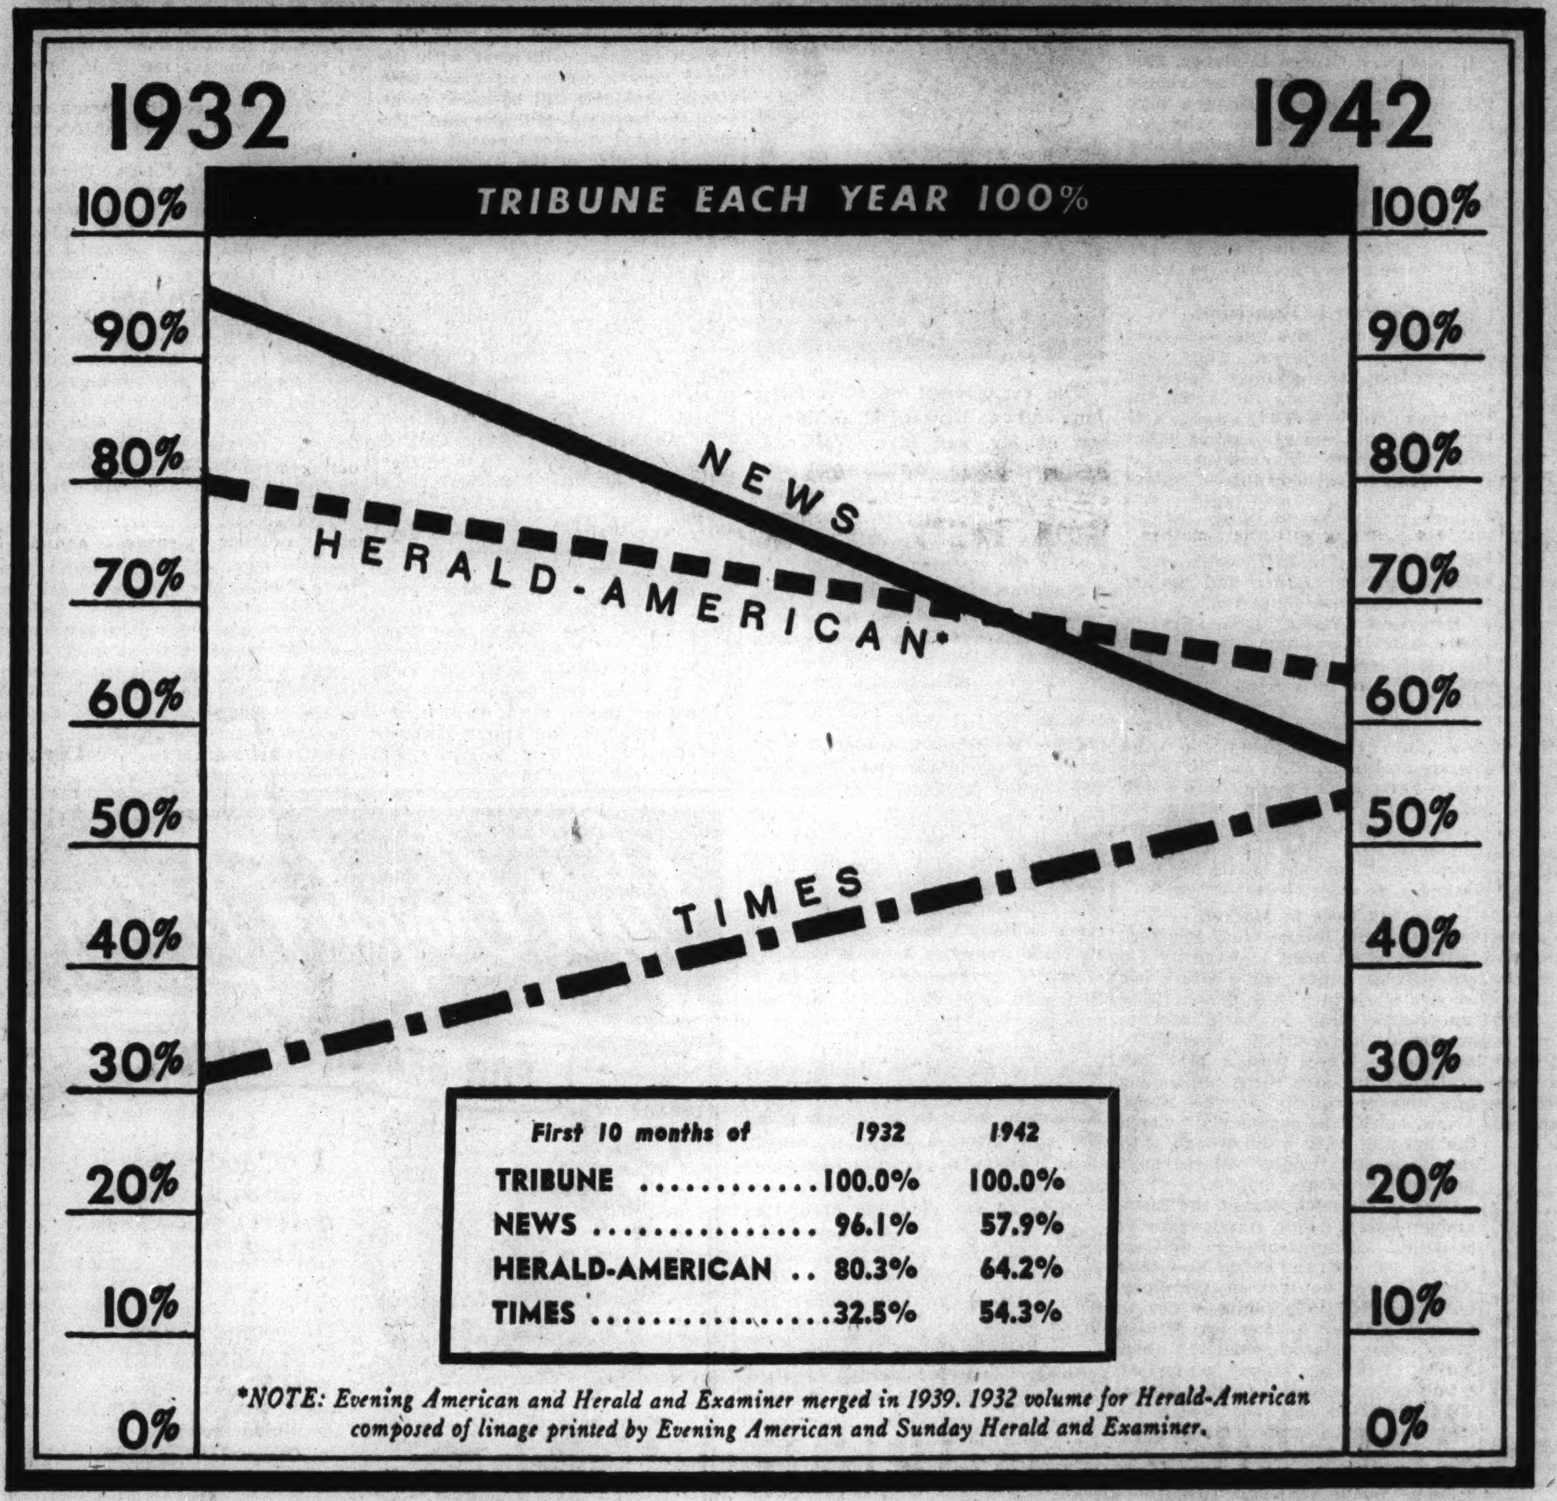
Chicago's Retail Advertising Picture

10 YEARS AGO and TODAY

Charted here is a picture of interest to every merchant and manufacturer determined to get full value from his advertising funds in the Chicago market.

Relation of volumes of Retail Advertising carried by Other Chicago Newspapers TO THE VOLUME CARRIED BY THE TRIBUNE

FIRST 10 MONTHS 1932—1942



THE CHART compares the relation of the volumes of retail advertising linage carried by other Chicago newspapers to the volume carried by the Tribune during the first ten months of 1932 and during the similar period of 1942.

In the 1932 period, for every 1,000 lines of retail advertising printed by the Tribune—

the News printed 96.1% as much, or . . . 961 lines
the Herald-American printed 80.3% as much, or . . . . 803 lines
the Times printed 32.5% as much, or . . . 325 lines

Contrast this with the record for the first ten months of 1942. For every 1,000 lines of retail advertising printed by the Tribune—

the Herald-American printed 64.2% as much, or . . . . 642 lines
the News printed 57.9% as much, or . . . 579 lines
the Times printed 54.3% as much, or . . . 543 lines

The News lost 2,088,320 lines, or 32.3%.

The Herald-American lost 547,278 lines, or 10.1%.

The growing leadership of the Tribune as Chicago's most productive medium for retailers is further accented by the fact that during the first ten months of the year they placed in the Tribune more of their advertising budgets than they placed in any two other Chicago newspapers combined.

This record makes plain that a newspaper produces for advertisers in proportion to the number and kind of readers it attracts and the interest and confidence with which they read it.

Tribune Circulation Up 25%

Tribune week-day circulation* during the past 10 years increased from 825,980 to 1,030,848—a gain of 204,868, or 24.8%. The Tribune's lead over the Herald-American, which was second in week-day circulation both in 1932 and in 1942, increased from 324,081, or 64.6%, to 555,691, or 116.9%.

Sunday Tribune circulation shows a similar upsurge. Sunday Tribune net paid* increased from 1,019,519 to 1,242,978—a gain of 223,459, or 21.9%.

In 1932, the Herald and Examiner led the Tribune in Sunday circulation by 9,813 copies, or 1.0%. In 1942, the Sunday Tribune led the Sunday Herald-American, which was second in Sunday circulation, by 322,209, or 35.0%.

When you can have more, why take less? With hundreds of thousands more circulation, daily and Sunday, than other Chicago newspapers, the Tribune is the one medium which delivers the breadth and penetration of coverage you need in order to get your full share of Chicago's stepped-up buying.

To make the most of your opportunities, build your program around the Tribune.

Average net paid circulation during the six-month periods ended March 31, 1932, and March 31, 1942*

SILVER JUBILEE OF TEMPLE BETH ISRAEL PLANNED

Gov. Green Talks Sunday at $25 a Plate Dinner.

The day after Thanksgiving one of the oldest Jewish congregations of Albany Park, Temple Beth Israel, 4850 Bernard street, will celebrate the first 25 years of its history. The anniversary service will be held at 8 o'clock Friday evening when Rabbi Jacob J. Weinstein, spiritual leader of K. A. M. temple will give the address.

Gov. Dwight Green will deliver the address at the $25 a plate dinner to be held at 6 o'clock next Sunday evening in the Red Lacquer room of the Palmer House. Jacob E. Yaffe is chairman of the silver jubilee committee and Mrs. Sam Diamond is co-chairman.

Temple Beth Israel was organized in the fall of 1917 by a few Jewish families who felt the need of religious activity in the Albany Park section to which they had recently moved. The temple is the first Jewish organization in that neighborhood. The Albany Park B'nai B'rith lodge and chapter of Hadassah were founded by its members.

Same Rabbi 23 Years.

The spiritual leader of Temple Beth Israel is Rabbi S. Felix Mendelsohn, a graduate of the Hebrew Union college and the University of Cincinnati. He is the first and only rabbi to serve the temple and was called to its pulpit in May, 1919. He is the author of three books, "The Jew Laughs," "Let Laughter Ring," and "Mental Healing in Judaism." For more than 15 years he was editorial writer for the Chicago Sentinel. He also is past president of the Chicago Rabbinical association.

After worshiping in rented halls, the congregation dedicated its own building in the spring of 1923 at Bernard and Ainslie streets. A three story school building was erected in the fall of 1928.

Serves 500 Families.

The temple ministers to 500 families. Its affiliated organizations include a sisterhood, men's club, a young people's group known as Temple center, a community chorus, a junior choir and Boy and Girl Scout troops. The Hebrew and Sunday school are supervised by the board of Jewish education.

Officers of Temple Beth Israel are Theodore W. David, honorary president; Reuben Berman, president; Jacob E. Yaffe and Nathan S. Kier, vice presidents; Sam Moses, treasurer; Oscar Hollander, financial secretary; Joseph M. Schneiderman, recording secretary. Mrs. William B. Levy is president of the sisterhood, Eugene Rothbaum is men's club president and Jerome Greenberg is president of Temple center.

Clarence L. Richter and Milton G. Manasse are in charge of music. Eunice Greenberg and Shulamith Burman direct the junior choir and Katherine Eulenberg is principal of the Sunday school. Sarah Liebenson is principal of the Hebrew school, and Edith B. Rashkin is executive secretary.

WASP DISASTER DIVIDES TWINS—BUT NOT FOR LONG

A West Side Pair Tells Tale of Attack.

Edward and Charles Lutze, 19 year old twins, of 520 North Wayne avenue, who enlisted in the marines here last March, came back a few days ago to tell what their service career has included since last spring. Edward is a graduate of Lake View High school, and Charles of St. Michael's High school.

They were aboard the United States aircraft carrier Wasp when it was torpedoed by a Jap sub last Sept. 15. With all that followed the moment three torpedoes plowed into the side of the carrier, they were somehow able to get together—tho they were not reunited until two days after the carrier went down.

Both Machine Gunners.

On a three week furlough, which they are spending with their mother, Mrs. Ann Lutze, the youths have separate stories to tell. Both, however, were in the marine detachment aboard the vessel, and both were assigned to machine gun posts.

Charles, the shorter of the two, was reading in his chain suspended bunk when the first torpedo hit. The chain broke and he was dropped to the floor. Running on deck, he heard the command to abandon ship just before another torpedo roared thru the hull of the carrier.

Charles went down one side of the vessel on a rope, Edward down the other. They were not afraid, they say, because a circle of American destroyers ringed the carrier. Edward got into a life raft, which kept filling with water. After three hours, he was picked up with others by a destroyer.

Tossed by Blasts.

At about the same time, Charles was swimming in the high waves. The water bubbled all about him as depth charges from allied forces sought to destroy the sub. In a short time Charles was picked up by another destroyer.

Two days later the brothers met on a cruiser to which they were transferred. They had suffered only from shock. Given a furlough, they headed at once for home.

"We were pledged to secrecy about the Wasp," Edward said. "But now we can talk, and boy, that really is something to talk about."

FUTURE CITIZENS SHOW TO HONOR TRADE STUDENTS

Washburne Is on W-G-N Program Today.

Washburne Trade school and how it trains youths to enter the fields of industry will be described at 1 o'clock this afternoon on W-G-N's half hour recorded program, "Citizens of Tomorrow." James B. McCahey, president of the Chicago board of education, will be the principal speaker, outlining the school's 24 hour a day vocational program which was instituted 10 years ago.

He will be introduced by the master of ceremonies, Philip Maxwell of The Tribune's editorial staff. The Washburne chorus, directed by Peter A. Cavalla Jr., will sing two numbers, "We're All Americans," by J. T. Mangan, and "I Want to Be Happy," by Youmans. Six hundred Washburne students will join the chorus in the school song, "The Washburne Way."

Clarence Markus, Washburne senior student, and Miss Margaret Johnson, senior at Central High school, Lansing, Mich., will be added to the program's honor roll. Markus will be interviewed by Maxwell.

Jerry and Jimmy, the show's two comedian students played by Beryl Vaughan and Bob Jellison, will report on a tour thru Washburne Trade school. The program was recorded Wednesday in the W-G-N studio.

Guests Are Introduced.

A number of special guests attended the recording and were introduced to the 800 Washburne students who attended. The guests were Dr. William H. Johnson, superintendent of schools; Philip L. McNamee, assistant superintendent in charge of vocational education; Wilson Frankland, member of the board of education; Oscar W. Rosenthal, president of the National Association of Building Trades; Samuel I. Levin and Mrs. L. Robert Mellin of the board of education; William Finkl, chairman of the educational committee, National Metal Trades association; Patrick Sullivan, president of the Chicago Building Trades council; Charles C. Pulich, national chairman of research and production, Merchant Tailors and Designers Association of America, and Miss Sidonia Fried, organizer of the United Hatters, Cap, and Millinery Workers International union.

Others will be Joseph Seppi, president of the Council of Pressroom Workers; Charles A. Livingston, public relations director of Illinois Manufacturers' association; Abraham Heller, executive director, Chicago Association of Dress Manufacturers; William J. Hennessy, manager, convention bureau, Chicago Chamber of Commerce; Oscar G. Mayer, member of the board of directors and senior council, Chicago Association of Commerce, and Walter Collins, secretary, Master Electrical Contractors' association.

Organized in 1917.

The school was started in 1917 when an abandoned school building at 655 West 14th street was made available for training industrial war workers. Shortly afterward it was used for the rehabilitation of disabled soldiers returning from the battle front. Later other departments were added and in 1934 it was moved to Sedgwick and Division streets.

In 1928 the training facilities of the school were opened to youth of high school age and in 1933 it was made co-educational. Organized labor groups and employer groups have worked with the school system to establish training facilities for the workers in their various fields. The school faculty has increased from a few men in 1919 to 135 members.

This Week in the Garden

Monday, Nov. 23

Remove garden furniture and equipment to the basement or shed. Drain all hose and hang it on a broad wooden hook in a cool place or roll it on one of the specially made outfits where it is not likely to be in the way of other equipment.

Never permit garden tools to enter winter quarters without being thoroly cleaned. Clean and oil the mowing machine and sharpen the cutting edge so it will be ready for use next spring.

Tuesday, Nov. 24

There is no economy in using the tops of perennials for mulching, for they may contain insects and disease. Clear up the entire garden, destroying the tops.

Hardwood leaves are excellent for mulching, but do not spread deeply over plants or they may smother and die. Rather draw the leaves up to and around the plants. All leaves not used for mulching should be combined with soil and a compost heap started.

Manures are frequently difficult to obtain, but artificial manures are becoming more frequent.

Wednesday, Nov. 25

If the ground is not frozen it is excellent practice to spade it and permit it to lie in the rough all winter. Sod ground is best fitted in this way, for when spring comes it will have decayed and be ready for planting.

Do not dig so deep that the subsoil is turned on top, but increase the depth by spading a little deeper each spading.

Thursday, Nov. 26

Prune vines by cutting out the diseased wood. Doing this work after the vines start in spring disturbs them and is likely to injure the young wood.

Cut back the Hydrangea paniculata grandiflora [the Peegee Hydrangea], leaving two to four buds on the the shoots. Spiraea Anthony Waterer can be cut to the ground or within six inches. Tamarisk can be cut back severely to keep it low and in bush form. If allowed to grow rampant it becomes ungainly and ill shaped.

Friday, Nov. 27

The growing of plants in homes is sufficient to keep the gardener busy thruout the winter and the vast variety that is available gives every indoor gardener an opportunity to have a fine collection.

Saturday, Nov. 28

Flowering pot plants should never be allowed to suffer from a lack of water. They will last longer if placed in a cool room at night. Most flowering plants require sun, while foliage plants do well in shade or partial shade.

Excellent effects can be obtained by using ornamental jardinieres, but water should not be allowed to stand in them or the plants will suffer because of saturated soil.

REMODEL DUPLEX INTO SMALL WAR WORKERS' UNITS

Compact Quarters Draw Tenants' Attention.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

Not long ago a very interesting—and patriotic—piece of work was completed in a two story greystone apartment duplex at 3253 Flournoy street.

Mrs. Katherine Kleppel and her daughter, Katharine, decided to remodel the upstairs seven room apartment of their building into two smaller apartments for war workers. They knew their residence was in a neighborhood serving many defense plants and factories and a plumbing contractor told them they would be eligible for priority assistance.

So they filled out the necessary forms and the work began. Before it was completed the new apartment had been rented to a war worker and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Scalzitti. The original renters of the apartment continued to occupy the balance of the former apartment.

Built-in Fixtures Please.

The Scalzittis are pleased with their new apartment and they like the compactness of their three rooms and bath, the efficient sink with its wooden cabinets, built to order, and the good looking bathroom with modern fixtures, including built-in tub with overhead shower.

The plumbing contractor handled the entire work of creating two small apartments out of the one large flat, and he and Miss Kleppel planned the arrangements. He also took the responsibility of getting the carpenters, plasterers, electricians, and decorators.

The seven room apartment had consisted of a front parlor and bedroom alcove, a living room, a large dining room, kitchen, two bedrooms and a bathroom.

Remove Fretted Archway.

The new apartment was created at the front and the alcove bedroom off the parlor was closed up to make a complete bedroom with a door opening into the new apartment living room. A fretted archway between parlor and living room was removed and the opening arched to separate the living room and the kitchen dinette.

To provide for a bathroom the plumbing contractor suggested building a new room to open off the kitchen, which would take part of the space of the old living room. The new room for the bath was 5½x7 feet and the remaining space provided an L-shaped room for the kitchen-dinette.

Red Accents in Kitchen.

All the fixtures in the bathroom and kitchen are white. Accents of red against the white cabinets, sink, range, and refrigerator highlight the equipment and black linoleum cabinet tops. The floor linoleum is black and grey with red. Pink and blue accessories make the bathroom attractive.

The woodwork of the new living room and bedroom was painted entirely white and the floors refinished. A new bathroom radiator, one of the modern midget wall-hung models, was installed, and the positions of radiators in the present kitchen-dinette were changed; a change for the better since the radiator in the kitchen is now under a window.

Original Tenants Satisfied.

The couple who occupied the original apartment did not need so much room and are quite satisfied with the remaining apartment which now consists of four rooms.

The former large dining room has had its buffet removed and now it is the living room. The bedrooms are the same and the kitchen and the bathroom continue to have the same fixtures. Redecoration in the kitchen, however, has made it useful and attractive as a kitchen-dinette.

In grateful appreciation of past favors, we have within our hearts a feeling warm and true, I guess you'd call it thankfulness for the privilege of serving you.

MUTUAL TO AIR NEWS COMMENTS BY UPTON CLOSE

W-G-N Carries First Talk at 4:15 Today.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

Upton Close, who has been called the Marco Polo of news commentators, will begin a new series of broadcasts over W-G-N and 55 other stations of the Mutual Broadcasting system from 4:15 to 4:30 p. m. today. The first of Close's comments on the news over Mutual will come from New York. Subsequent broadcasts will come from Chicago, New York and San Francisco, in that order.

Close has a colorful background. He has had more than a quarter century of experience in the far east and other Pacific regions. He was born Josef Washington Hall in Kelso, Washington, and spent much of his childhood on an Indian reservation along the Columbia river.

An Investigator for United States.

After graduating from George Washington university he went to China as an investigating officer for the United States in Shantung during the Japanese invasion from 1916 to 1919.

As advisor to the Chinese student revolutionaries in Peking in 1919 and as chief of foreign affairs for the Peking Leader, reputed to be the oldest newspaper in the world, Close had an opportunity to travel extensively in all parts of China, Japan, Manchuria, and the South Pacific.

Close has contributed thousands of articles to magazines and newspapers on three continents. It was in connection with his work as a newspaper man that he acquired the name Upton Close. He signed his cabled dispatches UPCLOSE, which is simply "Close Up" when the syllables are reversed. Upton Close is an elaboration of Upclose.

Author of Book on Japan.

Between his travels, lectures, and journalistic endeavors Close has found time to write eleven books on adventure, history, romance, and biography.

His latest volume, recently published, "Behind the Face of Japan," is one of the important books dealing with the present war.

Close has been broadcasting off and on since 1924. This is his first series for Mutual. He appears on NBC's News of the World roundups at 6:15 p. m. Monday and Wednesday and is heard over WMAQ-NBC at 4:45 p. m. Saturdays and at 2:15 p. m. Sundays.

'BOHEMIAN GIRL' NEXT ON W-G-N THEATER OF AIR

Balfe's "Bohemian Girl," starring Marion Claire and Attilio Baggiore, will be presented on the Chicago Theater of the Air from 8 to 9 p. m. next Saturday on W-G-N and the Mutual network.

Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, will speak. Miss Claire will take the rôle of Arline, daughter of an Austrian nobleman. Baggiore will portray the singing rôle of Thaddeus, an exiled Polish rebel. Supporting the principals will be Bruce Foote and Earl Wilkie. Foote will sing the rôle of Arline's father, the Count of Arnheim, while Wilkie will portray the gypsy leader, Devilshoof.

Known for its melody rather than its plot, "Bohemian Girl" is the most popular of Balfe's many works. The libretto for the operetta was written by the nineteenth century poet. Bunn.

Musical background will be supplied by the W-G-N symphony orchestra directed by Henry Weber and by the chorus led by Robert Trendler. Kenneth MacGregor, W-G-N chief of production, will produce the program.

A full cast of actors will present the dramatic rôles of the operetta. Marvin Mueller will be the announcer.

On the initial program the two contesting teams will represent two very different walks of life. One team will be composed of dancing girls appearing in the "Priorities of 1942." The other team will consist of four members of the Tired Business Men's association. The program will be open to the public and a gala time will be offered.

ANOTHER STORY OF SLAVE PRESS ON W-G-N TODAY

Drama Shows Belgium as Bankers' Pawn.

The story of Belgium and how that nation was used as a pawn by international financiers working under the protection of a Nazi dominated press prior to her entry in the war, will be related by Stanley Johnston, Chicago Tribune war correspondent, on the "Mightier Than the Sword" program on W-G-N from 2:30 to 3 p. m. today

Johnston will tell how financiers in France sent iron ore to Germany for its steel stock piles, and how Germany, in return, sent fuel to France to run France's blast furnaces. Belgium, sandwiched between the two countries, was used as the traffic lane and goods were sent tax exempt.

Johnston will relate how the lid was knocked off this story by the slaying of a Belgian border guard who attempted to stop the Nazi truck transports. He will also tell how he tried to break the story to the Belgian press, only to be rebuffed by a Nazi agent posing as a newspaper editor.

The editor and his secretary tried to capture and slay Johnston thru a ruse, but the scheme back fired when Johnston escaped into Holland, from where he sent his story to the newspapers of America.

"Mightier Than the Sword" is written and produced by Jack La Frandre and features an all-star radio cast. Music on the program is by Robert Trendler and the W-G-N Symphony orchestra.

GLIDER TYROS NEAR CLOSE OF BASIC COURSE

'Silent Wings' Group to Be Advanced.

The first class to complete the eight week basic training course for glider pilots at the Englewood YMCA and Harlem airport will finish this week. The class has a membership of 17 men, and many of them had their first airplane rides when they began flight training at the airport.

These men in the "silent wings" branch of the service are enlisted in the army air corps reserve. They will be transferred after completion of their present course to a secondary school, where they will work with actual gliders.

Gliders are motorless aircraft, many of which are used in the transport of troops and equipment. This use was developed on the theory that airplanes, like horses, can pull greater loads than they can carry. Gliders were used successfully in World War II. when the German Luftwaffe carried troops in the 1941 seizure of Crete.

New Classes Delayed.

These 17 future glider pilots will be the last trained at Englewood and the Harlem airport for some time. Enlistments have been halted, and new army classes are not scheduled there until a later period.

The students are studying mathematics, physics, civil air regulations, navigation, general servicing and operation of aircraft, code radio, military and physical training, aircraft identification, military science and discipline, and meteorology at the Englewood YMCA.

Sidney Rosenberg, Highland Park, teaches civil air regulations, navigation and meteorology. The civil air regulations course deals with aerial traffic rules; navigation teaches the recruits how to read maps and instruments and how to navigate by "dead reckoning"; meteorology treats of weather conditions and climatic changes. Jesse T. Gudeman teaches radio code; Wendell E. Zimmers, 1315 West 82d street, military drill and science. The physics of aviation is under the direction of Lawrence F. Peterson, physics teacher at Calumet High school.

Trained for Flight.

A portion of the training program is devoted to teaching the future glider pilots how to fly. This is done at Harlem airport under the guidance of Carl Hellem, Jim Carey, Jack Thompson, and Joe Leckler. Fred L. Schumaker directs this program. Edmund Daly is the coördinator. The men are quartered at the YMCA and are accorded the use of its facilities.

They are from all sections of the city and from all types of work. Herbert Billmeyer, 21, 7151 Emerald avenue, was a communications electrician prior to his induction. Richard Crenshaw, 22, 318 West Normal Parkway, was an accountant; Walter F. Fasbinder, 20, 7204 Wabash avenue, a barber.

Former Traffic Clerk.

Harold F. Hinz, 20, 7511 Eggleston avenue, used to be a traffic clerk. Wilfred St. Germain, 21, 3522 South Mozart avenue, was an apprentice tool and die maker. James F. Weber, 5612 South Sawyer avenue, was an inspector in a war plant before his induction. Weber is 27 years old.

Two of the future glider operators are married. They are Nick Janakos, 1517 North Clark street, a chauffeur prior to his induction, and John Janovic Jr., 2025 North Laporte avenue. Other of the enlistees are Carl Marks, 1502 Jonquil terrace, salesman; George Novak Jr., 2651 Altgeld street, draftsman; Arthur Husted, 1810 West Jackson boulevard, salesman; George Crystal, Cleveland, O., salesman; Nicholas Gratz, Lexington, Ky., commercial artist; Paul Bowarchuk, 1732 West 14th street; William Reilly, Oak Park; John T. Sweeney, 6724 Stony Island avenue, advertising layout, and Thaddeus Zarkrzewski, 5645 Wilson avenue, metal worker. They will be rated staff sergeants upon completion of the secondary course.

Army Air Corps Reserves Get Basic Training as Glider Pilots on Southwest Side

Richard Crenshaw, 318 Normal parkway, and Walter Fasbinder, 7204 Wabash avenue, adjust their parachutes at the Harlem airport, where they are learning to fly, in the first step of their training as glider pilots. They are members of the army air corps enlisted reserve corps, completing their eight weeks' basic training this week. Classroom sessions are being held at the Englewood YMCA, where the future glider pilots are quartered.

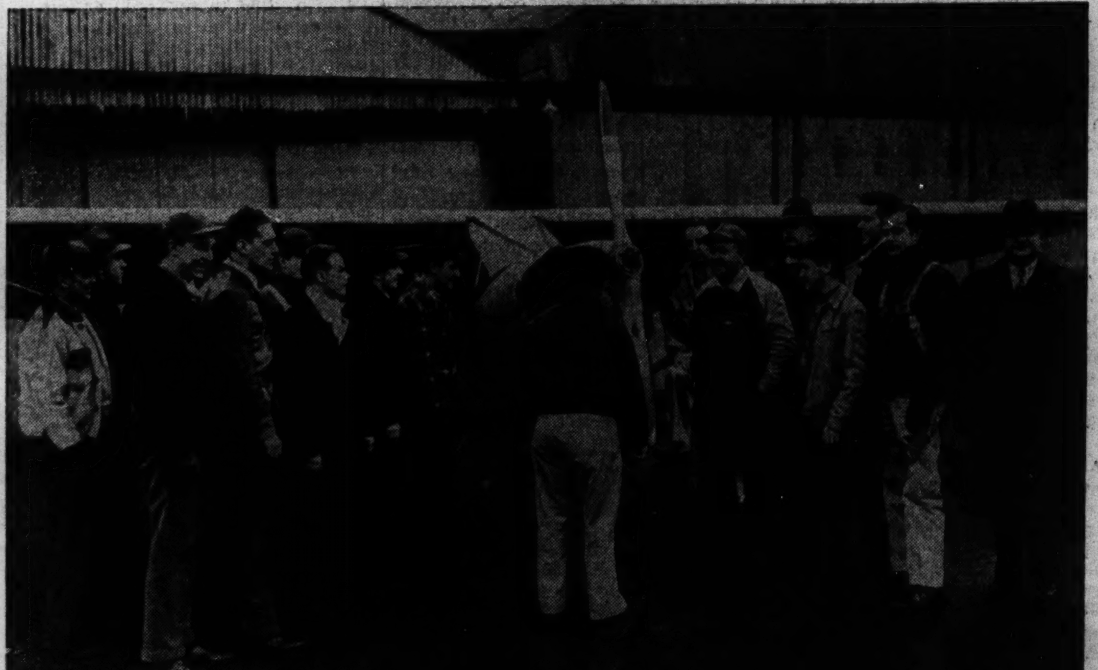
Fred Schumaker, commercial pilot, explains the intricate mechanisms of an airplane's body to Jim Weber, 5612 South Sawyer avenue, and Harold F. Hinz, 7511 Eggleston avenue. When members of this class complete the basic course they will be sent to a secondary glider school in southern California or Texas. After graduation they will be rated as staff sergeants and receive about $140 monthly.



"This, boys, is an airplane," instructors at the Harlem airport tell members of the glider pilot training class. Many of the recruits hadn't been up in an airplane until they enlisted.

SOUTHWEST SIDE CHURCHES PLAN UNION SERVICES

War Plants to Keep Production Going.

The annual observance of Thanksgiving will be accompanied Thursday by solemn prayer for the welfare of the nation and her fighting men. Srevices are scheduled thruout southwest Chicago in Protestant and Catholic churches. Masses of Thanksgiving are scheduled in the latter. The holiday's observance will be informal, in many cases, as defense industries thruout the area will mark it on a "praise the Lord, and pass the ammunition" basis.

The celebration of Thanksgiving goes back to colonial days, altho the first proclamation declaring it a holiday was issued in 1863 by President Lincoln.

One of the largest church observances will be staged in the Southtown area, when 39 Protestant churches unite for the 16th annual union Thanksgiving services. They will be held under auspices of the Southtown church YMCA coöperation program, the Rev. Stewart L. Rodgers, president of the Southtown Ministers' association, said.

Services in Englewood.

The united services in Englewood will be held at the Englewood Baptist church, 354 Normal parkway, and the Emerald Avenue Presbyterian church, 6701 Emerald avenue. The Rev. Unite at Elim Free Church.

Churches in Grand Crossing will unite under the leadership of the Rev. John A. Swanson of the Grace Baptist church. The joint services will be held at the Elim Free church, 121 East 78th street, at 10:30 o'clock Thursday morning. Participating in this service will be the Grand Crossing Mission, Elim Free, Elim Baptist, and Grace Baptist.

In Chicago Lawn services will be under direction of the Rev. L. Donald Bond of the Thomas Memorial Congregational church and will be held at the Chicago Lawn First Methodist church, 3510 West 63d place, at 7:45 o'clock Wednesday evening. The Rev. Rolland C. Stone will speak. Coöperating churches are Grace Evangelical, Thomas Memorial Congregational, Chicago Lawn Presbyterian, Chicago Lawn First Methodist, and Marquette Park Presbyterian.

Ogden Park churches will hold services at the Drexel Park Presbyterian church, 6353 South Marshfield avenue, under chairmanship of the Rev. Clinton C. Cox, at 10:30 o'clock Thursday morning. The Rev. W. F. Osborne will deliver the address. Other churches taking part will be the Ashland Church of Christ, Marlboro Presbyterian, Ogden Park Methodist, and Thoburn Methodist.

Services for Gage Park and Garfield Boulevard churches will be held at the Garfield Boulevard Methodist church, 717 West Garfield boulevard, at 8 o'clock Wednesday evening. The Rev. John A. Leimer, pastor, will preach at 8:10 and at 10:45 o'clock. Services at the same hour are scheduled for the Nazareth church, 60th street and Spaulding avenue, where the Rev. Herbert Kohn will preach. The Rev. Francis J. T. Frese will speak at Peace church, 43d street and California avenue, at 9 and 10:30 o'clock. Later other departments were added and in 1934 it was moved to Sedgwick and Division streets.

In 1928 the training facilities of the school were opened to youth of high school age and in 1933 it was made co-educational. WAR INCREASES NEED FOR FUNDS FROM SEAL SALE

Annual Yule Campaign Opens Tomorrow.

The 1942 Christmas seal sale to benefit tuberculosis victims will start tomorrow and continue thru Christmas, Homer J. Buckley, president of the Tuberculosis institute of Chicago and Cook county, announced. The institute is sponsor of the campaign in the metropolitan Chicago area.

Aiding in the drive are several southwest residents. These include Mrs. D. L. Sinise, 2439 Orchard street, Blue Island; C. C. Donovan, 63 Illinois street, Chicago Heights; Mrs. John P. Van Vorst Sr., East Hazelcrest; Mrs. Frank H. Letl, 1827 Maple street, Homewood; Mrs. Cyril Nelson, 27 Logan street, Lemont; Mrs. Henry Potrapka, 13905 Atlantic avenue, Riverdale, and Mrs. H. A. Birkholz, 15729 Paulina street, Harvey. Mrs. Richard M. Hallinan, 2310 East 70th place, has been appointed general seal chairman for Chicago.

Need Is Greater Now.

Buckley said there is greater need now than ever before to provide adequate funds to fight tuberculosis. "Wartime rises in the disease are common," he said, "and these are attributable to inadequate housing conditions, fatigue caused by long and irregular hours, worry, lack of sanitation, poor nutrition, and insufficient or lack of case finding and facilities for treatment." He added that there has been no increase in the infection here yet.

The annual drive here is part of the national campaign in which 1,700 affiliate tuberculosis associations in the United States, the Canal Zone, Alaska, and Puerto Rico participate. The funds derived from the seal sale are used to maintain a year round program of education, prevention, and clinics to control and reduce the disease.

Where Money Goes.

Funds collected in Chicago and Cook county, Buckley said, will carry on case finding by means of tuberculin testing and X-ray; provide public health nurses to work with individual families; finance an educational program which includes literature, motion pictures, and lectures for school and public groups, maintain public health clinics, and carry on a rehabilitation program to place ex-tubercular patients in useful jobs.

The Red Cross mobile blood donor unit will visit Harvey Wednesday and Thursday, Dec. 9 and 10. It will be stationed at the Whittier school. Appointments for blood donations are being accepted by Mrs. George Patterson, Harvey blood doner chairman. The unit visited Harvey last summer. Since that time, the capacity of the unit has been enlarged to handle 120 one pint donations daily. A second unit was put into operation last week. Over 13,000 persons have given their blood to the two units. Thruout the metropolitan Chicago area, 60,000 persons have given blood at the Red Cross blood donor station in Chicago. Present quotas call for 3,500 blood donations a week for the armed forces from the Chicago area. This is an increase of 300 per cent over the first quotas assigned here 10 months ago. Joseph H. King, chairman of the blood donor service, said this figure probably will be raised next year.

Home Service Helps Many Solve Problems.

"Send her one dozen roses," was the message the Red Cross received together with money from an anxious soldier at an embarkation point many miles from his wife in Chicago. The money was more than enough for one dozen and upon investigation by the Red Cross home service division two dozen were sent instead.

The anxious soldier had just become father of twins.

Not all messages received by the home service division at 616 South Michigan avenue are as poignant as that one, however. Staffed with a large group of highly trained social workers and approximately 40 volunteers, many of whom are from the north side, the division headquarters is open 24 hours a day receiving and sending messages, answering requests and making investigations. The workers and their volunteers are organized to render many services to the armed men; services not supplied by the army and navy but necessary for the maintenance of morale.

Hold Train 4 Minutes.

Once the Red Cross held a train four minutes so that a soldier might get back to camp before his furlough expired. Assisting stranded wives who have gone to visit their husbands in camp and have found themselves short of funds to get home is a common chore.

Often soldiers arrive in Chicago after the war department finance office is closed for the day and come to the South Michigan office to get personal checks cashed.

Looking after the servicemen's families, advancing money for emergencies and obtaining lawyers for legal matters are all in the scope of home service activities.

Money Blew Away.

One soldier came in and asked for a loan to purchase a return ticket back to camp. He said his had fallen from his pants pocket and blown out the hotel window.

Another soldier wanted to send $100 home in a hurry. The Red Cross field director wired the Chicago home service office which advanced the money to the family immediately. Several days later the check arrived from the soldier and the Red Cross was reimbursed.

Broken Romances.

Even broken romances are sometimes ministered to. One Chicago girl went to visit her soldier friend in camp only to find him married to another girl. The Red Cross field director put the visitor on a train home and wired the Chicago office to meet her at the station. The train arrived but she wasn't on it. Several days were spent in tracing her to a friend's home and in getting her home safely again.

Occasionally requests are turned down. One of these was from a clothes conscious soldier who had bought more uniforms than he had money for.

Camps are equipped with field directors whose jobs are to listen to the service men's personal problems. They then relay messages and requests on to the "home front" which in Chicago is the 24 hour home service division.

Busy 24 Hours a Day.

Twenty four hours a day, volunteers are busy at the office, doing clerical work, checking reports, taking messages and running errands for the large staff of specialized workers. In peace times many of these same women would be planning bridge parties, teas, and other social events.

The home service division uses an average of 10 cars each day from the motor corps to investigate home conditions and reported illnesses in the homes of service men.

ILLINOIS TECH'S SAFETY COURSE TRAINS 1,012 MEN

But Industrial Accidents Still Show Increase.

With 1,500 students now undergoing instruction, the Illinois Institute of Technology is directing the largest industrial safety training program in history. Last year the institute supervised the training of 1,012 men in safety procedures, representing 300 Chicago plants. This was nearly one-quarter the number trained in all the safety schools of the nation.

While the institute no longer trains the great percentage of the national total it did last year, it stil lhas one of the largest of the nation's programs.

Despite the efforts of these groups institute officials predict that this year 26,000 men, 20 to 45 years old, will meet death—not on the battlefield—but on the industrial front.

Hold Free Classes.

Tuition free safety classes were started by the institute last year thru the coöperation of the National Committee for the Conservation of Manpower in War Industries and the Greater Chicago Safety council. The plan of instruction and the courses outlined were adopted on a nationwide scale. Both major labor union groups coöperated in getting the classes under way.

One of the most important features of the instruction plan, according to institute officials, is the group of inspectors who visit the classes each week to prevent the instructor from dwelling too long on his specialty.

Meet in Public Schools.

Classes are held thruout the city. With the coöperation of the board of education, classroom space has been made available at the following schools: Austin, 231 North Pine avenue; Crane Technical High school, 2245 Jackson boulevard; Carl Schurz, 3601 Milwaukee avenue; Fenger, 11220 Wallace avenue; Harrison, 2850 24th boulevard; Lane Technical High school, 2501 West Addison street, and Tilden Technical High school, 4747 Union avenue.

The goal of the program is to get at least one trainee from every war plant in this area. Management or workers interested in the next classes, which will start early in 1943, should contact the war training office of the institute at 43 West 33d street.

Reports from the first trainees have just been received by Dr. J. I. Yellott, head of the war training committee, which administers the program. They indicate that where the companies coöperate with the trainees definite progress is made in the reduction of accidents. The Institute has employed a safety engineer to check accidents in its laboratories and workshops.

30,000 Are Killed.

Stressing the need for an increase in safety training, institute officials reported that industrial accidents claimed more lives the first six months of the year than did Axis bombings of Britain in three years. Since Pearl Harbor, not including casualties of the African campaign 48,956 persons have been reported killed, wounded, or missing. During the same period industrial accidents claimed the lives of 30,000 persons, kith 2,500,000 injured.

A slight improvement of the accident rate in Chicago is shown for the last six months. The rate was 7.5 serious lost-time accidents per million man hours worked, a slight decrease from 1941 figures.

SPEAKERS TALK ABOUT TALKING RECORDS OF TEN

Toastmasters Club Gives 400 Talks.

Four hundred speeches in less than six months is something to talk about, and members of the Toastmasters' club are talking enthusiastically about 10 of their fellows who collectively made this record. Their speaking was done at functions sponsored by or participated in by the Office of Civilian Defense all over the south side.

Over 200 of these were at flag dedications. The record establishers are John Ale, Herbert H. Andresen, Roland Bacheler, Jackson Bedler, Louis Brockhoff, Walter De Has, James P. Doyle, Herman Seinwerth, John Wilhelm, and Herman Meyer, Doyle, a past president of the Toastmasters' club, is credited with having made most of the speeches.

They Like to Talk.

The OCD was pleased to find some one able and willing to speak at patriotic functions. These 10 were eager for an opportunity to talk in public.

The club is now in its fourth year. It was organized to aid men interested in learning to speak effectively. It meets on the first and third Thursday of every month at the Englewood YMCA, for dinner and speaking sessions. The speaking sessions feature 10, five and three minute addresses by members, who then subject themselves to the criticism of a professional speaker or other members.

Ocassionally, too, the club stages a heckling session, where members try to maintain calm in the face of interruption by the members. Andresen said that members have to prepare to meet a situation like this "because it happens all too often."

All YMCA Members.

The membership is limited to 30, and now there are 28 members. All, too, are members of the Englewood YMCA, a prerequisite for membership in the club. The Toastmasters' is an international association, with chapters thruout the country and in Canada.

The club has just received an invitation from a South Chicago contingent of steel workers and business people desiring to learn to talk. Andresen and some of the other members are going out Thursday, Dec. 3 and tell them about the Englewood Toastmasters' group.

Les Tremayne and Barbara Luddy will be the co-stars of the drama written for the Little Theater off Times Square by Irvin Ashkenazy. Tremayne will be cast in the rôle of the army captain while Miss Luddy will play the rôle of his sweetheart. Musical background for the drama will be supplied by Eric Sagerquist and his orchestra.

OPEN FRIENDSHIP HOUSE; THIRD IN NORTH AMERICA

Dedicated to the Catholic church ideal of "the brotherhood of man and the Fatherhood of God" an interracial community center, Friendship house, recently was opened on the south side at 305 East 43d street. This is the third house of its type to be established.

Baroness Catherine De Hueck, who was born in Russia and saw her family's fortune wiped out in the revolution, is the sponsor of the three houses. One is in Toronto, Canada, and the other in Harlem, New York City.

The first house was organized more than 10 years ago in Toronto by the baroness, who had found refuge in Canada following the Russian revolution. She explained that in part its formation was prompted to offset subversive elements which were making inroads in the city's slums.

In 1937, when somewhat the same situation arose among the Negroes of Harlem, she related, the Catholic church invited her to open a Friendship house there. This house began as a one room apartment, which also served as living quarters for the baroness.

Baroness de Hueck was invited to Chicago by Bishop Bernard Sheil. Unable to leave Harlem, Ann Harrigan and Ellen Tarry, one white and one Negro girl, were sent to open the house. One of its principal aims is to promote better understanding between the races. Among the activities will be weekly forums, study clubs, labor school, consumer-coöperative groups, mothers' clubs, youth groups, games, dancing classes, glee clubs, story hours, sewing classes, and a dramatic club.

Miss Tarry, a native of Birmingham, Ala., lived in New York City for 13 years and was a reporter on a Negro paper. She has contributed to Catholic periodicals and is the author of two juvenile books. Miss Harrigan, who formerly taught English in Cleveland, O., has been connected with the National Conference of Christians and Jews for the last few years.

MUTUAL TO AIR NEWS COMMENTS BY UPTON CLOSE

W-G-N Carries First Talk at 4:15 Today.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

Upton Close, who has been called the Marco Polo of news commentators, will begin a new series of broadcasts over W-G-N and 55 other stations of the Mutual Broadcasting system from 4:15 to 4:30 p. m. today. The first of Close's comments on the news over Mutual will come from New York. Subsequent broadcasts will come from Chicago, New York, and San Francisco, in that order.

Close has a colorful background. He has had more than a quarter center of experience in the far east and other Pacific regions. He was born Josef Washington Hall in Kelso, Washington, and spent much of his childhood on an Indian reservation along the Columbia river.

An Investigator for United States.

After graduating from George Washington university he went to China as an investigating officer for the United States in Shantung during the Japanese invasion from 1916 to 1919.

As advisor to the Chinese student revolutionaries in Peking in 1919 and as chief of foreign affairs for the Peking Leader, reputed to be the oldest newspaper in the world, Close had an opportunity to travel extensively in all parts of China, Japan, Manchuria, and the South Pacific.

Close has contributed thousands of articles to magazines and newspapers on three continents. It was in connection with his work as a newspaperman that he acquired the name Upton Close. He signed his cabled dispatches UPCLOSE, which is simply "Close Up" when the syllables are reversed. Upton Close is an elaboration of Upclose.

Author of Book on Japan.

Between his travels, lectures, and journalistic endeavors Close has found time to write eleven books on adventure, history, romance, and biography.

His latest volume, recently published, "Behind the Face of Japan," is one of the important books dealing with the present war.

Close has been broadcasting off and on since 1924. This is his first series for Mutual. He appears on NBC's News of the World roundups at 6:15 p. m. Monday and Wednesday and is heard over WMAQ-NBC at 4:45 p. m. Saturdays and at 2:15 p. m. Sundays.

500 ENTHUSIASTS HELP KEEP STATE IN WAR BOND LEAD

Neglect Business, Wives to Carry Message.

Freeman J. Wood.

Illinois, leading the nation in war bond sales much of the time, can thank a group of 500 Chicago men who have neglected their wives, homes, business, and golf for months to win this honor for the state — and boom the war program.

THE TRIBUNE today presents two bond-selling captains and their crews, not to give them individual credit so much as to shed light on the entire group of 500 insurance men and brokers who have been giving several days a week for the last year to help bring 10,891 Illinois firms into the pay roll allotment war bond plan. Nearly 80 per cent of the 3,324,047 employés in these firms are enrolled in the plan. The captains are Freeman Wood and Earl Schwemm.

To stay in the front ranks, Illinoisans must buy more than $60,000,000 worth of bonds every month in the year. Bankers and capitalists couldn't make such continuing purchases. Only one group could—ordinary workmen, white collar or denim clad.

Rank and File Workers.

"And the ordinary workman usually don't have any money left over to buy bonds," Norman B. Collins, state administrator of war bond sales, points out. "So our staff, all volunteers, has carried the campaign into factories and offices in the form of the pay roll allotment system of buying war bonds.

"There are big names mentioned from time to time in the newspapers for their work in installing the system, but actually the bulk of the work was done by the rank and file workers—insurance men, brokers, advertising men.

"If you really want to know who has been out to the steel mills and factories and restaurants, arranging to have war bond purchases deducted regularly from waitresses' and machinists' and packers' pay checks, you'll have to meet our captains and their men."

Typical of State.

Freeman Wood, captain, is not the average bond seller, but the spirit that has set him to selling the plan to over 100 firms personally, one of the firms alone purchasing $332,000 worth of war bonds a month, is the spirit that has pushed Illinois to the fore in the sale of war bonds. His crew and he together have set up the plan in over 500 plants involving several hundred thousand employés.

Wood is head of a loop insurance agency. He lives in Winnetka with his wife and one son.

"We go out to an employé meeting at some plant, and everybody sits there glumly, wondering who we are and why we don't go away," Wood relates. "It is our job, and not an easy one, to leave the workmen singing "The Star Spangled Banner" and meaning it because they have bought a share in the war program by signing for regular bond purchases."

Recruited Own Staff.

Earl Schwemm, manager of a loop insurance agency, was named a captain more than a year ago. Since then he has installed the pay roll bond plan in nearly 100 firms. He works with a crew of 12 men.

"We were given a list of 100 corporations where we were to set up the plan," Schemm explains the routine. "We split these names up among our crew, and each man took time off to get out to his list in the daytime.

"First we called on an executive and explained the plan, arranging a second date to return and talk to an assembly of the workers. At this latter date, pledge cards were filled out by the employés authorizing a deduction from their pay checks each payday. This deduction would accumulate until a bond could be purchased and sent to the employé."

Still After Mark.

But this was not the end. At first some plants were subscribing only 1 per cent of their pay rolls. The bond selling crews returned time and again, gave more pep talks, issued 10 per cent pins to employés who pledged that proportion of their wages.

Finally, in plant after plant, the regular deduction grew nearer and nearer the 10 per cent over-all average, the treasury's goal. The majority of Schwemm's corporations now hover around 8 or 9 per cent, and he and his men are still spending one or two days a week working on them.

ANOTHER STORY OF SLAVE PRESS ON W-G-N TODAY

Drama Shows Belgium Used as Brokers' Pawn.

The story of Belgium and how that nation was used as a pawn by international financiers working under the protection of a Nazi dominated press prior to her entry in the war, will be related by Stanley Johnston, Chicago Tribune war correspondent, on the "Mightier Than the Sword" program on W-G-N from 2:30 to 3 p. m. today.

Johnston will tell how financiers in France sent iron ore to Germany for its steel stock piles, and how Germany, in return, sent fuel to France to run France's blast furnaces. Belgium, sandwiched between the two countries, was used as the traffic lane and goods were sent tax exempt.

Johnston will relate how the lid was knocked off this story by the slaying of a Belgian border guard who attempted to stop the Nazi truck transports. He will also tell how he tried to break the story to the Belgian press, only to be rebuffed by a Nazi agent posing as a newspaper editor.

The editor and his secretary tried to capture and slay Johnston thru a ruse, but the scheme back fired when Johnston escaped into Holland, from where he sent his story to the newspapers of America.

"Mightier Than the Sword" is written and produced by Jack La-Frandre and features an all-star radio cast. Music on the program is by Robert Trendler and the W-G-N Symphony orchestra.

'BOHEMIAN GIRL' NEXT ON W-G-N THEATER OF AIR

Balfe's "Bohemian Girl," starring Marion Claire and Attilio Baggiore, will be presented on the Chicago Theater of the Air from 8 to 9 p. m. next Saturday on W-G-N and the Mutual network.

Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, will speak. Miss Claire will take the rôle of Arline, daughter of an Austrian nobleman. Baggiore will portray the singing rôle of Thaddeus, an exiled Polish rebel. Supporting the principals will be Bruce Foote and Earl Wilkie. Foote will sing the rôle of Arline's father, the Count of Arnheim, while Wilkie will portray the gypsy leader, Devilshoof.

Known for its melody rather than its plot, "Bohemian Girl" is the most popular of Balfe's many works. The libretto for the operetta was written by the nineteenth century poet, Bunn.

Musical background will be supplied by the W-G-N symphony orchestra directed by Henry Weber and by the chorus led by Robert Trendler. Kenneth MacGregor, W-G-N chief of production, will produce the program.

A full cast of actors will present the dramatic rôles of the operetta. Marvin Mueller will be the announcer.

Miss Dorothy Beth Esseltine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Esseltine, 5742 South Richmond street, was married recently to John Mitchon Jr., son of Mrs. Mitchon of Houston, Tex. The ceremony was solemnized at the Chicago Lawn Presbyterian church.

HONOR MEMORY OF DR. DE LEE IN RITES TOMORROW

Hutchins and Fishbein to Speak at Mandel Hall.

Achievements of the late Dr. Joseph B. De Lee in advancing obstetrics to high levels of medical science and thereby effecting notable reductions in the death rate of mothers and babies, will be honored at 8 o'clock tomorrow evening with a ceremony in Mandel hall at the University of Chicago. Dr. De Lee died April 2 when he was 72 years old after devoting 50 years of his life to obstetrical work.

Dr. J. B. De Lee.

Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the Journal of the American Medical association, and President Robert M. Hutchins of the University of Chicago will speak at the meeting. Dr. Fishbein will talk on "Maternal Care in the Postwar Period."

Set Up $50,000 Trust.

At the same time more than $50,000 given to establish the Joseph B. De Lee Memorial trust will be presented to the University of Chicago by Dr. M. Edward Lewis, professor of obstetrics and gynecology, of the Chicago Lying-In hospital staff and a former student of Dr. De Lee. The fund, for which the goal is $100,000, will provide fellowships in the hospital for young doctors who intend to make obstetrics their specialty.

Of the contributions made so far the largest single gift is $20,000 from the Mothers' aid of the hospital. This group, organized in 1904, was of great assistance to Dr. De Lee in his work and has provided the Lying-In hospital with much of its financial support. The gift of the Mothers' aid as an organization is in addition to individual contributions made by many of the members. Other contributors to the fund include the Alumni association of the hospital, including both doctors and nurses, and former patients and friends of Dr. De Lee.

Crusade for Obstetrics.

Dr. De Lee began his crusade to make obstetrics respectable in 1895 after he had graduated from medical school. Few doctors then would accept confinement cases, for either rich or poor, and the lack of even the most elementary scientific methods resulted in the death of more than 20,000 mothers a year and the death of 100,000 babies during birth.

In 1894 Dr. De Lee, with $15 and permission to have a clinic at the South Side Free dispensary, had failed to obtain a single patient. He began again, with modest financial support he had raised himself, and opened on Feb. 14, 1895, a dispensary at 1336 Newberry avenue, in a stove heated four room flat on the ground floor of a tenement building. Dr. De Lee waited for two weeks to get his first patient and then the whole enterprise nearly collapsed because the second patient had complications which nearly caused her death.

Opened Small Hospital.

At first all the work of the new institution was done by Dr. De Lee almost single handed. Gradually he enlisted the support of the medical profession which sent him students to be trained and to join him in his work. By September, 1899, Dr. De Lee had a small hospital on Ashland boulevard near Harrison street and in 1905 efforts to build a modern hospital began.

But it was not until 1917 until the first Chicago Lying-In hospital was opened at 51st street and Vincennes avenue. In 1931 the present building was completed on the University of Chicago campus and in 1938 the hospital merged with the university clinics.

Dr. De Lee was head of the hospital until his retirement in 1939. Some 28,000 children have been born there. Dr. De Lee lived to see the results of his work reflected in a remarkably low maternal and infant death rate.

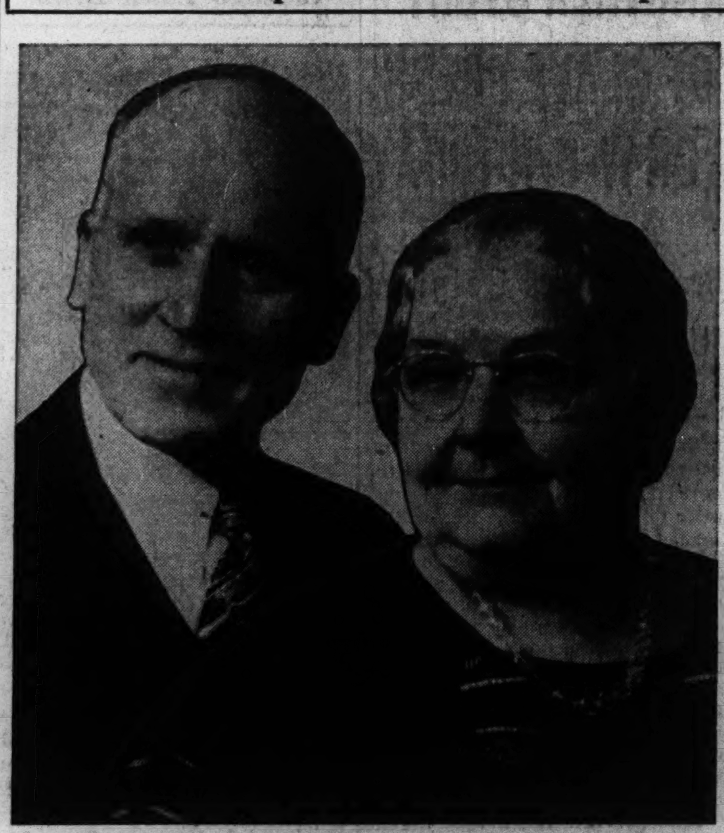
Influenced Nation's Practice.

Dr. De Lee's work has influenced obstetrical practice thruout the entire country. Most of the regulations now enforced by boards of health, according to officials of the university, were originated in the hospital which he headed.

Dr. De Lee's influence as a teacher was widespread and he personally trained the largest single group of obstetricians and obstetrical nurses in the field and his students carried his methods to all parts of the world.

Dr. De Lee was born in Cold Springs, N. Y., Oct. 28, 1869. He attended high school in Chicago and was graduated from the Chicago Medical college in 1891, interning in Cook County hospital. He joined the staff of the medical school of Northwestern university in 1894 and retained this affiliation until 1929 when he became professor and chairman of the department of obstetrics and gynecology at the University of Chicago.

Church Reception to Honor Couple



Mr. and Mrs. Fred I. Hills, 11745 Parnell avenue, will celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary Tuesday evening in the parlors of the West Pullman Methodist church, 120th street and Normal avenue. They were married on Thanksgiving day, 1892. Mr. Hills retired from the Illinois Central railroad in 1938 after 40 years of service.

WILLIAM J. HOGAN, POLICE OPERATOR 39 YEARS, RETIRES

Veteran Recalls Early Newspaper Work.

Police Operator William J. Hogan, who has directed members of the Chicago department to scenes of the city's crimes and disorders for close to 39 years, retired recently. Hogan joined the department in 1904, and spent his first 15 years of service at the detective bureau, 1121 South State street. Since then, most of his assignments have been at south and southwest side stations, including the old 50th and State street station—now the 48th and Wabash—and the old Stanton avenue station along Chicago's one time gold coast.

Hogan decided he had a talent for being a policeman years ago when he was working in the reference room of the old Times Herald. He had such a keen memory for faces and names he thought he might be helpful on the department. It was while working at the Times Herald that he studied, took the police examination and passed it.

Recalls Old Friends.

He worked on that paper for several year and knew well many of the figures important in newspaper circles. In the reference room, he was associated with August Bartz, now a veteran of THE TRIBUNE's reference room. He remembers John T. McCutcheon, Tribune cartoonist; John Kelley and Charles Carpenter, Tribune police reporters, now retired; George Ade, Hoosier humorist, and a host of others. On a recent visit to THE TRIBUNE, Hogan visited the reference room, saw Bartz, and they compared notes on morgue keeping of years ago and today. Hogan found there was a vast difference.

Staying Here for Duration.

He had originally intended to make his home in Florida, where some of his old police buddies are now in retirement. Charles Carpenter told him to come on out and he'd teach him how to fish. Hogan said that would suit him fine, but he thinks he'll stay where he is until the war is over.

He makes his home at 7819 South Park avenue with his wife, Kathryn E., a son, James, a Notre Dame graduate, and daughter, Irene, a Rosary alumna now engaged in dietetic work.

ISPAN, BUSY MAN, HOLDS TWO JOBS: BARBER AND COP

John Ispan of 9009 Brandon avenue is a busy man. Five afternoons a week and all day Saturday, he is at work in his barber shop at 9233 Cottage Grove avenue. Five nights a week, he is an auxiliary military policeman at the Interlake Iron corporation at 112th street and Torrence avenue. The two jobs take 71 hours a week!

Asked how he maintains energy to do both, he shrugged his shoulders and recalled days of 1917 and 1918 that were far more difficult. Then he was a soldier with the AEF in France.

He served thru many battles of the last war; was wounded twice at St. Mihiel in September, 1918, and was awarded the Purple Heart. He was honorably discharged from the army in 1920.

Ispan was born in Vukhovar, Austria-Hungary Sept. 16, 1895, arrived in America Oct. 23, 1912. After the last war, he was again in the army from 1930 to 1934, stationed at Honolulu, Hawaii. He is a member of Burke-O'Malley American Legion post.

This WEEK in the GARDEN

Monday, Nov. 23

Remove garden furniture and equipment to the basement or shed. Drain all hose and hang it on a broad wooden hook in a cool place or roll it on one of the specially made outfits where it is not likely to be in the way of other equipment.

Never permit garden tools to enter winter quarters without being thoroly cleaned. Clean and oil the mowing machine and sharpen the cutting edge so it will be ready for use next spring.

Unless the ground is frozen, walks can be remade and the planting of shrubs and trees continued. Planting can continue as long as the plants can be obtained. Never plant in poor soil, but remove it and replace with good, rich soil.

Tuesday, Nov. 24

There is no economy in using the tops of perennials for mulching, for they may contain insects and disease. Clear up the entire garden, destroying the tops.

Hardwood leaves are excellent for mulching, but do not spread deeply over plants or they may smother and die. Rather draw the leaves up to and around the plants. All leaves not used for mulching should be combined with soil and a compost heap started.

Wednesday, Nov. 25

If the ground is not frozen it is excellent practice to spade it and permit it to lie in the rough all winter. Sod ground is best fitted in this way, for when spring comes it will have decayed and be ready for planting.

Do not dig so deep that the subsoil is turned on top, but increase the depth by spading a little deeper each spading.

Thursday, Nov. 26

Prune vines by cutting out the diseased wood. Doing this work after the vines start in spring disturbs them and is likely to injure the young wood.

Cut back the Hydrangea paniculata grandiflora [the Peegee Hydrangea], leaving two to four buds on the the shoots. Spiraea Anthony Waterer can be cut to the ground or within six inches. Tamarisk can be cut back severely to keep it low and in bush form. If allowed to grow rampant it becomes ungainly and ill shaped.

Friday, Nov. 27

The growing of plants in homes is sufficient to keep the gardener busy thruout the winter and the vast variety that is available gives every indoor gardener an opportunity to have a fine collection.

One of the finest groups are the begonias, with their remarkably beautiful foliage and exquisite flowers. These plants should be watered sparingly. The best way to water them is to place the pot in a container of water. Daily sprinkling with a fine spray tends to remove dust and preserve a halo of moisture around it.

Saturday, Nov. 28

Flowering pot plants should never be allowed to suffer from a lack of water. They will last longer if placed in a cool room at night. Most flowering plants require sun, while foliage plants do well in shade or partial shade.

Excellent effects can be obtained by using ornamental jardinieres, but water should not be allowed to stand in them or the plants will suffer because of saturated soil.

A fine palm is one of the most attractive plants for the home.

REMODEL DUPLEX INTO SMALL WAR WORKERS' UNITS

Compact Quarters Draw Tenants' Attention.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

Not long ago a very interesting—and patriotic—piece of work was completed in a two story greystone apartment duplex at 3253 Flournoy street.

Mrs. Katherine Kleppel and her daughter, Katharine, decided to remodel the upstairs seven room apartment of their building into two smaller apartments for war workers. They knew their residence was in a neighborhood serving many defense plants and factories and a plumbing contractor told them they would be eligible for priority assistance.

So they filled out the necessary forms and the work began. Before it was completed the new apartment had been rented to a war worker and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Scalzitti. The original renters of the apartment continued to occupy the balance of the former apartment.

Built-in Fixtures Please.

The Scalzittis are pleased with their new apartment and they like the compactness of their three rooms and bath, the efficient sink with its wooden cabinets, built to order, and the good looking bathroom with modern fixtures, including built-in tub with overhead shower.

The plumbing contractor handled the entire work of creating two small apartments out of the one large flat, and he and Miss Kleppel planned the arrangements. He also took the responsibility of getting the carpenters, plasterers, electricians, and decorators.

The seven room apartment had consisted of a front parlor and bedroom alcove, a living room, a large dining room, kitchen, two bedrooms and a bathroom.

Remove Fretted Archway.

The new apartment was created at the front and the alcove bedroom off the parlor was closed up to make a complete bedroom with a door opening into the new apartment living room. A fretted archway between parlor and living room was removed and the opening arched to separate the living room and the kitchen dinette.

To provide for a bathroom the plumbing contractor suggested building a new room to open off the kitchen, which would take part of the space of the old living room. The new room for the bath was 5½x7 feet and the remaining space provided an L-shaped room for the kitchen-dinette.

Red Accents in Kitchen.

All the fixtures in the bathroom and kitchen are white. Accents of red against the white cabinets, sink, range, and refrigerator highlight the equipment and black linoleum cabinet tops. The floor linoleum is black and grey with red. Pink and blue accessories make the bathroom attractive.

The woodwork of the new living room and bedroom was painted entirely white and the floors refinished. A new bathroom radiator, one of the modern midget wall-hung models, was installed, and the positions of radiators in the present kitchen-dinette were changed; a change for the better since the radiator in the kitchen is now under a window.

Original Tenants Satisfied.

The couple who occupied the original apartment did not need so much room and are quite satisfied with the remaining apartment which now consists of four rooms.

The former large dining room has had its buffet removed and now it is the living room. The bedrooms are the same and the kitchen and the bathroom continue to have the same fixtures. Redecoration in the kitchen, however, has made it useful and attractive as a kitchen-dinette.

UNFURL SERVICE FLAG TOMORROW FOR SEA SCOUTS

Ninety officers and members of South Shore squadron, Chicago Sea Scout council, will be honored at 8 o'clock tomorrow evening at the Hamilton park fieldhouse, 72d street and Normal boulevard, when a service flag is dedicated to them. The program will feature motion pictures and demonstrations of seamanship and first aid. Francis D. Scully, the council's war service chairman, will discuss the value of scouting and its place in the war effort. The invocation will be given by the Rev. Herman J. Schick, pastor of Immanuel Evangelical church, 70th street and Michigan avenue. Sea Scout pins will be presented to parents and wives of service men by Daniel P. Trude, judge of the Circuit court. Joseph U. Sheridan is commodore of the South Shore unit.

Plan Annual Aquinas Homecoming

The annual homecoming sponsored by the Aquinas Athletic association of Aquinas High school will be held at 9:30 o'clock Wednesday evening at the Medinah club. Officers in charge of the event are, left to right, standing: Shirley Simons, 6058 South Mozart street; Rita Schiltz, 6028 South California avenue; Patricia Murphy, 7151 Paxton avenue. Seated: Margaret Shield, 5100 Cornell avenue, and Mary Therese Brennan, 7206 Cottage Grove avenue, social chairman. [Root Photo.]

LIONS CLUB AIDS DRIVE IN AUBURN FOR CRAFT CLUB

Calumet High Plans Achievement Groups.

Establishment of a Junior Achievement unit in Auburn Park has been undertaken by the Auburn Park Lions club. Egbert Hunter, assistant principal at Calumet High school and program chairman for the Lions, has been named coördinator for the project. He said that other service groups in the community, as well as business and professional men, have been invited to join in the sponsorship.

A committee headed by Meyer Deitch, 1001 West 79th street, has been appointed by Lions President Richard Jay, to aid in the recruiting of adult advisers. Others on it are Sam Frank, 7900 South Halsted street, and Charles Cook, 601 West 80th street.

A National Movement.

Junior Achievement is a national movement for young people between the ages of 14 and 18. It encourages young people to form business enterprises, select a product that can be profitably manufactured, raise $50 to $75 capital by the sale of stock, pay regular salaries, sell the product commercially and pay dividends. It is somewhat like the 4H club plan.

The club has three adult advisers, one skilled in finance, one in salesmanship, and one expert in production. The society rents space for its operations, installs tools and equipment, sets up company books, buys raw materials, determines wages and sales commissions, conducts its own shop, and holds monthly directors' meetings, annual stockholders' meetings, and, where profits warrant, pays dividends. All members, however, including the president, treasurer, and other officers, work in the shop. No adult labor is employed.

Will Use Museum.

A number of companies will be organized in the area to use facilities at the Museum of Science and Industry for headquarters. A campaign for the establishment of several clubs at Calumet High school has been announced by Glenn C. Worst, principal.

Applications for membership in the society are being accepted by Hunter at Calumet High school. In Chicago now, there are 37 Junior Achievement companies, manufacturing a variety of products, and rendering various types of services.

These include wood work, shops which manufacture paper balers, signs, desk name plates, models of ships. Other companies are working at lamp shades and fire warden sand boxes, while others are engaged in clerical work.

Junior Achievement's 11th annual convention will be held Friday, Saturday, and next Sunday at the Museum of Science and Industry. The program will start with a buffet supper and reception for members and delegates at the Windermere West hotel. Sessions will be held at the museum.

State Republican Women's Leader Will Speak Friday

Mrs. Glen W. Suthers, president of the Illinois Federation of Republican Women's Clubs and a member of the advisory committee of the Citizens' Civil Service Association of Illinois, will speak at a meeting of the Chatham Fields Woman's club at 1:15 o'clock, Friday, in the clubrooms, 8500 Maryland avenue. Mrs. Owen Evans, chairman of the legislation department of the club, will introduce Mrs. Suthers. Tea will be served.

OCD COMMANDER EXPLAINS FIRING OF BLOCK LEADER

Talk Includes His Views on Political Figures.

L. L. Fox, OCD commander for the Auburn Park community and a principal figure in several disputes over alleged political activity by block captains, explained his position at a special meeting he called on the southwest side.

During the recent political campaign Fox announced the discharge of two block captains for allowing Fred A. Busbey, leader in Americanism activities of the American Legion for many years, to appear at a flag dedication. Busbey, who was the Republican nominee for congress and who was elected, stated that there was no word of politics in his talk. The two block captains reached an understanding with Fox and have been reinstated.

Opposes Political Activity.

"I don't care what goes on in other portions of the city, but I will not have any one in politics hold a position in my civilian defense organization," Fox told the residents of block 6, zone 19, attending the meeting.

Fox said the meeting was called to explain his reasons for discharging Leonard Hoffman, 1906 South Union avenue, as captain of the block on a charge of holding that position and also being a Republican precinct captain. The discharge of Hoffman was the third such incident in the community.

"When I took this job Mayor Kelly told me to keep politics out of the OCD setup in this community, and I'm going to do it," Fox declared. "The captaincy of this block has been vacated because Hoffman is a Republican worker, and there is nothing for you to do but elect a new captain."

Disclaims Party Interest.

Fox assured the gathering that he had no political aspirations himself, and had no interest in politics at all.

"Normally I am a Republican, altho I have voted for President Roosevelt every time he has run," Fox said, "but I think Mayor Kelly is a mighty fine man and is doing a wonderful job as civilian defense coördinator. Many, many times he has skipped political meetings to go to OCD gatherings. He has taken as little interest in politics as possible all spring and summer.

"Some people say Mayor Kelly has ruined his political future, but I think they are wrong. I think he is building a great political future right now."

Asserts He Has Power.

In response to a question from one of the gathering, Fox said his position as commander for the community gave him complete jurisdiction over all OCD personnel and function in the area.

At the conclusion of the half hour talk William J. Murphy, 7815 Emerald avenue, was elected the new captain for the block. The meeting was held at Murphy's home.

Hoffman previously had declared his only political activity since his election to the block captaincy had been the solicitation of program ads for a dance held by the 17th Ward Republican club.

DISCUSS NEGRO HOUSING NEEDS IN PARLEY TODAY

Officials of the federal housing authority will speak at a meeting called by the National Negro council at 3 o'clock today at the Metropolitan Community church, 4100 South Park way. They will discuss the possibility for additional housing units for Negroes on the south side. The Rev. H. B. Hawkins, president of the Chicago Baptist Ministers' conference, will discuss the program of 100 south side ministers who plan to go to Washington in protest of the filibustering of southern senators who oppose the anti-poll tax bill. Plans also will be discussed for a committee to call on Mayor Kelly to urge the appointment of Mrs. Irene Gaines, president of the Federation of Colored Women of Illinois, to succeed James B. Cashin on the board of education.

MUNSTER SCRAP DRIVE BRINGS 80 POUNDS PER MAN

Residents of Munster, Ind., have contributed an average of 80 pounds of scrap metal per person in their current drive. This town of approximately 3,000 persons has collected 120 tons of metal under the leadership of a woman, Mrs. A. J. Schuyler, 8254 Crestwood avenue.

In addition to the scrap metal the town found 5 tons of rubber which was contributed to that drive. The first shipment of tin cans from Munster, one month's collection, amounted to 2,390 pounds. Other members of the salvage committee are: Mrs. Herbert Berg, Mrs. Louis Hannauer, Ernest Elliott, school principal; Homer Hitt, scoutmaster; Walter Freese, and William Kliehege.

Edward Bennett, town marshal, gave the use of the town truck in collecting the scrap. A truck also was donated by William Terpstra, truck farmer, who heads the north township salvage committee. William Hitt, a high school junior, used a model T Ford to make collections.

The Girl Scouts of the town are making fat collections every other Saturday. After collection they take the fats to their salvage chairman who sees that it is properly prepared.

At the same time the Boy Scouts collect tin cans and other materials which are needed, manila, rags, rubber, and scrap metal.

Oakdale Church.

The 40th anniversary of the founding of the Oakdale Covenant church, 88th street and Normal avenue, was marked recently with four days of services. Former pastors and church leaders were guests.

WHAT A SUBSCRIPTION INVOLVES. Over 500,000 families now belong to the Book-of-the-Month Club. They do so in order to keep themselves from missing the new books they are really interested in.

As a Club member, you receive an advance publication report about the judges' choice—and also reports about all other important coming books. If you decide you want the book-of-the-month, you let it come. If not (on a blank always provided) you can specify some other book you want, or simply say: "Send me nothing."

Last year over $5,000,000 worth of free books (figured at retail value) were given to the Club's members—given, not sold! These book-dividends could be distributed free because so many subscribers ordinarily want the book-of-the-month that an enormous edition can be printed. The saving on this quantity-production enables the Club to buy the right to print other fine library volumes. These are then manufactured and distributed free among subscribers.

Your obligation as a member is simple. You pay no yearly fee. You merely agree to buy no fewer than four books-of-the-month in any twelve-month period. The subscription period is not for one year, but as long as you decide; you can end it at any time after taking four books-of-the-month. You pay for the books as you receive them—the regular retail price (frequently less) plus a small charge to cover postage and other mailing expenses.

'Claudia' Returns to Selwyn Theater Next Sunday

Original N. Y. Cast Will Be Seen in Comedy

By Cecil Smith.

Rose Franken's "Claudia," which was a fixture at the Selwyn theater from September, 1941, to February, 1942, returns to the same theater next Sunday night in the expectation of garnering the business it left behind when it moved away to permit "Blithe Spirit" to come in. John Golden, the producer, hopes that the repeat engagement will attract repeat patrons, for this time he is bringing the company which originally presented the comedy in New York instead of the competent, if inferior, second company we saw a year ago.

Claudia Naughton, as you remember, is a young wife whose mother fixation, as psychologists coldly call it, keeps her from entering freely into a genuinely adult companionship with her understanding and patient husband. It was as the heroine of this feminine variant on the silver cord theme that Dorothy McGuire successfully made her first claim to national fame.

Chicago had already taken Dorothy to its heart before "Claudia" came along to boost her toward stardom, for she spent several months in the Selwyn theater enduring the unexpected at John Barrymore's hands in "My Dear Children;" and a year earlier in "Our Town" she had made an unforgettable impression as the fragile young New Hampshire heroine. In both plays she had revealed an artless simplicity and a sweet naturalness which concealed the capable technique she had acquired from her apprentice acting in Omaha and in eastern summer theaters.

When "Claudia" was first announced for Chicago there was considerable disappointment that Dorothy McGuire, whose chief earlier successes had occurred here and not in New York, was retained in the eastern cast. As Phyllis Thaxter won her spurs in the original Chicago company, the disappointment was mitigated, but never entirely removed. So now Dorothy finally arrives, to give us a long deferred chance to see her Claudia before the movies snatch her away, perhaps for a long, long time.

Donald Cook, who did everything in his power back in 1939 to bring order out of the chaos of Samson Raphaelson's tryout script of "Skylark," the Gertrude Lawrence starring vehicle, will appear at the Selwyn as Claudia's husband, a part he created. When Miss Franken's comedy opened in New York Burns Mantle called Mr. Cook "the best young leading man of his day," and in this tribute he surely was not far wrong.

When Mr. Golden was casting this original "Claudia" company he persuaded Frances Starr to emerge from intended retirement to play the focal and sensitively written rôle of Claudia's mother, Mrs. Brown. Much to their misfortune, many younger theatergoers do not know who Frances Starr is; and the return of "Claudia" is an event, if for no other reason than that it will restore her to the public esteem she deserves.

In the early years of the century Miss Starr was a leading woman of enviable reputation. As early as 1906, when she was 20, she appeared with David Warfield in "The Music Master." Two years later she leaped into prominence as Juanita in "The Rose of the Rancho," a great hit in its day. "The Easiest Way," a problem drama which caused an immense stir in 1909, kept Miss Starr busy for more than two years. From this point forward the catalog of Miss Starr's rôles is too vast to list here; is covers an unbroken career of distinction, up to "Kind Lady" and "Yes, My Darling Daughter."

Olga Baclanova is the fourth in the quadrumvirate of "Claudia's" featured players. Nobody who saw this Russian actress in the Moscow Art Musical theater productions of "Carmencita and the Soldier" and "Lysistrata" in 1926 will need to be reintroduced to her. And those who missed seeing one of the most original and vital Carmens of modern times will doubtless have been impressed by her more recent parts in the movies, in such films as "Grand Hotel," "The Cat and the Fiddle," and "Twentieth Century."

There are other interesting personalities in this "Claudia" cast which has been held intact thru a tour to the Pacific coast and back. Wilton Graff has appeared here in the last few seasons in the exquisite but ill-fated "Dame Nature," and with Laurence Olivier and Vivien Leigh in "Romeo and Juliet." Adrienne Gessner, a truly distinguished Viennese actress, is cast in the brief but sympathetic rôle of the housekeeper. The other members of the cast are Audrey Ridgwell and Frank Tweddell.

The engagement of "Claudia" at the Selwyn is limited to four weeks, for the Shubert revival of "The Merry Widow" expects to take over the house after Christmas. A popular price scale, with a $2.20 top for evening performances, will prevail.

The new $25,000 ceiling upon earnings threatens to change the face of the amusement industry in a way which may ultimately benefit the legitimate stage. Hollywood salaries being what they are, many prominent celluloid favorites will be forced to restrict themselves to one or two pictures a year, unless they are willing to work on additional pictures with no additional remuneration.

Legitimate producers are now hoping that many of these fine ladies and gentlemen will now be willing, and even eager, to appear on the stage in between their widely spaced cinema assignments. Thru thick and thin the stage has retained its supreme prestige, and furthermore the rewards of daily contact with a living, breathing audience are likely to prove attractive to many leading lights of the studios. For years the stage has been hampered in the engagement of talent, because the movies were in a position to outbid the highest salary any stage producer could offer. In 1943 perhaps the stage will be able to claim many of its prosperous alumni once again.

SINGER IN "PRIORITIES"

Luba Malina, a Russian singer who really hails from Russia, reveals both a good voice and a provocative temperament in "Priorities of 1942," the variety show at the Erlanger theater.

Notes of the Theater

Special Thanksgiving day matinées are in order this week. Afternoon performances will be given on Thursday at 3 [in place of the usual Wednesday matinée, which is omitted] by "Arsenic and Old Lace" [Selwyn], "Junior Miss" [Harris], and "Good Night, Ladies" [Blackstone]. "Porgy and Bess" [Studebaker] will retain its regular matinée on Wednesday, ignoring the holiday. "Priorities of 1942" [Erlanger] will present 2:30 matinées on both Wednesday and Thursday. "Maid in the Ozarks" [Great Northern], which never has a midweek matinée anyway, will have none this week.

Note about how time flies: Here we are, face to face with the last week of "Arsenic and Old Lace" already, and it seems as tho it had hardly opened at the Selwyn. The company, headed by Boris Karloff, Jean Adair, and Josephine Hull, was originally booked for only three weeks, and it cannot stay over, because John Golden has possession of the theater for the return of "Claudia" next Sunday evening. Next week Milwaukee will see the play at the Davidson theater on Nov. 30, Dec. 1 and 2, and it will move to Cincinnati for the balance of the week. Thereafter it will go to Pittsburgh for a week, Boston for a fortnight, and Washington for the post-Christmas week. All these cities will be having return engagements.

Two well known New York drama reviewers have resigned from their posts to take up war activities. Brooks Atkinson of the Times will become a foreign correspondent for that paper. John Mason Brown of the World-Telegram became a lieutenant in the navy several weeks ago. Lewis Nichols is the new critic of the Times and Burton Rascoe is the reviewer for the World-Telegram. Some months ago Richard Watts, formerly drama critic of the Herald Tribune, went to Ireland as civilian correspondent for the army. He has been succeeded at his drama desk by Howard Barnes.

Francis Lederer and Gloria Swanson begin touring the east this week in "Three Curtains," an odd sounding mélange of scenes by Shaw, Harris, and Pinero. Harold J. Kennedy is the producer.

• • •

Renee Riano, a well known character actress, has taken over the amusing maid's rôle in "Junior Miss" at the Harris theater. She replaces Doro Merande, who in turn has gone to New York to replace Paula Lawrence in the Lyceum theater company there. There are no other cast changes in "Junior Miss," but Robert Milford, who oversaw "My Sister Eileen" during its long run here, is temporary company manager for the next two weeks. Mr. Milford is the husband of Effie Afton, who played Ruth in "My Sister Eileen," and he is one of Max Gordon's right hand men.

Several prominent playwrights have promised to write plays within the next few weeks, for performance by soldiers and sailors in the camps. Among those who have promised to contribute are George Abbott, Howard Dietz, Joseph Fields, Moss Hart, Ben Hecht, Lillian Hellman, George S. Kaufman, John O'Hara, and Elmer Rice. To the USO-Camp Shows schedule of professionally acted plays to be presented in the camps, the Negro musical, "Shuffle Along," has now been added.

• • •

There are now four "Junior Miss" companies—one here, one in New York, one in Boston, and a troupe making the USO-Camp Shows circuit of the army camps and naval training stations. The New York company completed its first year last week. Our local company gave its 75th performance on Wednesday.

• • •

Dwight Deere Wiman, one of the most distinctive producers in the American theater, has given up all theatrical activity for the duration of the war in order to accept the post of director of entertainment for the American Red Cross in the United Kingdom. He expects to leave for England in the near future. Mr. Wiman is an Illinois product, having been born in Moline 47 years ago. He has produced 52 plays and musical comedies on Broadway in the last 17 years.

Luba Malina, the colorful Russian songstress in "Priorities of 1942" at the Erlanger, hails from Leningrad. Her father, Vitali Malina, was musical director of the Moscow Art theater. At one time Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, played double bass in his orchestra. A true child of the theater, Miss Malina received her first dancing lessons from Anna Pavlowa. After the revolution Luba and her family began a restless life, moving to Shanghai, then thru Japan and Honolulu to the United States, and back across the Atlantic to Berlin, Paris, and London. She settled permanently in this country nine years ago, with her father [who is now 82] and her brother, Boris, now a trombonist in Mr. Koussevitzky's orchestra. Next season Lee Shubert plans to star Miss Malina in a new musical.

Oscar Serlin, producer of "Life with Father" and "Strip for Action," has set up a management known as Oscar Serlin Associates, to function while he serves in the army. Walter Fried, Mr. Serlin's general manager, and Babette De Sheim, who is both his production assistant and his wife, have been given authority as co-producers. The next production will be Victor Wolfsohn's dramatization of Nina Fedorova's novel, "The Family."

A GUY SEES RED

too. I sent Rico back to Kurtz with a bill of sale for my boat. She may look like an old tub to everybody else but she's my sweeheart. Now I've put up the Della Dear against the Rittenbach and the Heinies."

"Jimmy Jergins!"

"Why not? I'd be a poor sport if I didn't take the same chance you do."

She heard Rafael calling from the port captain's launch.

"Better go on back, Rafael," she told him. "Capt. Jergins and I are going into a huddle."

She moved the keg over directly opposite Jergins and sat down facing him.

"We are going to win this war," she said.

"How can we lose?"

"Plenty of ways. Let me tell you something about this Rittenbach. I was here when they sabotaged and sank her. The government sent soldiers out to take her over because the presidente is a good friend of the United States."

"I've heard he is."

"The crew set her on fire before the soldiers could go abroad. Rafael was there."

"Rafael. The boy friend, eh?"

"A sweet guy but in another way. He understands German so he heard the skipper give the order and the whole ship broke out on fire at once. All of us ashore watched her burn and we heard the explosions, too."

"They sure made a wreck of her inside. But they strung their dynamite below in the hatches, below the waterline, so the water pressure outside counterbalanced the force of the dynamite and her plates didn't crack. That means I can get her up without a tough job of patching."

"Do you mean you can really raise her—in time?"

"Between you and me, I don't know. It's a matter of help. Scaf hates to spend money. And I've got to have 14 cofferdams in a hurry. If I had a hundred men and plenty of lumber I could build 'em in three days."

"I'll get you the men and the lumber. Rafael's father owns a big coffee plantation."

"Good girl. Rico scraped the waterfront and couldn't find a dozen men able to handle a hammer and saw."

"Well, what are we waiting for?"

She found Rafael at the Machete while Jergins waited outside.

"I do not know why I do thees theeng, Peggee," Rafael told her wistfully shaking his head, "but leave it to me. In the morning——"

"Not in the morning. Now. No mañana stuff, Rafael. We'll want those boys working in the morning. Have to round 'em up."

He shrugged. "I lose my sleep. I raise the very great disturbance at my father's finca. And I see you sending the sigh after that Yankee skipper. I break my own heart, Peggee."

"Nonsense. As far as Capt. Jergins is concerned, I'm just Charlie Scaf's fresh redheaded secretary. It's Greta he likes."

"You are telling me? Well, we go, eh? We step on it. Because I too have made the bet on the Americano."

. . . .

The carpenters toiled day and night. Jergins divided them into crews and hired a barge which he tied up to the Della Dear. Scaf came out in a motor launch to watch the progress of the job. The man standing in her bow with him was the stranger whom Peggy had seen in the Machete with Greta.

"Good work, Capt. Jergins," Scaf shouted. "Look like you going to raise her okay."

"That's what you hired me for," Jergins told him shortly.

The 10th day of the contract Jergins had the Della Dear's big main pump working on the Rittenbach's forward hatch.

"I could lift her bow tomorrow but I'm afraid she'd shoot up on one end and break in two," he told Peggy.

"Scaf's fit to be tied," she said. "He's trying to find out where you got your stuff. Says he won't pay the bills."

"He will tho."

"And Kurtz has cut the odds down to three to one. Are you getting any sleep?"

"No. The worst part of this job is where the rudder stock goes thru the engine room alley. Brasswork and steel all melted out of shape. They must have used magnesium and thermite to do that."

"Why?"

"Something they didn't want people to see, maybe."

On the 16th [illegible] things looked bad. The tide [illegible] 3 feet at flow, 2 feet higher th[illegible] the highest tide shown on the pilot book, and overflowed into the two forward hatches. Jergins was frantic.

"I logged that tide at five knots, and the book says the fastest flow is two knots."

"Jimmy—are we going to make it?"

"Maybe so, maybe not, Peggy. Means I've got to pump out those hatches again. Twenty-four hours a day from now on."

The deadline was 36 hours off when it happened. Peggy was in Sanchez's launch bobbing hove to close alongside. The battered hulk of the Rittenbach shoved its nose slowly above the surface; her midships followed, struggling, and then she was on top.

Moments passed, suspended in time, and then a wild cheer burst from the Della Dear and her barge. Men danced, sang, screamed. Peggy suddenly found herself hoarse and voiceless, hugging Rafael.

"Rafael! He's won! He's won!"

"Caramba, Peggee, so have we won too, I theenk."

She scrambled aboard the Della Dear and found Jergins in a dead and sodden sleep.

"He saw her come up," Rice told her, "and then he passed out like a light. Four days and nights no sleep."

Kurtz paid off. The celebration at the Machete was the wildest Santa Ysabel had ever seen. Men were delirious with joy, excitement, or gicom. Kurtz was surprisingly cheerful. Scaf was nowhere around.

"I lost some bets but I cleaned up just the same," Kurtz explained, handing over Peggy's five thousand cash. "The skipper will get very drunk tonight, ja. He deserves it. At last he finds time for our pretty Greta who has been moping for him. Count over your money, Miss Peggy, to make sure, and put it in the port captain's safe for the night. Well, the American is a great hero tonight. They make a fine looking pair, he and Greta, eh."

They certainly did, Peggy was thinking, and thinking, too, that she never realized before what a precious idiot Jimmy Jergins really was. It was nauseating, revolting.

"Break open your wine, Kurtz! Who said I wouldn't bounce the old Rittenbach off the bottom, huh? I did it, didn't I? Yeah, in 18 days, 11 hours, and 20 minutes. Greta 'n me are gonna get married. Greates' lil' girl in the worl'. Got a barrel of champagne? Bust hed wide open, we're all goin' t' town in a seagoin' limousine 75 feet long!"

Not Worth the Trouble, Perhaps

She couldn't believe her ears. But she had to, Rafael led her outside.

"I am sorree," he told her. "Very sorree. It was not worth the trouble, perhaps."

"I'm going home, Rafael," she said hollowly, "I'm dead."

Snuggling against her pillow, she fought off the tears with thoughts of home. The first ship out for her. Instead of a thousand she had 55 hundred. A wardrobeful of clothes, a trip, a car—and then another job, and as far as men were concerned, the devil with them. Tomorrow she would resign.

That made her think of Scaf, who hadn't been at the Machete. She knew how Charlie loved parties. Obeying an instinct that grabbed at her sharply she jumped out of bed and into her clothes.

Santa Ysabel slept under a sliver of moon playing hide-and-seek with high-flying clouds. She twitched the key nervously in the lock at Scaf's office and let herself in.

Scaf's quarters did not occupy much space. There was an outer entry, a railing, and the enclosure occupied by Peggy's desk and a filing cabinet. Beyond was the square cubicle where Scaf transacted business. She reached to pull a light cord when a shuffling sound froze her. Some one groaned deeply.

A chair grated across the floor. Then the groan was unmistakable. She pushed the door soundlessly ajar and her eyes, accustomed to the darkness, made out a huddled shape. And in the moment when she recognized it as Jimmy Jergins her heart went on a strike. She knelt and said, "Jimmy, what have they done to you?"

He did not answer and she saw why. He had been very efficiently gagged. She found a sharp paper cutter.

"I took a good sock on the head," he told her. "It was in the alley back of Kurtz's. It was damned silly of me because I knew I was going to get it."

"It's an awful bump."

"Takes an awful bump to lay me cold. Look, I've got to get going. Those guys will have the Rittenbach back on the bottom—if they haven't put her there already."

"What about—Greta?"

"She's one of the mob. I've always known that."

"Jimmy," she said, "I guess I'm away behind you. You were awfully drunk the last time I saw you."

"That was part of the act. Look, honey, we've got to move, but fast."

"I know where Rafael hides the key to his launch."

They were a mile into the bay before he came and sat next to her and took the steering wheel from her.

"That Heinie boat was an awful sight when she kicked up this afternoon or was it yesterday, I guess. Crabs, lobsters, squid crawling around in her. Never saw so much slime. But I found out why they wanted to keep her down. She's an engineer's dream. Flash boilers, double stage turbine, pressure gauges that showed she operated under a 1,200 pound head of steam. I'm telling you that's terrific. Unheard of. And I know something about power plants in ships."

"There she is." Peggy could make out a dark shape dead ahead.

He throttled down. A cable's length off a voice hailed the launch.

"Rico!" Jergins shouted joyfully. "Good boy, Rico! I wasn't sure whether I'd find him dead or alive."

The hulk of the Rittenbach groaned and strained at its hawsers bobbing gently in the long swell. Rico pushed a long arm down and helped her aboard.

"What happened?" Jergins demanded quickly. "Something must have."

"Plenty, boss," Rico said grinning. "You missed some fun. Couple of fellows come out with a blowtorch. They were all set to burn off that old scow's tank tops and then dynamite her plates in when I caught 'em. They'd have had her flooded again in no time."

"What fellows? Where are they?"

"Layin' in the scuppers up forward. I had to use a wrench on one of them."

The one who wasn't hurt was Scaf. Jergins said, "Where's your buddy, Scaf?"

"Capt. Jergins, you will not be hurting me? I have not done nothing, word of honor, nothing!"

"Pass up the honor. Who is he?"

"A bad man, captain. A very bad, bad man. He is an agent from Germany. Last week he flew up to the capital special for this job from some place down south of here. I would not do nothing, captain, word of honor. That man would have killed me cold."

"I wouldn't be in the least astonished. Well, maybe the presidente will only give you the rest of your life in a stone cell."

Peggy was waiting, standing at the rail watching the sliver of moon darting amid racing clouds, when he came to her.

"So the Rittenbach's on top and she stays on top, thanks to a mighty plucky little girl," he said.

"Much obliged, Jimmy. I'm glad." Her voice was tired and the eagerness had gone out of it.

"Better go ashore and catch up on your sleep."

"Guess I'd better. . . . I'm going home tomorrow."

"Not tomorrow. There'll be a real celebration. The presidente and a flock of big shots are coming down so we can turn this Heinie over officially."

"That'll be wonderful—for you and Greta—won't it?"

"Greta will be all tucked away by tomorrow, in the hoosegow. She's thru. Washed up. Look, do you really think I'm dumb enough to fall for a dame like Greta when you're hovering around?"

"Jimmy Jergins, don't tell me you're some kind of a G-man?"

"No darling, just an I man—on the side, like. Naval intelligence. The presidente down here began to suspect some shenanigans on this job so I came down for a looksee. And look what I found!"

"What, Jimmy? Tell me what you found?"

And before he kissed her he held her at arm's length and said: "Tomorrow I'll rub out Della and put Peggy in the spot. It'll just fit. And another thing, if I'd told you I've spent all my life looking for a redhead, you'd have made it tough for me. I know redheads."

HILLS OF FEAR

desire to go back to Beulah's Tavern. It was the memory of things which she had been thru that kept her here, and the thought that if she were to leave now she would probably return tomorrow to find Billings had been ahead of her.

She had halted in the moment of irresolution and she was about to go on when she heard some one moving nearby. The sound was very slight. It was the faint hiss of footsteps in loose sand. It ceased and she was searching for the man who had made it, when she met her second surprise.

It was a little patch of light. But it was not like any light that she had ever seen before. It was as if the sand at the bottom of the dump had been bewitched. A myriad of cobwebbed streaks and specks, some of these latter the size of peas, shone like white fire; they pulsated as if they were alive.

She had forgotten her trepidations and she was marveling over the spectacle. Then murder came to turn her wonder into blank horror.

A man was kneeling in front of the strange light. She got that much before the glow disappeared. She caught sight of another form approaching this one at the same moment. It was as dark as night under the bank where the two men were. They were nothing more than shapes, a little blacker than the surrounding darkness.

A thin streak of fire leaped out of the shadows and she heard the flat report of a revolver. When she looked again, the second man had gone. The one who had been kneeling before the lighted place in the sand moved then.

Hide and Seek Is an Old Game

She did not know why she ran to him, but she was standing over him, and he was not moving now. He was lying on his back. His face was upturned, a dark streak of blood was crawling down one cheek.

She heard some one running toward her. She turned and fled.

Hide and seek is one of the oldest games in existence. It dates away back to the grim days when the human race was in its infancy. The players are often grown men. And he who loses sometimes hears the clap of death's cold hand on the goal, counting him out.

The game which Marian had stumbled upon at Contact Hill was like a good many others of its sort. The rules which children observe were not being given the slightest consideration. As is usually the case with adults, it was every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost. This method often begets cross purposes. There were several of these here, to complicate matters. Two of them had begun before her arrival. Billings was hunting her and Henry Piper was hunting Billings. The third complication, which was to precipitate tragedy, came later on.

Billings' mistake was natural. As always happens in western canyons on clear summer evenings, the dusk was crawling up the low places while the light hung to the slopes above them. When the little justice of the peace stole down the winding road, there were a few stretches when the fresh imprints of tires still showed plainly. He took it for granted that these had been left here by Marian's car. He was somewhat puzzled when he drew near the old ore mill and failed to discover the convertible roadster, but the shadows were thick here and the tracks did not show now.

He thought he had gone by her parking place and he let it go at that. If he had used a little more care then, he would have picked up the imprints again, but he was fairly sweating with impatience to overtake her before she overhauled Bill Farley's possessions in the old mill office. So he failed to learn that Red Warrington and Sam were busy at their own affairs at the foot of the tailings dump, half a mile away.

To the average man, going about his business in the normal fashion, Billings' frame of mind would seem, to put it mildly, curious. During the entire drive from Gold Center he had been telling himself that he didn't know what he was going to do with Marian when he overtook her.

It was as if he were two men: one of them a cautious little creature whose largest adventure in misdoing hadn't gone beyond inducing trusting souls to invest good money in dubious promotions; the other a warped little monster, twisted by fear to deadliness. And the revulsion which came over him in those moments when he found himself face to face with his own terrible intention and left him racked with sudden nausea, made him still deadlier.

One of these spasms seized him when he saw the old ore mill clinging to the hillside like an oversized porous plaster. The pale sands of the tailings dump stretched away from its lower end at a right angle and disappeared around a bend of the canyon. The office was at the upper end of the building and a narrow pathway climbed the slope to it by a series of zigzags, but the trail was in full view of the office windows. There was nothing formidable about the girl whom he thought to be behind those windows now but the bare idea of being seen by her before he did the things which he knew he was going to do, was appalling. So, instead of going by the trail, he took a roundabout course which led him back up the canyon bed and over the arid hillside. He was stealing among the rocks and sage clumps keeping out of range from the office windows, when Piper came down the road.

Piper caught sight of Billings dodging in and out among the boulders and the brush clumps and slipped back into the willow thicket where the little gray fox was lurking. This maneuvering on the part of his quarry puzzled him and he was still trying to understand it when Billings vanished behind a granite outcrop. A few seconds later the little figure reappeared. It was darting toward the mill now. This was what Piper had expected from the beginning. He nodded with satisfaction.

"That runt," he told himself, "is so crooked that he couldn't take a straight line to cross the street." He stayed where he was a moment longer, stroking his thick beard. According to his premises there was but one reason for Billings' trip to Gold Center. Piper's sluggish mind returned to the two handled leather mail sack which he had hidden along with the transplanted loot of previous robberies early that same afternoon. "Okay," he murmured. "He's getting hot now. Let's see if he can find it."

He stole out of the thicket and went up the hill, keeping the mill between himself and his quarry.

If Marian had happened to look up just then she would have seen him, for her car had made much better time from the summit than either of these two had made on foot, and she had arrived a few minutes after Piper. If it hadn't been for the silence of her engine and the fact that the roadster had impetus enough to carry it up the slope to its parking place between the bunk houses without the help of the gears, both of the pair by the old mill would have heard her.

The tailings dump came to an end half a mile down the canyon. Near the break of the bank here, an old Navajo blanket was spread on the pale sand. The green and red fabric billowed with various movements beneath it and presently two pairs of legs appeared; the bodies followed. Red Warrington and Sam got to their feet and shook themselves.

"I'd say," the prospector announced, "this stuff carries tungsten. But it's hard to tell how much." He squatted on his haunches and busied himself stowing away what looked like a cradle telephone receiver into the black box which he had shown Red early that afternoon.

"These fluorescent lamps," he went on, "give mighty close indications of the amount of tungsten in the rock. Even the big companies use 'em now in their mines. But you got to have darkness, and we kept kicking up the edges of this blanket. Too much light leaked in."

"Looks as if I'm going to establish a motive for Bill Farley's murder right soon," Red said. "I wish it would hurry and get dark."

Sam got up and looked around him.

"Canyon's narrower by the mill," he said. "What say we move up there? We can find places where we can get to work right now, the chances is." He folded up the blanket. "May as well leave this right here. We can pick it up when we come back to our cars."

"We might forget it," Red objected. "Besides, I left my cigarets on the seat, and I'd better get my flashlight. That fancy lamp of yours is all right for showing mineral, but that's all it's good for. We don't want to break our necks. You go ahead, and I'll catch up with you."

HILLS OF FEAR

"That runt," he told himself, "is so crooked he couldn't take a straight line to cross the street."

What Has Gone Before

Marian Farley is driving out to Gold Center, Nev., to settle the estate of her brother Bill, who had written her he was about to strike it rich just before she got news he was killed in an auto accident. From her hotel window in Tonopah she sees Red Warrington in the street below. She doesn't know him, but he looks up and blows her a kiss. Then she hears voices of three men, plotting a robbery, floating up from the floor below. As she leaves she meets the three men in the elevator, recognizing them by their voices. One is a soft-spoken older man, the other two are young men, and she hears them called Bennie and Oscar. Continuing on to Gold Center, she stops by Beulah's tavern and encounters Red again. Just as she is explaining her trip to Beulah, the owner, Bennie and Oscar hold up the place and steal the mail sack with its $20,000 pay roll. Red leaves immediately after the robbery. At Gold Center she meets Herbert Billings, crooked promoter, justice of the peace, and administrator of Bill's estate. He tells Marian Bill's property at Contact Hill is worthless, tho it once yielded gold and afterward tungsten. But he offers to buy it from her for $500. She refuses to sell. Billings directs her to an auto camp run by Mr. and Mrs. Piper, who also run a snake farm. Piper turns out to be the older man Marian heard plotting the robbery and is deputy sheriff. He and his wife have intercepted the bandits and switched sacks on them, the Pipers taking the pay roll money. Billings, anxious to get rid of Marian, takes a dangerous snake from the farm and puts it in Marian's bed. Red Warrington hears Marian scream and goes to her rescue, killing the snake. But he slips out before the Pipers see him. Piper, infuriated because his favorite snake is killed, and knowing Billings is to blame, goes to Billings and reminds him of having Piper drive Bill's car onto Skeet Rand's garage pit so the brake rods could be filed. Marian drives out to her brother's mine to investigate, not knowing that Billings, gun in hand, drives after her. Piper, anxious to get even with Billings, tells his wife to pack their things and drive out to the stone house where the Swede, a prospector, lives. He plans to meet her there after he has evened things with Billings.

INSTALMENT VI.

PIPER got into his green sedan and drove away, after he had paid a final visit to the snake farm.

Earlier that afternoon he had been talking over the wall telephone in Beulah's tavern. He had been talking for some time when he said:

"Yes. An inch or so shorter than the other man, she says. About five feet eight. Same style of suit; bottle green breeches and a light brown coat; it's one of those flashy, tight-waisted coats; dark eyes and slick black hair. Anywhere from 25 to 30 years old. You say this one ties up, too? Okay, I'll be with you in—let me see—I ought to make it in two hours and a half if I step on it."

"Might be, we're lucky, Beulah," he announced.

Like all good western sheriffs, his appearance was in keeping with small town Rotary or Kiwanis for his gray felt hat was conservatively patterned. He was, like 9 men out of 10 in this desert country, during summer months, without a coat.

"We could," he added, "stand a little luck right now." He stuffed the notebook, which he had been consulting, into a pocket of his shirt. "We got a nice break when they picked out your place. I bet there ain't a woman between here and Salt Lake City—or a man either—would have had sense enough to remember those two descriptions."

"Steve," Beulah told him, "is due back any minute. I sent him to Death Valley Junction after bread. The bakery truck got hung up down the road and we ran short."

"He'll keep," the sheriff said.

"Steve might have noticed the license plate," Beulah suggested. "He was able to see outside the door and I wasn't."

"I was talking with Olanche," the sheriff said. "I'd got 'em on the phone before and told 'em to watch the road. They picked up two suspects, and the time ties in just about right. So do the descriptions, including those roadhouse suits. And the fact that they were wearing coveralls over them looks just fine. But the car isn't right. I got an idea they switched cars somewhere along the line. I'll see Steve when I come back, and if these are the right parties, I'll stop off at Gold Center to let that girl identify them."

Luck Takes a Hoped-For Quirk

With which he departed and the luck for which he had expressed a wish took a quirk then, for it timed his movements so that he was well on his way before Steve's return, and the tidings which he had received from the little California town under the eastern flanks of the Sierras made him keep his car to 60 miles an hour when he passed westward thru Gold Center.

Beulah Smith was taking it easy in her sitting room when Steve arrived with the bread. Her liking for this little sanctuary came from memories of 20 mule teams and lukewarm champagne, of high-graders whose loot of ore held more gold than rock, of faro dealers and dance hall girls and no inconsiderable number of extremely nice persons from various degrees of social strata.

A period when the virtuous lived swiftly and learned many things which would have been denied them elsewhere. It had been too good to last. And, after it was all over, it had left a satisfaction approaching surfeit.

In these latter days, with bygones behind her and recurring only as golden memories, or occasionally as bits of incisive wisdom, she found it very pleasant to sit and rock, with a family Bible and a family album and several crocheted tidies near at hand to bring an atmosphere of tranquility.

It was with natural reluctance that she brought her thoughts back to the recent violence which had disturbed her present conservative existence. She called Steve to the door and told him of the sheriff's visit. And this reminded him of something. He said:

"There was another man mixed up in the holdup. A man with whiskers." He delivered the message which Marian had left, and added. "Corn-colored. That's what she said. A man with a corn-colored beard."

Beulah's murmured comment was inaudible, for her ideas of respectability were out of keeping with this free and easy day when gentle ladies often find pride in violent language. Steve closed the door and returned to his cash register. She kept on rocking. Now and then she eyed the family Bible or the album, but neither of these household gods allayed the restlessness which was taking possession of her. Finally she got up from her chair.

When she appeared in the doorway she was wearing a garden hat, with little baby roses draped along its wide brim, and she was carrying a large silver mesh handbag.

"Time's wasting," she announced. "And with the phone lines in the shape they are, Lord knows how long it's going to take to get the sheriff's office. I'm leaving that to you. Tell 'em what you told me. Tell 'em the only whiskers like that in this end of the county belong to Henry Piper at Gold Center. And, if the sheriff calls in from Olanche, they're to tell him to stop off at Gold Center on the way back home. Might be that I'll be waiting for him there."

She breezed out and she was on the road before Steve reached the wall telephone.

Marian was dodging Bolivar, the snake, then. Billings was sitting in his office. Henry Piper and his wife were in their cabin discussing hidden loot and the imminent possibility of a girl meeting an extremely ugly death. Beulah Smith was wondering if she wasn't on a wild goose chase.

She was, she assured herself, going to a great deal of trouble for no particular purpose. But she was keeping so firm a tread on the accelerator that she narrowly avoided capsizing.

There was a light going in the grocery store, another in the lunch counter and taproom next door, and a third in Skeet Rand's shop, behind the service station. In this far-flung neighborhood, whose extent included some hundreds of square miles just east of the Nevada-California boundary, there were few permanent dwellers with whose idiosyncracies Beulah was not familiar. She pulled into the graveled space before the shop door.

Skeet came out, wiping his hands on a piece of waste. Ten minutes later Beulah had learned all about the departures of Herbert Billings and Henry Piper, and some details concerning Bolivar's demise.

"One thing I do know," Skeet said, "the girl's all right. She pulled out of town right after it happened. Reckon she got a bellyfull of Gold Center. I bet she never stops this side of Mojave."

It seemed more than likely. The trip, so Beulah was thinking, had turned out just as might have been expected. She never did know why she stayed over for a bite of supper at the lunch counter. She wasn't ravenous enough for so perilous a gastronomic adventure. As things turned out it was as well that she did attempt it.

About the time she seated herself before the counter, Marian was watching a strange light and Herbert Billings was preparing to do murder at Contact Hill. Last, but by no means least in its influence on events which were yet to come, a rusty 10 penny nail was devastating the right front tire of Beulah Smith's sedan.

Ranges and Flats, North to South

There is a huge relief map of Nevada in the Mackay School of Mines at Reno. Standing over it, you are looking down upon an expanse of long wrinkles. They consist of mountain ranges and the intervening flats, and all of them extend in the same general direction: from north to south. The deserted mining camp which men called Contact Hill was tucked away in a steep canyon on the western flank of one of these ranges, within 50 miles of the California-Nevada boundary.

The surfaced highway which Marian had left took a turn southward as it approached the eastern side of the range, in order to enter a canyon which led to the summit by comparatively easy grades. The branch road slanted northward toward another and steeper canyon.

In bygone days this dirt road had much traffic and the flat which Marian was crossing was still scarred by a wide network of old ruts. Weaving in and out among these, she encountered many chuckholes, and the dust had camouflaged them so neatly that she frequently had to gear down into low in order to save the crankcase from concealed rocks.

And when she reached the narrow canyon which led to the summit of the range, she was not paying any attention to landmarks. She did not see the Swede prospector's stone house which stood among some withered poplars a few rods to the right of the canyon mouth.

It was her ignorance of topography that brought her to mischance a little later on, and by so doing, changed the timing in the arrival of three persons at Contact Hill. That slight alteration had a good deal to do with bringing about some of the events which followed during the next hour.

Her motor was boiling before she was half way to the summit, and this worried her considerably. She was beginning to get nervous by the time she reached a spot where the canyon forked. The road split here. One set of tracks led off to the left, the other went straight on. It seemed to her as if the main travel held to the latter and she followed it.

Before she had gone half a mile she was suspecting her mistake. A quarter of an hour later, the little car clawed up a hair-raising pitch and rounded an abrupt turn. She slammed on the brakes at the foot of a sheer cliff which rose a good five hundred feet above her. A heap of rusting tin cans and a wooden windlass at the mouth of an abandoned prospect hole were the only signs that any one had ever been here.

It took her some time to turn around for the ground was steep and there was little room. The panicky feeling which comes with the realization of having been lost in a strange range of mountains still had hold of her when she returned to the forks of the canyon. She was in half a mind to call the whole thing off and drive back to Beulah's tavern.

There was, she remembered, an auto camp behind the eating place. She could spend the night there in security, and it certainly would be much pleasanter to visit Contact Hill in broad daylight tomorrow morning. If she had known of the two cars which had passed this way since she had wandered off on the unused side road, and what was going on in the minds of their drivers, she would undoubtedly have yielded to that impulse. As it was, she turned her roadster into the stony track which led toward Contact Hill.

Of that pair who had passed her without knowing it, Herbert Billings was the first to arrive in the deserted camp. While Marian was at the forks of the canyon on the eastern side of the range, debating whether she should turn back or go on, he was walking down the gulch on the western side, between whose flanks the old mining camp lay. He had left his car behind him on the summit of the mountain. He had parked it among some twisted juniper trees, well out of sight from the road, and he was keeping quiet now, for the old mill, where Bill Farley had sojourned, was only a little way ahead of him.

Henry Piper was driving across the summit just then. He was nearing the break of the grade where the road descended into this gulch on the western side. Up here there were few rocks, the soil was loose, and the tracks of Billings' car showed plainly where they turned off among the trees. Piper got out of his green sedan and followed the fresh trail on foot.

When he reached its end, he delayed long enough to remove the spark plugs from Billings' motor and pocket them. Then he hurried back to the road and drove his own car off to a good hiding place on the other side. He left it there and walked down the gulch to Contact Hill.

In this manner these two arrived, one of them clasping an automatic pistol in his pocket with sweating fingers while he hunted for the girl whom he had unwittingly passed; the other stalking him. And neither of them was aware that Red Warrington and his prospector friend, Sam, were setting to work on a project of their own half a mile farther down the canyon. They were trying to find a motive for Billings to have murdered Bill.

Meanwhile, Marian was driving up the eastern side of the range toward this ugly game of hide and seek. The light grew stronger when her roadster emerged from between the steep walls of the eastern canyon. She drove across a brief tableland where the road looped easily among junipers and stunted lodge pole pines which looked like oversized Christmas trees. She came round a sweeping curve.

The road dived into the western canyonhead a few yards ahead of her; the gulch twined down to a wide plain, which reached away and away into faint desert mysteries.

Shrinks from Threatening Silence

The loneliness beneath her was so poignant that she stopped her car and sat there, gazing down upon those silences. She felt them mounting toward her and she shrank as from a threat. The desert got her then. Finally she slipped in the clutch and started down the winding grade. Her second-hand convertible was a last year's model and the valves had been ground in Salt Lake City two days ago. It made but little sound.

Henry Piper had arrived in Contact Hill a few minutes behind Billings. Her own arrival followed his almost as closely. The road down which she eased her car was in the canyon bed, and there were stretches where it was already growing dark.

The tailings dump was on the left, it was like a series of pale sand dunes rising from the depths of the canyon. At its upper end, some 50 feet or so above the road, a building whose sides and roof were of corrugated iron, clung to the steep hillsides. It consisted of three sections, one below the other, like a flight of steps. Where the windows had been there were blank spaces now, except in one corner of the topmost section. This she told herself, would be the mill, and those windows should mark the office where Bill had spent his last days.

She left her car between two old bunk houses on the uphill side of the road and she had only gone a few steps when she heard a sound that stopped her heart.

The sound had come from somewhere without the thicket. It was like the shriek of a woman, but there was an undernote before the shrill crescendo—a lower note whose wildness was not human.

Marian stood stock still during the brief silence which followed, and then the cry was repeated.

She was still frozen to the spot when she saw something stirring among the bushes. A little gray fox glided out into the open. It was so small, its litheness was so beautiful, and the effort which it had made to conquer its timidity while it inspected her was so appealing that she was ashamed of her own fear.

The dusk was thick in the canyon bed, it was so dense that the little fox had seemed like a tiny ghost emerging from the shadows, dissolving immediately thereafter. The pale waste dump seemed to give off a faint light of its own. She looked about her and she was seized for the second time by the

Artur Schnabel to Play with Symphony This Week

Noted Pianist to Make Three Appearances

By Claudia Cassidy.

History repeats itself, with poignant variations. Last summer the great Austrian pianist, Artur Schnabel, appeared at Ravinia, and because he dislikes the single solo performance he played a superior series of four concertos with the Chicago Symphony orchestra under the guest direction of George Szell. He played the Beethoven fourth, the mighty "Emperor," the Brahms in B flat and the Mozart in C minor. Milling around the crowded pavilion, the entranced customers debated hotly over which was the finest. I never could decide between the Beethoven fourth and the Mozart—broiling weather took toll of the other two.

Obviously, such success was too good a thing to drop by the summer wayside. It was arranged that Mr. Schnabel, who had not appeared with the orchestra in midseason for nearly 10 years, should return to Orchestra hall to play the two Beethoven concertos with Frederick Stock. It also was arranged that they should immortalize those performances on records. Fortunately, the recording was done at Orchestra hall in late summer, and Mr. Stock said afterward, with a wry twinkle, "Even Schnabel said it was good."

Artur Schnabel.

Schnabel, the perfectionist, had outside support on that opinion. Toscanini's son, who heard a test record in the east, was so impressed by its technical perfection that he exclaimed [probably not for publication], "Father never had a record like that!"

We soon shall know for ourselves, because the first of the two albums—the Beethoven fourth—is overdue at the record shops. All Chicago will ask is a typical Stock performance. There could be no finer memorial.

Meanwhile the weeks fly past and Mr. Schnabel arrives to play those Orchestra hall performances, with Hans Lange conducting. Tuesday afternoon they play the "Emperor," and Thursday night and Friday afternoon [and Monday, Nov. 30, in Milwaukee] the Beethoven fourth.

Would that it were possible to tabulate the newest ballet development so neatly. Leonide Massine, as you know, has left the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo for Ballet theater. Out of this move comes a wonderful maze of conflicting statements. The Ballet Russe, for instance, states that it retains the rights to all Massine works in its répertoire, specifically mentioning "Gaite Parisienne," "Tricorne," "Capriccio Espagnol," "Beau Danube," "Saint Francis," and "Boutique Fantasque." Ballet theater, unabashed, states that Mr. Massine will at once begin rehearsals of three of his ballets—namely: "Boutique Fantasque," "Tricorne," and "Capriccio Espagnol." It looks like another lawsuit.

Leonide Massine.

Dancers, it seems, have a passion for litigation, and with every lawsuit the public suffers and business slumps. Not that people mind the tinder box temperament, but that the répertoire gets bashed out of shape. When Massine broke with Col. de Basil he lost some of his finest ballets. One in particular, his superb setting of Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique, never was worth a dime without him. He is the one dancer capable of holding it intact with his magnificent mime as the opium drugged poet.

Now Massine goes to Ballet theater and the Ballet Russe may revive "Saint Francis." Without him it may revive and it may not. It was as deeply his own as "Boutique" was his and Danilova's and as "Beau Danube" was his and the feathery Riabouchinska's, whirling off his arm in a dust of gauze.

But one good thing may come out of this move. For four seasons Massine has tried to do too much. He was chief choregrapher, artistic director, and stellar dancer of Ballet Russe. He danced seldom, and his ballets diminished in quality until "Saratoga" was a flat failure. Perhaps the fresh fields of Ballet theater will restore his best work. He has enormous recuperative power. Don't forget that when ballet crawled thru the depression between Diaghileff and De Basil, Massine was working drearily in a New York movie palace. Given fresh impetus, he created "Choreartium," "Saint Francis," "Symphonie Fantastique," and many other ballets. He may do it again.

TO SING NEW OPERA ROLE

Grace Moore returns to the Chicago Opera company Monday night to sing a new role—Marguerite in Gounod's "Faust." With Miss Moore in the Civic Opera house cast will be Armand Tokatyan as Faust, Richard Bonelli as Valentine and the Russian basso, Alexander Kipnis, as Mephistopheles.

Notes of Music and Musicians

Rudolph Ganz will play Liszt's concerto No. 1, E-flat major, at Orchestra hall Monday evening, Nov. 30, when he appears as soloist with the St. Louis Symphony orchestra under the direction of Vladimir Golschmann. Mr. Golschmann's program also holds Sir Thomas Beecham's transcription of Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd," Debussy's "The Afternoon of a Faun," and Shostakovich's Symphony No. 1.

When the Fine Arts String quartet opens its Fullerton hall series of twilight chamber music concerts Dec. 6 the program will offer Frederick's Stock's Quartet, Opus 6, in addition to Boccherini's Quintet, C major, for two cellos, and Mendelssohn's Quintet, B major, for two violas. Assisting artists are Daniel Saidenberg, cellist, and Armand Roth, violist.

Starting this afternoon in the little theater on the 17th floor of the Kimball building, Rudolph Reiners, violinist, and Saul Dorfman, pianist, will present a series of five recitals at which they will play all the Beethoven sonatas for violin and piano. Today's program offers the Sonata, Opus 12, No. 1, and Sonata, Opus 24, known as the Spring sonata.

• • •

The Northwestern University Symphony orchestra will appear in concert at Scott hall, Evanston, this afternoon at 4 o'clock, George Dasch conducting. The program features Mr. Dasch's transcription of the largo from Beethoven's sonata for piano, No. 7, played in memory of Frederick Stock, and Beethoven's Concerto for Piano, G major, with Agnes Conover as soloist.

• • •

The Fourth Presbyterian church will hold its Thanksgiving choral service this evening at 8 o'clock, with Barrett Spach, organist and director of the choir, playing Sowerby's Prelude, Choral and Fugue and Eric De Lamarter's Carillon. The program is chosen entirely from the works of American composers, including Horatio Parker, Randall Thompson, Rossetter Cole, Hugh Porter, Robert Sanders, and Peter C. Lutkin, in addition to Mr. Sowerby and Mr. De Lamarter.

• • •

Radio auditions are worth the air they are heard on, says the Metropolitan Opera company, which opens its eighth series of such auditions a week from this afternoon. Twelve winners of previous auditions have appeared in a total of 886 performances at the Metropolitan. The high record belongs to Anna Kaskas, a winner in 1936, who has sung 211 performances. Nor need a runner-up be discouraged. Rise Stevens won a contract that way.

• • •

Marian Anderson will appear in a Civic Opera house recital a week from this afternoon, under the auspices of the History and Enjoyment of Music series. He program will include music of Purcell, Haydn, a Schubert group, an aria form Saint-Saëns' "Samson and Delilah," songs by Griffes and Cyril Scott, and a group of spirituals. Miss Anderson recently established an annual award to aid young people of talent to follow their chosen careers. Funds for the scholarships are based on the $10,000 Bok award presented to Miss Anderson in March, 1941. The Marian Anderson Award is administered by three trustees: Alexander L. Jackson, of Chicago, Hubert T. Delany of New York, and Mrs. Ethel De Priest of Philadelphia. All applications must be approved by Miss Anderson.

The Oriana a cappella choir will sing a twilight musical at the New First Congregational church this afternoon at 5 o'clock. There is no admission charge.

Miss Jepson to Sing in 'Manon' Here Saturday

By Cecil Smith.

The centenary of the birth of Jules Massenet, one of the most prolific and successful composers of French opera, will be celebrated at the Civic Opera house by a performance of "Manon" on Saturday afternoon. Helen Jepson will make her first appearance of the season as the heroine, wearing the costumes Omar Kiam of Hollywood designed for her when she first sang the part here in 1940. Richard Crooks will appear opposite Miss Jepson in the tenor rôle of the Chevalier Des Grieux, and George Czaplicki will be cast as Lescaut.

Massenet chose an unfortunate date upon which to be born. His hundredth birthday fell on May 12, of all unseasonable times, and we have had to wait six months in order to have an opera season in which to pay formal tribute to his first appearance on the earthly scene.

Massenet was essentially a theater musician. Apart from his 31 operas, the catalog of his works includes nothing more pretentious than a piano concerto [which nobody ever plays], a couple of overtures, and a variety of cantatas and oratorios. Most of his orchestral music is light in character, after the pattern of the familiar "Scènes Pittoresques" and "Scènes Alsaciennes." If he had never written any operas, his name would scarcely be remembered today.

But these operas represent the very essence of the French tradition of lyric drama. The music, quite variable in the value of its essential ideas, is marked by the constant qualities of taste, charm, and fluency. Thruout his career of 45 years as an opera composer, he remained clear of the Wagnerian influence, which had tempted such contemporaries as Chausson and Chabrier to employ a heavy style that did not become their Gallic temperaments. In place of vast orchestral sonorities, Massenet preferred a simpler and more melodious style, taking great pains always to fit the rhythmic nuances of the music to the subtle inflections of the French language.

Massenet's first successful opera [produced in 1881 after four less happy endeavors] was "Hérodiade," a setting of the Salome story in which the composer employed a rather stentorian and brash style, which he thereafter abandoned and never resumed. "Manon," first staged in Paris in 1884, displayed the more reticent manner which became the hallmark of Massenet's mature work. Full of fresh and choice melodic materials, enhanced by effective and imaginative harmonization, "Manon" remains the finest of all Massenet's operas.

After "Manon," Massenet composed operas at a great rate. By 1902, when "Le Jongleur de Notre Dame" was produced at Monte Carlo, he had completed his important creative span; "Don Quichotte," "Cléopatre," and the other operas written in the last decade of his life [he died in 1912] proved to be devoid of inspiration. But his career had brought forth "Le Cid," "Werther," "Thaïs," and "La Navarraise," all of which possessed sufficient merit to place him in the high regard of the public.

Of late years in Chicago the name of Massenet has meant no more than an occasional staging of "Manon" or "Thaïs." But during the era of Mary Garden — which ended, operatically speaking, a decade ago — his operas received faithful sponsorship at the Auditorium theater, and later at the Civic Opera house. Between 1910, when our resident company was founded, and 1932, no fewer than 11 Massenet operas were mounted, some of these attained only a handful of performances, while others retained a more or less consistent place in the repertory thruout the whole period.

When you consider that the 32 year history of locally produced opera records the presentation of only nine different operas by Verdi and nine by Wagner, you can readily see that Massenet fared well in those days. Of course, if you count the total number of performances the Verdi and Wagner operas have received, Massenet quickly gets left in the shade.

In that heyday of local opera, deficits did not matter much. Now they matter a great deal, and very good operas like "Werther" and "La Navarraise" become unwarranted box office risks for Fortune Gallo, since the public no longer knows of these works. Yet whenever "Werther," in particular, is finally restored, I think every one will be amazed at the poignant expressiveness of the score.

Massenet loved to write operas about heroines tinged with scarlet. Salome and Thaïs and Cleopatra awakened his typically Gallic interest in exotic and alluring women. While Manon, a French girl of humble origin, lacked the oriental lushness of these others, she was scarcely a more discreet character.

The rôle of Manon, who could never decide between love and riches, and died pathetically without enough of either, has been impersonated by many a famous singing actress in Chicago and at Ravinia. Oddly enough, however, Mary Garden took little interest in the part, and never sang it after 1914.

Perhaps the most unforgettable Manon of all was Lucrezia Bori, who moved thru the part at Ravinia with piquant grace, and sang with an artful simplicity that went straight to the heart of her audiences. Edith Mason defined less of the character in her acting, but her vocalization of the music has never been surpassed here, and the scintillant gavotte has never been the same in the 19 years since she last sang it.

COMING TO TRIANON

On Friday Carl Ravazza, whose brilliant orchestra made a hit at the Colony club here several years ago, opens an engagement at the Trianon ballroom, replacing the current and popular Lawrence Welk.

Music Ideally Suited to the Camellia House

By Will Davidson.

It all goes to show that if you just wait long enough the Wright band is sure to come along.

Camellia House, that salon flambé in the Drake hotel, has offered many orchestras, but never one better suited to its particular personality than Charlie Wright's. It was one of those sight unseen, sound unheard bookings—based on some ecstatic word of mouth plugging on the part of those who had been converted to Wrighteousness in Florida and the chillier sections of the east coast. But it turned out to be as smart a booking as the Drake has made in a long time.

Dawn Roland.
[M. Korman Photo.]

Mr. Wright is a very personable young man, witty, enthusiastic, and completely devoid of the less savory elements that are generally described as "theatrical." By his very naturalness he is a superb showman, and he insists that his music be comfortable, delightful, and versatile.

Mr. Wright has another very great advantage—Mrs. Wright. Known as Dawn Roland, she is petite, beautiful, and a most charming singer. Give her a pair of maraccas and a Latin tune and you will find the floor crowded in front of the bandstand.

These two kids are amusing both on and off the stand. You should hear their moron stories in duet, and you should hear Charlie describe the ballet!

Working with the Wrights now in Camellia House are the veteran and ever popular Lee Sims and Ilomay Bailey. They just opened Friday, so I haven't had a chance to hear them, but from past experience I know this piano-singing team is a sure attraction.

One of the most amazing and amusing bits of entertainment offered by Alvino Rey in the Panther room of the Hotel Sherman is "Stringy," an attachment on his electric guitar that, in effect, sings very understandable words to the tunes Alvino plays. This vox humana effect is a combination of skilful string work by Rey, and a device that permits Mrs. Rey [Louise, of the singing King sisters] to articulate the words. It requires nice timing, and some complicated gadgets, but the result is delightful.

The Panther room is very wise in hanging on to the Makebelieves, for their silent mimicry, keyed with split second precision to recordings of famous singing groups, is superb entertainment.

Chico Marx not only goes on and on at the Blackhawk—he now goes 'round and 'round. The platform on which he plays his piano during floor shows has been made into a turntable so that Chico can, literally, do a turn on the floor.

Two other new features in the Blackhawk revue are Toy and Wing, American born Chinese dance team, and the Ambassadorettes, two girl tumblers.

Boswelling the Bistros:

When Griff Williams comes back to the Empire room of the Palmer House the middle of March he'll start work on the only record for the room that he doesn't now hold—that of duration. In 1935 and '36 Veloz and Yolanda appeared for 36 consecutive weeks. Griff's new contract is for an indefinite period, which probably means a year or for whatever the duration may turn out to be. . . .

Opalita and Garcia, Latin musicians and singers, open Friday in the Pan American café of the Hotel La Salle, where José Manzanares and his orchestra are starred. . . . Sad news from the Mayfair, that Jane Froman will not appear this fall, is leavened by word that lovely Renee De Marco has extended her engagement in the Mayfair room thru Dec. 3. No substitute for Jane has been selected. . . . Now that rationing is so near, I wonder if physicians with bronchial patients will be forced to cut down their cough fee.

A GUY SEES RED

By FLORABEL MUIR

(Copyright: 1942: By Florabel Muir Morrison.)

PEGGY McLEAN, staring thru the binoculars atop the port captain's observation tower, announced with conviction:

"It's him, all right. I can see him rounding Blue Points."

Charlie Scaf demanded:

"You're pretty sure, ain't you, how can you be so sure? I'm asking you, Miss McLean."

"Well," his secretary answered, "I can't read the name Della Dear, Mr. Scaf, because that would be on her stern anyway, wouldn't it, but no boat but a tugboat could be so disreputable looking, like a sheepdog that lives next door to a coal mine."

"Okay, that means we got work to do back at the office, and I want you should get out the entire file on the S. S. Rittenbach so I could refreshen up my mind before that Jimmy Jergins comes in."

Peggy hurried with the typing for all that it was a hot, steamy day, with miasmic wafts of air puffing up from Santa Ysabel's snoozing water front.

Nowadays the tides were running clear over the Rittenbach's deckhouse out there in the roadstead where the German liner lay, held in the sucking grip of the bottom, sinking lower and lower until one day soon she would be beyond all hope of refloating. That's why Charlie Scaf was a nervous wreck.

Peggy couldn't have explained why the arrival of Jim Jergins, owner and master of the Della Dear, could possibly make any difference to her. He had a reputation from Alaska to the canal as a wizard in the salvage trade. She supposed that, like all the other sea captains who put into Santa Ysabel, this fellow would insist on buying her drinks and inviting her to dinner.

Just the same, she was looking forward with anticipation to seeing the sort of chap he was, because she knew that Greta Kruger was set to begin stalking him as soon as he arrived.

. . . .

And now Miss Kruger was primped and loaded to take Jim Jergins into camp. Measuring Greta with the cold appraisal that one girl can bring to bear on another, Peggy found her pretty formidable opposition.

Five minutes alone with Jergins, that's all she wanted. She'd recite the quick highlights of Greta's record at Santa Ysabel and, if that wasn't enough to put him off her, he must be a dope. Of course, she'd tell him some of the things she had overheard at Scaf's marine insurance office.

If he had a brain in his head he would know that something mighty queer was cooking on the waterfront of the mongrel banana port. Two other outfits already had essayed to lift the Rittenbach, but she defied them.

The republic couldn't afford to play host to a sunken hulk that would certainly become a menace to navigation. Somebody important wanted the Rittenbach to stay down. Peggy couldn't be sure of Charlie Scaf. For one thing, he treated her much too indulgently.

She knew that the big blond who came barging thru the screened door of Scaf's office was Jergins. His bulk kept looming huger as he charged toward her on surprisingly light feet, until he stood over her just beneath the blades of the electric fan that whirled lazily. He took off his bos'n's cap and she giggled to cover her amazement. He was far too divinely handsome, to fit her notion of what the skipper of a slatternly old seagoing tug ought to look like.

"What's so funny?" he demanded, bridling.

"That tuft of hair. It curls down over your forehead so—so cute."

"Cute, huh? Well, forget it, young lady, and dig up an hombre named Scaf."

"I'm very sorry, really. You're Capt. Jergins, aren't you?"

Scaf pounced out of his private office.

"Capt. Jergins?" he cried in his thin, excitable voice.

"Right."

"It took you long enough to make it down here."

"Head winds slowed me. Besides, I'm operating a salvage boat, not a pleasure yacht."

"It's goin' to be a rotten dirty job, Capt. Jergins."

"You never look for anything else in salvage work, Scaf."

"I doubt if you can pull this one off. Others have tried it and failed."

"Uh-huh, so you sent for me. The soft jobs never come my way. Well, I'll be wanting to have a look at her."

"Sure. Come into my office, captain, and we'll talk over the deal."

Peggy was typing with a chattering show of industry when Scaf called her to make out the contract at his dictation.

"What's a nifty trick like you doing down here in this turtle's nest?" Jergins demanded. "Americana, no?"

"Yes, sir," primly. "I am ready, Mr. Scaf."

"Go on, tell me more," Jergins said.

"Okay, mister. I came here to earn enough money so I can go back home and live like a lady. My working hours are from 9 to 4 and it's now quarter to 3. You'll want three carbons, won't you, Mr. Scaf?"

"Redheaded dames are all alike," Jergins grinned.

"I hope," said Peggy, "that you know more about the salvage business than you do about girls with red hair. Because if you don't——"

"Ouch!" cried Jim Jergins. "I know when I've had enough."

Fun Lurking Behind His Eyes

His face was coppered by wind and salt spray and the blue of his eyes stood out against the healthy blaze of his skin. Peggy stuck determinedly to her shorthand notes, resisting the temptation to steal a glance at him, but when he made a point of addressing her on some clause of the document she was to prepare, she couldn't help herself.

". . . and now for the terms. Ten thousand cash on the barrelhead if I bounce her up in 20 days, nothing if I don't."

"No," Peggy blurted. "Not 20 days."

Scaf scowled. "Are you running this deal—or am I right in s'posing that Capt. Jergins and me know our business? Eh, Miss McLean?"

"O, excuse me. It seems such a short time."

"Young lady," said Jergins, "if you knew as much about the salvage business as you do about poking your pretty little freckled nose into other people's affairs——"

"Okay," she interrupted. "I asked for it. Twenty days."

"The phone is ringing, Miss McLean," Scaf said.

It was Rafael calling and he always made excuses to keep her talking. She heard no more of the talk between Jergins and Scaf. She wondered if Charlie had told him what he'd be facing in his attempt to raise the German ship. If he'd mentioned for example, that the Nazi officers, surprisingly opulently supplied with gold, were offering juicy odds that the Rittenbach never would float again. Or the whispers that flicked across the waterfront bars of bribes paid to make certain that no salvage work should succeed.

"The dope!" Peggy told herself with quiet fury. "Why won't he let me wise him up?"

She hoped he would resume his kidding when he came out of Scaf's office, but he didn't give her the least further attention, and presently, glancing up, she knew why. He was staring across the cobbled street at Greta Kruger seated in a blue sport coupe with the top down.

"There," said Jergins, "is my idea of a dish."

Peggy knew he was making his voice loud enough for her to hear.

"A dish of distilled poison, mister," she muttered to herself.

"That is Miss Greta Kruger," Scaf said.

"What's an eye-filler like her doing in this place?" Jergins demanded. "How about introducing me, Scaf?"

"It will be a pleasure. Poor girl, she has a sad history. The Nazis drove her out of Germany because she refused to dance for Hitler. She is lucky to have her life."

Greta was sitting conveniently in a tricked up car across the street. Peggy had a quick hunch that the whole thing had been framed. She was surer of it a little later when she watched Scaf lead Jergins across there to her.

"There goes his $10,000," she cried aloud. She slammed down her notebook and was seized by a crazy urge to cry. Presently the coupe drove off with Jergins beside Greta, and Scaf returned to the office. She was sure she heard him chuckle.

"Why," she accused, "did you introduce that guy to Greta if you really want him to get any work done? You know she's dynamite."

"Miss Peggy," Scaf said with a cold glint in his muddy little brown eyes, "I hire you to keep my books, answer my phone, take my dictation, file my correspondence, and I pay you more than you're worth. How about you minding your own business and let Miss Kruger and me mind ours? This American captain, without even sending a diver to look at the Rittenbach, agrees he will put her on top in 20 days. Am I forcing him? Such a wise guy like him, knows how to take care of himself, without asking you or me, Miss Peggy."

"But, Mr. Scaf, if you want the Rittenbach salvaged why trust the job to such a dope?"

"Who says Capt. Jergins is a dope? He has a good reputation. Who else could I hire? And am I going to hide Greta from him? She would find him quick enough by herself to get burned. I might as well know it now as later on."

She had to admit he was right. Greta would find him. Greta had been in Santa Ysabel nearly a year, coming from no one knew where, and bound, no one knew whither. Besides being breathlessly beautiful, she possessed a talent for making herself agreeable when she wanted to, hence fitted herself into the more or less care-free life of the community.

Peggy hadn't given the matter of Greta much of a hang one way of the other until big, blond Jim Jergins moved into the picture. She tried to tell herself now that she still didn't care. But she did.

. . . .

The job was six days gone when in midafternoon he charged thru the door, as was his custom, like a minor tornado.

"Here comes the Yankee wonder," she taunted. "I hear even your cofferdams won't hold water."

He paused at her desk.

"The old needle again, eh? And sharp. Give me the stuff and I'll build the cofferdams, all right."

"Alibi!" She chanted the word tauntingly. "Your deal says only that you're to raise the Rittenbach, not to make excuses."

"And you don't think I'll do it, do you?"

"Nobody does. In fact, you can get all the 10 to 1 money you want to cover right now that you won't at Machete's or any other bar on the beach."

"Do you mean people are betting I won't bump her up?"

"You wouldn't be knowing, mister, but that's what."

She saw a sudden look of helplessness come into his staring blue eyes and a gush of pity welled into her.

"Perhaps there are quite a few little secrets that you ought to be let in on," she told him.

"I've been all-fired busy out there on my boat. Maybe I ought to catch up with the local gossip."

"Maybe you ought. Listen, big boy, Scaf's out and I'll talk, tho I'll probably be wasting my time." She hammered her words at him in a swift, low voice and he heeded her. "So you're such a trusting soul that you even trust Scaf," she finished. "I don't know where his finger fits into this pie, but somewhere."

"Thanks. Thanks a lot. I should have talked with you before. You explain a lot of things. I put on a diver's suit this morning and went over the Rittenbach myself. When I came up I threw the regular divers off the job. They're either dumb and incompetent or they've been handing me wrong steers on purpose."

"You see!" she exclaimed triumphantly. "But do I explain Greta Kruger too?"

He stiffened and sent her a sharp look.

"That's it, eh? The big idea is to get in a jab at her. Well, don't bother trying it any more. I don't like pretty dames."

"O, yeah? Well, I don't like swellheaded guys either. So you think I'm jealous of Greta? What has she got that I want, including you? I thought I might do a favor for a fellow American but the thing you call your head is too stuck up with plain bone. Go on and kick your boat off the bottom. Maybe Greta will help you, just like she's helped a lot of other wise guys."

He was at the door and still laughing at her when she paused for breath. "Tell your boss I dropped in," he called, and was gone. She was still shaky with rage when Rafael Sanchez called for her. They were dining at the Machete when she saw Greta come in with a man Peggy never had seen before. He was dark and foreign looking and addressed Kurtz in the manner of an old friend.

. . . .

The foreign looking stranger was bidding Kurtz farewell in German. Nothing unusual in hearing German spoken at the Machete. There was a good deal of pro-Nazi sentiment at Santa Ysabel. Peggy maneuvered herself into a bar stool close to Greta and watched her with intentional insolence as she waved at the departing visitor. Greta switched to English which she spoke with labored correctness and much guttural accent.

"You are right, Herr Kurtz," she said in her slow English. "All the Americans are the same, so sure of themselves, so confident, so—dummkopf, is it not so?"

"Ja, ja, fräulein, the Americans are all alike."

The red hair at the back of Peggy's neck was beginning to crinkle up.

"What Americans are you talking about?" she flared.

"Who knows? Perhaps many of them," Greta said steadily.

"Guess again, Greta. You're just like all the rest of the Heinies, you think that just because we're pleasant people and don't make a habit of kicking people around, we're softies. You're going to find out different."

"Yes? Well, perhaps I have not met many Americans."

"You've met one too many. I mean Capt. Jergins. You think he's a sap, don't you? You think you've twisted him around your pretty fingers. You're wrong. He's laughing at you."

"Who will be laughing when he sails out of the harbor with the Rittenbach still on the bottom, eh? You, Miss Peggy, the foolish little stenographer who made eyes at him? Or Capt. Jergins, who will go away without his $10,000?"

Peggy Bets Her Stake on Jimmy

"Listen, Kurtz," Peggy said with all the coolness she could muster, "are you still offering 10 to 1 he won't float the Rittenbach?"

"That is the odds today, Miss Peggy. Tomorrow maybe 12 to 1, next week maybe 15. But today—10."

"And you," said Greta, "perhaps you would like to risk a wager, Miss —Miss—I am so forgetful of names."

"You knew my name the night young Carlos shot himself, and Scaf asked me to get you out of here quick so the police couldn't question you. If you've forgotten it now, that's all to the good with me. I'll take 500 of that 10 to 1 Christmas present, Kurtz."

"Five hundred! Are you sure?"

"Certainly I'm sure. I'll write you a check. The money's in the bank."

"But, señorita." It was Rafael Sanchez now hovering over her solicitously. "Five hundred, dollars! It is magnificent, but," with a despairing wail, "it is crazee!"

"All right, so I'm crazy. I'm an American, too. You and I are going to take a ride out into the harbor, Rafael. I want to give Jimmy Jergins a pep talk."

Jergins was sitting bare to the waist in the doorway to his cabin abroad the Della Dear. He did not get up and there was no jauntiness in his attitude, rather a slumping lifelessness that sent a shiver of alarm thru her.

"Howdy?" he greeeted. "Pretty night."

Peggy sat on a keg wondering what to say.

"I heard about your bet," he went on, dully. "You're a little bit nuts, aren't you?"

"How did you find out so fast?"

"Rico. One of my skin divers. He's my head spy now too. Looks like I need one."

"You do, and no fooling."

"It was nice of you. The bet, I mean. Bucks me up." The old grin was wreathing back. "I made a bet

Prof. John Dewey Portrays der Fuhrer as a Philosopher!

"GERMAN PHILOSOPHY AND POLITICS," by John Dewey. [Putnam, $2.]
"GERMAN PSYCHOLOGICAL WARFARE," edited by Ladislas Farago for the Committee for National Morale. [Putnam, $3.]

Reviewed by Dr. Melchior Palyi.

Hitler is one of the "ablest" demagogs of all times. In particular, he used a trick in a masterly fashion: To mix up ideas and ideals so as to make the believers in almost any of them believe in him. He advocated sound money and unlimited credit; private property and socialism. He preached peace slogans and calls to arms; he asked for a rebirth of personality and individuality, and promised the enforcement of all-round conformity. He claimed to bring the Germans "freedom" and to organize them in a dictatorship.

He used crudely realistic language to appeal to the lowest instincts, and turned the next minute to philosophical sounding phrases which appealed to the idealistic longing of the half-educated. His success was largely due to the ability to "sing" in so many tunes, and to cover it all by an emotional haze that was too thick for many Germans—their logic softened by wishful thinking born of bitterness and frustration.

Instead of recognizing the demagog for what he is worth, Prof. Dewey promotes the fuehrer to a philosopher. He does so by picking out of Hitler's speeches passages with a quasi-intellectual context, and discussing them piecemeal. He manages to read into the twisted Nazi ideology deep meanings and immense profundities, overlooking the demagogical technique and its political background.

John Dewey.

Thus, Hitler appears as the founder of a new socialistic approach, thanks to the use of such empty verbalizations as the "subordination of economic interests to the national whole." And the wicked paperhanger is transfigured into a great thinker who "first, and alone, saw the identity of the two ideals"—namely: Of socialism and nationalism.

On the same pattern of scholarship, some one might compile the Bible quotations used once by sellers of quack medicine, and proceed to write a "Theology of Quackism." It wouldn't be much more of a misunderstanding than what our distinguished philosopher does to the Nazi "philosophy." His ultimate purpose, to discredit by implication the German idealistic philosophy as somehow responsible for the vulgar imperialism of modern Germany, is the kind of cheap propaganda that is not worthy of a John Dewey.

By contrast, Mr. Farago and his collaborators are nobody's fools. They don't indulge in theorizing, and they have no ax to grind. Cold-bloodedly they go after a technique, French in origin, that the Germans developed to virtuosity. They present the reader with a well-documented and perfectly organized analytical survey of the Nazi methods in a new field of warfare.

The German general staff is systematic. It handles psychology as it manages artillery or air force, with large staffs, specialized schools, testing stations, intelligence service, etc.

The problems include those of leadership [psychology is sometimes, as the book points out, a good alibi for defeated generals], of selection and testing of personnel, of the human element in military life [from recreation and sex problems to religion and desertion] as well as of actual combat, in which the dangers of panic receive special attention. Strategy and tactics of psychological warfare, and its cultural background [psychological espionage and propaganda], largely in their German-domestic aspects, each receive a well deserved chapter.

The backbone of the book is a bibliography, with intelligent comments, of not less than 561 items, mostly German books, pamphlets, and magazine articles. The text itself is the systematic condensation of the material contained in that vast literature, with the remarks of the editors added. Their industry and acumen can't be praised enough. It is a pity that they have not utilized German newspapers, and, naturally, they had little access other than thru the published material to the actual German practice of dealing with so-called psychological issues in connection with war preparation and warfare.

Of course, "psychology" is a somewhat loose term; besides, the approach of this compilation was not fit to bring out the historical backgrounds and reasons of each type of administrative technique. But the book accomplishes something few books do: To be interesting reading to the layman and valuable source material to the student.

Ben Ames Williams Writes a Striking Story of the '30s

"TIME OF PEACE," by Ben Ames Williams. [Houghton Mifflin, $2.75.]

Reviewed by Delbert W. Hamilton.

Ben Ames Williams has written several novels picturing the civilian background of crises in America's past. Now he has turned to the present conflict to write a long, searching story of the coming of the war.

In the period beginning with the first threat of Hitler in 1930 and ending with the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, Williams traces a sweeping sketch of American national thought. The whole tense decade is examined; the dark days of the depression; the coming of the New Deal; the ominous preliminaries in Manchuria, Ethiopia, and Spain; the Munich crisis; the campaigns on the continent and the battle of Britain; the invasion of Russia; the naval war and the gradual swing of American opinion from isolationism to interventionism. For Americans it was a "tie of peace," but it was a disturbed, unsatisfactory peace.

"My mind has been a battlefield for years," says Mr. Williams' chief character, and there were many like him.

Against this background of world and national events Williams writes the story of an anxious father, who sees his son grew to manhood in the troubled '30s. Mark Worth's first wife dies on a rainy day in September, 1930, the same day that Hitler warns that he will tear up the Treaty of Versailles. From that day on Mark is responsible for their 11 year old son, Tony, and Mark watches the European war clouds with fear for his boy, feeling that some day Tony may be drawn into the coming conflict.

Mark has a hatred for war, remembering his experience in France in 1918. He feels he must shield Tony from the war, but as the struggle develops he wonders if he is right. He sees that a war is coming and he studies the news and listens to his friends. He is too fair-minded to become set in his thinking, and he makes two long trips in the United States to see what others are thinking about the war.

There is a great love and understanding between Mark and his son. During the years after his wife's death and before Tony enters college, Mark spends his spare time with the boy. He makes Tony's interests his interests, and together they face the boy's problems. Mark allows Tony to learn how to fly and even takes flying lessons himself. He does not admit it, but he fears that Tony may some day be a war pilot.

Mr. Williams' novel is large in scope and rich in detail. While the story is primarily an account of a father-son relationship, it also contains dozens of sub-plots. Mark Worth is the type of man who has many friends, and Mr. Williams uses them all to advantage.

None of his characters have the force of Mark and Tony and some of them have an ill-designed, unreal quality that makes them appear to be mechanical men speaking quotations from some newspaper editorial. But Mr. Williams' task of recording and interpreting such a vast amount of public opinion thru the medium of a novel was undoubtedly a hard one.

There will probably be many more and better books of this nature in the years to come, and especially when we can look back on the era with some of Mark Worth's fair-mindedness. But for the present, this book is a fine beginning.

3 Centuries of Growth in Montreal

"MONTREAL: Seaport and City," by Stephen Leacock. [Doubleday, Doran, $3.50.]

Reviewed by Walter Havighurst.

The early explorers saw North America and did not want it. A dark wilderness had little appeal for men who were bent on finding the crowded seaports and sunlit cities of the orient. But in time they gave up their search for China and began to establish settlements in the wilderness. Some of those settlements became cities as commanding as any of the storied ports of the Western sea. How one of them was founded, how it grew, how at last it cast a shadow over all of Canada, Stephen Leacock tells in his solid and absorbing story of Montreal.

Montreal has an accumulation of 300 years of history—three centuries with change and significance. Originally a mission station in an unmapped wilderness, geography soon brought it a commercial life as the wharves at the confluence of the Ottawa and St. Lawrence rivers were piled with baled peltry from the northern waterways. For a century it was a French colonial outpost, with energies that sent men to far away Lake Superior and the Mississippi, and beyond. Then it became a British port of trade, its harbor filled with tall ships from London and Liverpool. Finally it assumed its rôle as the Canadian metropolis, a commercial and financial center whose importance reached to every corner of a vast country. Thus Montreal has been by turns various cities, and in Mr. Leacock's pages a reader is made aware both of the charm of the city's history and the vitality of its commercial development.

Clearly this book is a labor of love. Stephen Leacock was brought to Montreal at the age of 6 on one of the fine ships of Montreal's famous Allan Line. Since then [1876] he has spent a long and full life in the city under Mount Royal, and has become one of its distinguished citizens. Nearly every page of this narrative is colored by his good humor.

He speculates on the likelihood of Montreal's being founded by criminals; it is known that Cartier took men from the jails of France to man the ships which he sailed a thousand miles up the St. Lawrence to plant a French settlement in that savage country. In subsequent pages he restores the old French town, now largely vanished, on the waterside, and he traces the gradual growth of the city up the hill and around the base of the mountain. He has an eye for the fine, friendly years, within present memory, when life was leisurely and the people of Montreal took time to enjoy the flavor of their mingled French and English customs.

But he refuses to see the city's glory in the past. Instead, he champions the St. Lawrence seaway, with good humored deference to the objections raised against it and with complete confidence in its ultimate realization.

There are stretches in this book where the chronological method appears inflexible, involving the writer in a routine narrative and an undue burden of statistics. But the method also makes for completeness. And the whole story is here, the social, economic, political history of Montreal; and, as befits a book in a Seaport Series, its maritime history as well. The last is set down with contagious feeling for the vanished glory of Montreal's sailing fleets, with a citizen's pride in the vitality of present day trade [which ranges from cases of catsup to shiploads of cattle], and with a persuasive belief in Montreal's part in the oncoming future of America.

'Without Love' and 'Mr. Sycamore' open in New York

Hepburn Stars in One; Other Is a Fantasy

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK [Special]. — This was Theater guild week in our town. Two productions were the Guild's offering to its subscribers. One was blessed by the presence of the popular and "different" Katharine Hepburn. The other was heavy with fantasy, acted by Stuart Erwin and Lillian Gish, Mr. Erwin being a subtle comedian from screenland and new to Broadway.

Katharine Hepburn. [Vandamm Photo.]

The Hepburn play is Philip Barry's "Without Love," which got its start last season in the back country but is new here. The Erwin-Gish item is "Mr. Sycamore," a novelty developed first by Robert Ayre as a story and transferred to the stage by Ketti Frings, an Ohio-born novelist and scenarist who has worked successfully in Hollywood, where she wrote "Hold Back the Dawn."

The Hepburn heroine is a slightly frigid Washington widow. She has a good deal of money and is therefore suspicious of any attention, particularly any masculine attention, shown her. She is also thru with the emotion called love because she had lived rapturously thru two years of connubial bliss and refuses to risk the shattering of that dream.

• • •

One day a strangely self-poised, self-assertive young Irishman comes to her house to deliver a wedding guest who had miscalculated his alcoholic capacity. The Irishman meets the widow. There is a brief shower of sparks, and before she knows it she has asked him to stay on. It would be difficult for him to find living quarters in Washington. Her house is large, and she wouldn't mind the sense of protection the presence of a man would give.

Elliott Nugent. [Vandamm Photo.]

Furthermore, inasmuch as they are both thru with love—she because of her ideal romance, he because a French girl in Paris had tossed his aching heart right back in his lap—there is no reason why they should not embrace the further comfort of a marriage of convenience that will still leave them free and sleeping in separated wings of the house.

Well, you know how that sort of an arrangement always works out on the stage. Mr. Barry wisely has not changed the formula greatly. But he has tied it in with the suggestion that if the Ireland whom the young Irishman represents as a sort of unofficial ambassador [his father was a diplomat abroad], would only see her way clear to accepting a sort of marriage of convenience with Britain, even without love, and throw in her lot with the united nations that are fighting for the liberty she spouts so much about, the war would be over that much quicker and Ireland's place and gains at the peace table would be assured.

Miss Hepburn was nervous and a little strident her opening night. But she recovered a good deal of her particularly individualistic charm as the performance wore on. She is afraid of New York and is never happy, or even reasonably relaxed, until she has passed that first night ordeal. But her following is faithful and is showing itself well pleased.

Elliott Nugent, at once a wholesome personality and an honest actor, plays the Irishman engagingly.

KARLOFF AND OLD AUNTIES

In "Arsenic and Old Lace" at the Selwyn theater Jean Adair and Josephine Hull, aunts of Boris Karloff, try to persuade him to leave the ancestral home. He won't go. Result—many chills, thrills and laughs.

[Drawing by Ben Cohen.]

The support is good, the production handsome.

• • •

I found "Mr. Sycamore" fairly hard to take, altho as a rule I delight in fantastic comedies. Probably we all do, if we can read into them some measure of helpful philosophy, or translate them into an interesting symbolism. Otherwise we have to forgive them an awful lot to enjoy them even a little. To my way of thinking, we must either believe them or want to believe them.

Lillian Gish. [Vandamm Photo.]

"Mr. Sycamore," taken by Ketti Frings of Hollywood from a story by Robert Ayre, tells of a gentle, simple-minded postman in a small town who, after twenty years of delivering unimportant letters to uninteresting people, is ready to give up. Inspired by the village librarian, who was given to poetic flights, he decides he wants to become a tree. He admires trees, admires their grace, their sweeping limbs reaching ever upward, their solid strength, their peaceful acceptance of life and the ordained propulsions of nature.

So he goes deliberately into his own back yard, digs a hole in the good earth and plants his feet in it. In time, which would be before the second act is finished, he has acquired roots, a trunk and a few tender green shoots. And now the sight of this miracle has quieted the chortling of the neighbors and won the sympathy of his wife.

By the time the third act arrives the little postman is a proud and lofty sycamore, in whose shade the neighbors rest contentedly.

The guild has provided its usual attractive cast and production for "Mr. Sycamore." Miss Gish is nicely and humanly sympathetic as the patient wife. Mr. Erwin, altho denied a very free expression of the quiet, homely humor that undoubtedly is his, is still an appealing person and a splendid actor. Enid Markey plays the village poetess and Otto Hulett laughs his way into and out of most of the comedy.

There has been, as there was bound to be, talk of raising a fund with which to erect a statue to the late George M. Cohan in Times square. Mostly it seems from suggestions made by those who had a great fondness for the Yankee Doodle comedian, and also from those who benefit a little, or feel they benefit, from the publicity.

Nothing, I hope, will come of these suggestions. It would be pretty tragic to have all that George meant to his profession and to the theater symbolized by a grinning, or even a sober, bronze replica of the actor in action. In action the pose would have to be, to be Cohan, and probably subscribers to the fund would want to see him waving a flag.

It is the spirit of the comedian that lives, and will long live, after him. He had started as a brash and boastful youngster and he had progressed to such a stature as a man and citizen as to win the love of all his fellows and the respect and admiration of his alleged betters.

His later life was as quiet and contemplative as his early years were noisy and crude. He represented something much greater than the personality of a well-loved actor when he died, something that no statue could ever express. A figure that would symbolize the career of George Cohan would belittle the spirit and the achievement of George Cohan.

If You Would Feel Terrific, Dress That Way, Actress Says

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., (AP).—Leslie Brooks, formerly Lorraine Gettman, was once a model. And she knows that clothes very definitely make the woman.

"I found that out in the days when I posed for a still camera," she says. "I'd go to work feeling low, perhaps, dressed in anything I happened to find around the house, and then I'd put on some gorgeous creation to model and feel terrific!

"I know that I personally have more confidence when I'm wearing a daring or unusual dress and I think other women have. Business women, particularly, not only look better when they take trouble over their clothes, but feel better. Therefore, they are able to act more intelligently. For they have a lead on the man or woman before them in an office. They have a 'secret weapon.'

"Clothes give a woman courage. A new hat, or an out of this world evening gown will do more for a wallflower than any psychiatrist in the land."

Leslie seems to be right. For, up to the time that she was given a decidedly sharp wardrobe for "You Were Never Lovelier," she played minor rôles. With beautiful clothes to bolster her in that picture, however, she turned in the best performance she has ever given.

Miss Brooks, it seems, knows whereof she speaks.

French Movie Figures Reunited in Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD—(AP).—Leonid Moguy, Pierre Schwab, and John Pierre Aumont were a movie producer-director-actor team in Paris until the outbreak of the war, when all enlisted in different branches of the French army. When the armistice with Germany came the three fled to this country. Now they're all working together again at the same studio.

"Friday" Played by Himself.

Good Morning!

A blind detective and his "seeing eye" dog lend unusual and provocative taste to this mystery-murder-spy opus.

I hope you've noticed the who's whoses in the cast. Edward Arnold AND lovely Ann Harding! The latter, conspicuous for so long by her absence from the screen, plays with her customary taste and lulls your sensibilities with that rich, caressing voice of hers. The gracious, blonde Ann is as beautiful as ever and it goes against the grain to find her harried, as she is this trip, by a pretty but hateful young stepdaughter.

Duncan Maclain is displaying his wrestling prowess to a couple of police inspectors when Mrs. Lawry, an old friend, appears, seeking his help. . . . Her stepdaughter, Barbara, has suddenly turned against her, because of poisonous allegations made against Norma by an actor to whom she had once been engaged and with whom Barbara is now infatuated. . . .

Discovering the worthlessness of Paul Gerente, Norma had broken her troth, and later fallen in love with and married Stephen Lawry, an inventor. . . . All had been well until the girl's intrigue with Paul. . . .

Maclain advises Norma to beard Paul in his theater, persuade him to consider Barbara's youth and do the decent thing, i. e., lay off. . . . To admit to the smitten damsel that he has been spinning a web of falsehood.

Well—Paul is murdered. . . . The horrible chee-ild accuses her stepmother of the deed and offers the latter the alternative of leaving "my father's house" or having her call the police. . . . Norma, realizing the mess in which a police inquiry would involve her husband—who has gone to Washington to demonstrate an important war invention to the government—agrees to vacate.

And now you realize the girl has been a tool in the hands of enemy spies, masquerading as folk of the theatrical world. . . . And that these unsavory people are after the formula for aforementioned invention, which is locked in Lawry's safe, at home.

Again Norma seeks Maclain's aid.

He and his dog, Friday, to the rescue! And plenty of excitement for you. . . , Not since Rin Tin Tin has there been such a dog actor as Friday.

The story has weak spots but it's fast, entertaining, and expertly presented.

See you tomorrow.

Hopalong Cassidy's Horse Gets Top Billing in Film

HOLLYWOOD—(AP).—Because so many film fans have requested photographs of Hopalong Cassidy's white horse, Topper, the handsome equine, which already has appeared in 20 pictures, was given top billing in "Across the Frontier."

FLYING TIGER

"Flying Tigers" is the title of the new film now showing at the Chicago theater. Here is John Wayne who plays one of the leads in this picture, along with John Carroll and Paul Kelly.

"White Cargo" is heralded for the near future. It stars Hedy Lamarr and Walter Pidgeon. . . . This is an adaptation of the stage play by Leon Gordon. The locale is a rubber plantation deep in Africa. . . . Mr. Pidgeon is overseer; Miss Lamarr a native temptress who kicks up an A-1 mess for a lot of people. . . . Prominent in the cast are Frank Morgan, Richard Carlson, and Reginald Owen.

"For Me and My Girl" is the new Judy Garland-George Murphy-Gene Kelly "musical." . . . The piece sings a story of old time vaudeville, and displays Miss Garland as a vaudeville singer and dancer. . . . The time is from before World War I. to the period immediately after the armistice. . . . Prominent in support are Ben Blue and Marta Eggerth.

• • •

"Manila Calling" has Lloyd Nolan, Carole Landis, Cornel Wilde, and James Gleason doing things. . . . [Mr. Wilde is the Olympic fencing champion.] The plot is concerned with a band of brave Americans who are cornered by the Japs in a Philippine jungle. . . . The Americans and eight Filipino scouts act as a guerrilla unit, attacking and disrupting Japanese communications as they battle their way toward the coast and, they hope, freedom.

• • •

"Seven Sweethearts." Ah-h—Van Heflin! Pursued by the seven daughters of an inn keeper! . . . These are Marsha Hunt, Kathryn Grayson, Cecelia Parker, Peggy Moran, Frances Raeburn, Dorothy Morris, and Frances Rafferty. . . . They work as boys in the hotel. . . . Sounds interesting, what?

• • •

"Girl Trouble" brings to you Joan Bennett as a part time Cinderella and Don Ameche as a gay South American plantation owner. . . . "Indirectly," says a press note, "the rubber shortage is the cause of it all."

Returns to Stage.

Allen Jenkins, long a slave to the movie studios, returns to the legitimate stage in "Something for the Boys," the new Cole Porter musical soon to be placed in production. Jenkins will play the rôle of a pitchman.

M. Eberhart Again Calls in the Nurses

"WOLF IN MAN'S CLOTHING," by Mignon G. Eberhart. [Random House, $2.]

Reviewed by Drexel Drake.

Mrs. Eberhart introduces into the opening of this story the ingredients of intense emotional drama but it gradually develops into familiar atmosphere for Nurse Sarah Keate, involving her in another reluctant excursion into mysterious murder, strongly reminiscent of some of her earlier adventures, notably "While the Patient Slept" of a dozen years ago.

Dr. Chivery telephones the registry for two nurses to attend Craig Brent, reported accidentally shot in the garden of his father's home in the Berkshires. Drue Cable accepts the call and Nurse Keate, who goes with her, gets her first intimation of trouble ahead when she learns that Drue divorced Craig a year earlier because his father, Conrad Brent, convinced her that their impetuous marriage had ruined Craig's career. The situation confronting the two nurses is still more complicated because the beautiful, young Alexia Senour, originally intended to become Craig's bride, in the meantime has become the second wife of Craig's father. Nurse Keate gets her full portion of shocks and surprises while moving toward the solution of the puzzle. Mrs. Eberhardt's followers will enjoy this story immensely.

"MURDER STEPS IN," by Charlotte Murray Russell. [Doubleday, Doran, $2.]

Noah Harper and his wife, Louella, bound from quiet St. Petersburg for a bit of sight-seeing in Miami, get into the front ranks of murder complications because the plight of young Julie Wallace arouses their sympathy. Julie learns that her fiancé not only has been injured in an automobile accident but has disappeared from a hospital before she and the Harpers arrive there. It all leads to the extravagant estate of Thad Whitmore, the fiancé's employer, where no end of sinister personalities are gathered in a house party. It isn't exactly astonishing that Thad is murdered in the course of the evening. The police would have muffed the whole thing, including succeeding murders, without the quiet perspicacity of Noah Harper, egged on by Louella.

"THE MAUSOLEUM KEY," by Norman A. Daniels. [Gateway Books, $2.]

Mrs. Wakefield, affluent, handsome and middle-aged, gets money in huge sums thru the mail and has the eccentricity of making night time pilgrimages masquerading as blackface in male attire, on such occasions carrying a huge key in a cuff of the trousers. These things aren't learned about her until she is strangled to death in the library of her home. Scott Cameron, New York police reporter, is first to arrive at the murder scene and gets himself suspected of the crime by Capt. Halliday. Thru successive murders and hectic episodes, Cameron and Halliday wage a personal war of bitterness. Jane Hayes, girl reporter, teams up with Cameron and adds romance to a plot that begins at a fair clip but bogs down.

"SPORTING BLOOD": The Great Sports Detective Stories. Edited by Ellery Queen. [Little, Brown Co., $2.50.]

This volume of 20 short stories makes it evident that few sports, if any, have been neglected by detective story authors as background for mystery fiction. The lead-off is a Sherlock Holmes story on horse racing. Dashiell Hammett's yarn takes in prize fighting. Golf, baseball, football, track and field, polo, boating, swimming, tobogganing, fishing and hunting all provide detective props. The list goes on to include poker, ping pong and chess, and even collecting hobbies.

THE INQUIRING CAMERA GIRL

By Frieda Zylstra.

[THE TRIBUNE will pay $5 for each interesting question about books, submitted by a reader and used by THE TRIBUNE. Today's question was submitted by Mrs. Harve McAninch, Hawarden, Ia.]

THE QUESTION.

Did you ever become so engrossed in a book that you forgot about more important issues?

WHERE ASKED.

Washington and La Salle streets.

THE ANSWERS.

William T. Lynch, engineer, 7230 Rhodes avenue.—The secluded corner in the school library was a good place to concentrate on the book. I was doing such a fine job of it that I didn't even notice that closing time had been announced and every one was leaving. I didn't even notice the janitor lock the door an hour later. That was the first time I ever had to leave that room via the fire escape.

Marge Crumley, acrobatic performer, 4543 South Troy street.—I was scheduled to appear on the stage quite late in the performance. So I retired to one of the dressing rooms and started a new book. It must have been good, because by the time I put the book down the show was completely over. I had missed my cue entirely.

Mrs. J. J. Carey, receptionist, 742 East 81st street.—I thought I could read an extra chapter of my book while I was waiting for the four eggs to boil. While I was in the living room I heard something that sounded like a muffled explosion, but paid no attention to it. An hour later I found the burnt pan and bits of shells and hard boiled eggs scattered all over the kitchen. The dry heat had made them pop.

Charles C. Harper, mill worker, 510 Bucannan avenue, Gary, Ind.—It's not a new experience for me to forget to go to bed at night when I'm engrossed in a good book, but naturally I'm quite aware of what I'm doing. But the other day I was really buried in the book. I heard over the radio that we had opened the second front in Africa. I kept on reading without registering the significance of the report until I put the book down a couple hours later.

Mrs. Albert Hengst, housewife, 4122 North Claremont avenue.—Before I sat down to read I made sure all the scissors were out of the reach of my 3 year old daughter, because cutting up things is one of her favorite pastimes. While I was living the part of the heroine in the book I was aware of my daughter climbing up on the davenport a couple times. When I put the book down I found my new davenport slip covers all cut to pieces.

Minnie L. Clark, housewife, 4344 North Winchester avenue. — The book was so absorbing that I hated to leave it, even long enough to put the dinner on to cook. After putting everything in one kettle I returned to the book. Several times I thought I smelled the neighbor's dinner burning, but not until my husband walked in and said it smelled like another burned dinner did I realize it was ours.

Morley's Latest Amusing, But It Lacks Real Plot

asks if this is an American accent.] Aunt Em, who retires to a room at the top of a tower on the Wilford house and gnashes peppermints when she becomes discouraged with the family; Maj. Warren, Civil war [Confederate] veteran, who speaks of a trip into what had been northern territory as crossing the frontier; Mutual, the black boy with white soles on his feet, who crouches in a black closet and turns a handle which revolves the fan over the dinner table; the tough Shawbuck boys at school, the professor-ladies on the ship, who make professorial jokes.

The flaw of the book is the flaw of Morley's other books: a lack of real human intensity. Everything takes place at a middle temperature; there is no dropping down into the cold areas of tragedy or climbing up into the hot regions of powerful feeling.

Uncle Dan's shipboard flirtations are as mild as the hints and puns of children. The insight into much of a boy's mind is acute, and yet Jeff seems singularly free of the terrors and overwhelming excitements that possess every child at times. Even the drowning of one handsome collie and one pathetic colored girl is a casual event. The whole fabric of the book is an even monotone, an amusing and delightful one, but never rising with power into something strong and cleanly original.

But this is to condemn the book unfairly, accusing it of not being what the author never intended it to be. Let its own virtues suffice. There are many of them.

New Aviation Book.

Scheduled for publication late in November is "Fighter Facts and Fallacies" by John G. Lee, assistant director of research for United Aircraft corporation. The publisher is William Morrow and company.

Do Not Let Uncle See This Portrait

"MY UNCLE NEWT," by Frances Eisenberg. [Lippincott, $2.50.]

Nearly every family has at least one like Uncle Newt, an ornery old reprobate who can move in thru a barricaded door and stay forever. Frances Eisenberg, author of "There's One in Every Family," has made a hilarious funny book of the adventures of his Uncle Newt. It's fine, relaxing reading for the war-worried, only: don't let your Uncle Newt see the book—it'll just give him ideas. L. W.

For Once the Truth Eludes Mr. Huxley

"THE ART OF SEEING," by Aldous Huxley. [Harper's, $2.50.]

Reviewed by Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

When a great literary artist such as Aldous Huxley writes about life and love, we are entertained—even thrilled. His style, which is always sprightly, preserves the best traditions of Victorian journalism.

Aldous Huxley.

But when he turns to the field of medicine, it is no surprise to discover that truth has eluded him. Numerous talented novelists, when approaching medical subjects, have been misled. We may recall that Upton Sinclair was "taken in" by the Abrams Method of Electronic Therapy. More recently, Rex Beach embraced the fetish of Locke, who "cured" arthritis by one squeeze of the foot. A year later Beach plunged into print, championing the cause of a dubious Michigan physician who claimed to dissolve cataracts by the use of drops.

Mr. Huxley is well aware that hope springs eternal in the human breast. His prescription for lost youth is set forth in his "After Many a Summer Dies the Swan." He has his aged millionaire eat a disgusting concoction made from the intestines of the carp. His reasons for recommending this nostrum are really more logical than those which led him to espouse the Bates method of restoring sight. Eulogy of this fanciful notion is the purpose of "The Art of Seeing." In his own words, he is "paying a debt."

On page 42 he writes: "My concern is not with the anatomical structures and physiological mechanism, but with the process of seeing." We may ask how performance can be disassociated from the behavior of the highly specialized cells of the organs of vision. The fact is that the "process of seeing" depends upon structure and function. The Bates doctrine has nothing to do with either. A person with anatomically normal eyes can see well and comfortably without "palming, sunning, swinging, flashing, shifting," or any other form of mumbo-jumbo detailed with such enthusiasm.

As most of us know, one with an anatomic defect in the length of the eyeball, which results in myopia, can obtain excellent vision by wearing glasses which correct the defect. The cause is the misshapen orb, and the lenses eliminate this factor while they are worn. When they are not employed the eyes are the same as before and do not, as our essayist asserts, become weaker and weaker.

Mr. Huxley relates that in his youth he had opacities of the cornea, with hyperopia and astigmatism; and that he was able to read with glasses, altho with symptoms of strain. As he grew older, sight became poorer and he feared he would go blind. On taking up the Bates system his apprehension was removed by the assurance of the healer and he found he could do very well without glasses.

While one should not make a diagnosis at a distance of two thousand miles, it seems quite likely that his is an ordinary case of second sight which follows aging changes in the crystalline lens. Hyperopia has been altered to myopia. In consequence, reading without glasses has become possible.

After an explanation of some psychological aspects of the topic, Mr. Huxley describes the production of passive and active relaxation. Seven pages are devoted to "palming," which seems to consist of merely covering the optics for brief periods. There follow four pages on how to wink and five on how to breathe—functions which most persons are able to perform without much instruction. Our author expresses uncertainty as to whether winking and breathing come under the head of passive or active relaxation.

Other maneuvers designed to bring about the desired state of active relaxation are "swinging" and "shifting," which resemble the devotions of the Indian Yogi. They call for a similar mental attitude. A ritual is made of routine visual acts. For the best results, Mr. Huxley insists on certain rules: "Do not hold your breath or keep the eyelids rigid or unmoving for long periods. Blink frequently and breathe regularly, gently, and fully" . . . etc.

One can find no fault with what he says of illumination, nor perhaps with his chapters on psychology, except that they seem to complicate elementary matters needlessly. When we come to his discussions on the errors of refraction, however, he simply does not know whereof he speaks.

But the sad fact is that Mr. Huxley evidently believes what he writes. If his readers are armed with no more knowledge than his own, they will be enticed into all sorts of absurdities. In the appendix he is fair enough to quote objections to the plan by an eminent British ophthalmologist. Huxley disposes of all criticism by saying that, even if Bates' theory is proved to be wrong, his practical conclusions must be right, because "the method works."

Mr. Huxley's sideslip into the realm of pseudo-science must not be allowed to detract in the slightest degree from our appreciation of his talents as a man of letters. His contributions to literature are notable. In "The Art of Seeing" he writes with his accustomed charm.

The jacket design for F. Van Wyck Mason's "RIVERS OF GLORY," published by the J. B. Lippincott company.

cause it is the reverse of the usual. John, who had consulted prime ministers the world over, heard exactly nothing about world affairs on that day.

The day before he had said good-by to London and had, I gather, received a farewell in which various important ministers assisted. On the evening of the 7th he had dinner in a hotel of the city where he was to take a plane for Lisbon. With him were an American admiral and a general. If any one in the hotel heard the news about Pearl Harbor, he did not communicate it. The waiters were, as usual, self-effacing. Gunther went to his room and received a phone call from a friend in London, telling him about Pearl Harbor. He laughed at it as a farewell hoax and went to sleep. The next morning he saw the fatal news in the newspapers, and had the pleasure of communicating it to the officers, who came down for breakfast, not knowing what had taken place.

"After that," said Gunther, "I flew to Lisbon and learned that all Clipper trips had been canceled and no promises of passage could be made. I boarded a freighter for the United States. It took 15 days to reach home, and in that time we received no news whatsoever."

The Good Earth Keeps Rolling Along.

When Pearl S. Buck contributed a story book with pictures, "The Chinese Children Next Door," to Children's Book week, I recognized anew not only her astonishing industry, but her ability to draw on a well-stocked memory of Chinese experiences. The authenticity of Miss Buck's Chinese stories has been debated pro and con and usually in her favor, but there is no debate whatever over their appeal to American readers.

Take that remarkable novel, "The Good Earth," which made her fame and sells and sells and sells. When the John Day company published it in 1931 it was also distributed by the Book of the Month Club, and in 1932 it won the Pulitzer prize. The Modern Library included it in its 95 cent series in 1933. Grosset & Dunlap have published four separate editions at different prices, including its series of Pulitzer prize novels. Blue Ribbon Books reissued it independently. Collier's included it in a subscription set of six of Pearl Buck's books. It was one of the first volumes published by Pocket Books, at 25 cents.

The remarkable thing about this record is that "The Good Earth" has sold well in all editions. There have been many reprintings of the John Day edition. One of the Grosset & Dunlap editions was timed to coincide with the motion picture but, contrary to practice, no photographs were reproduced. Miss Buck believes that the reader is entitled to make his own imaginary picture of a character and that stills from movies interfere with his pleasure. In addition, "The Good Earth" has appeared digested and condensed, has been translated into many languages, has been issued in Russia and Palestine, and has been pirated in China and Japan.

Faith Baldwin Does Another Love Story

"THE REST OF MY LIFE WITH YOU," by Faith Baldwin. [Farrar and Rinehart, $2.]

Reviewed by Maureen Daly.

What a man was young Dr. Mathew Norman!

Spoiled first by his mother, a beautiful, well coiffured woman, charming, gracious, a business success, with a faithful suitor, iron gray at the temples, always in the background, and her son, Mathew, big, brown, and handsome, always in the foreground, filling her life. And then spoiled again by his wife, Irene, small and lovely, who was bewildered by the energy and strength of her doctor husband.

Gifted by the gods and pampered by two women, Mathew Norman dominated four lives with his unconscious selfishness. But when, after Irene's death, Mathew married Judith Lambert, things were different. He found himself married to a woman who thought that human relationships should be mutually agreeable.

His mother's attitude toward him changed. She found a love to fill her own life which she had all but emptied for him. The story traces the struggle for understanding between Mathew, who was new at the game of giving in, and Judith, who wanted to make their marriage a real and selfless affair.

The book is written lightly, easily. If you enjoy morning radio serials the trials of Mathew and Judith will carry you swiftly and eagerly from page to page.

How a Child Adjusts Herself to the World

"STORM POINT," by Ruth Eleanor McKee. (Doubleday, Doran, $2.50.)

The adjustment of a girl to the realities of the adult world is often difficult, and particularly so if she be cursed with the violent and erratic childhood of Sheila Storm. How Sheila survived such a childhood to find romance, and eventually peace and emotional balance, is the theme of this new novel by the author of "Christopher Strange." A powerful and sometimes daring story, discerningly written. L. W.

Announcing a NEW Free Service to Readers

Would you like an up-to-the-minute list of books dealing with any of the above mentioned phases of World War II.?

Today the Chicago Tribune inaugurates a new service for readers. Never in the history of publishing has there been a greater eagerness for sound, competently written books which march with the times, interpreting and throwing light on the fast-moving developments thruout the world.

Never before has the publishing world risen to its responsibilities with greater foresight or sounder perception of the place of good books in the lives of a free people. Good books by the thousands—10,000 this year alone—roll from hundreds of presses. They bring the history of the lands where the fighting rages, the intimate tales of strange peoples, interpretations of diplomatic and political backgrounds, and the thrilling and inspiring stories of men and women living heroic lives in fields of brutal action.

So fast do they pour from the presses that it is too much to ask the individual to keep up with them all. Therefore, to help you make sure that you overlook no worthwhile title in a field which particularly interests you, the editors of the Sunday book pages of the Chicago Tribune have prepared comprehensive, up-to-the-minute lists of fine books covering various phases of World War II.

You are invited to use this service. Just check the lists you want and the Tribune will send them to you, containing titles, authors, publishers and prices. Tear out, fill in and mail today. Please inclose self-addressed and stamped envelope for reply.

Keeping Up with Hollywood

—By Ed Sullivan—

You wonder, in November, 1942, how the stage and picture stars of November, 1917, managed to sell bonds without benefit of the modern microphones. . . . Part of the answer is undoubtedly that the movie stars of that era were more physical. . . . Pearl White, of the "Perils of Pauline," was not much given to speeches. . . . In front of the public library Pearl mounted an extension ladder of the N. Y. fire department going up a rung at a time for each $1,000 purchase and going all the way to the top. . . . Douglas Fairbanks Sr. raised $500,000 quickly. . . . A heckler in the crowd claimed that Fairbanks was a phony and that his "double" actually did all his movie stunts. . . . Fairbanks whipped off his coat and shoes and climbed the library flagpole.

• • •

In those days, sans mike, the performers featured sight and sound. . . . You didn't need mikes when Mary Pickford clipped golden curls off her little dome and sold them for bond purchases. . . . You didn't need mikes when movie hero Harold Lockwood, on the library steps in a snowstorm, stripped to the waist and stayed there for three solid hours. . . . The stunt sold a lot of bonds, and also resulted in the death of Lockwood the same week. . . . Beverly Bayne and Francis X. Bushman toured the country in an Overland. . . . The late Roxy, in his marine corps major uniform, led the 80 piece Rialto band on the library steps; Enid Bennett sold kisses; Henry Morgenthau Sr. bought a $50,000 bond on those same steps to hear Lieut. Gitz Rice introduce his "Dear Old Pal." . . . That was the day that they sold $1,750,000 in bonds.

Reaction to the United States landings in Africa! Hollywood is rushing Sahara, Malta, and similar titles before the cameras, but Paramount is standing pat on its phenomenal "Road to Morocco," which will gross $500,000 in the New York Paramount before it leaves that house. . . . One of the writers of this Crosby-Hope-Lamour hilarity was Don Hartman, whose "All in Favor" folded on the stage of the Henry Miller theater after seven performances last January.

• • •

Opposition to the new Warner newsreel venture stemmed from the newsreels already in the field, basing this opposish on the scarcity of raw film. . . . James McKinley Bryant and Ella Raines ablaze. . . . She's a University of Washington eyeful with money enough to reject David Selznick's offer of $250 per and options. . . . Luise Rainer and her famous diplomat will get hitched as soon as he gets the final papers. . . . High blood pressure cost Abe Lyman an army commission. . . . Mary Anita Loos is wearing the Foreign Legion pin of Alexis Savay. . . . Dolores Del Rio and Eric Remarque are inseparable.

This Town Called Hollywood . . . . by Philip Scheuer

Signs of the times: War conditioned audiences are reacting in funny ways to assorted phenomena on the screen. Previewers at "White Cargo" burst into spontaneous applause—equal to that accorded the entrances of Hedy [Lurong] Lamarr and Walter Pidgeon—at the sight of rubber trees in bloom! The handclapping was followed by a wave of self-conscious laughter.

Hedy Lamarr.

Incidentally, the rubber sap pictured in these scenes was actually powdered milk thickened with water. It was just 10 years ago that the same concern, M. G. M. required a similar background for "Red Dust," an amorous interlude starring Clark Gable and Jean Harlow. The real thing, latex, was carried half way around the world, from South Africa, in refrigerated cans, finally coming to rest on the back lot at Culver City.

This column's idea of the scene to end all scenes is one in which our man, dressed in a pleated suit with padded shoulders and wide trousers cuffs, would enter a room piled high with new tires and cans labeled "gasoline," pull up a chair and sit down to a sizzling steak [a wall calendar would read meatless Tuesday], which he would wash down with cup after cup of coffee poured from an aluminum percolator—taking care, of course, to fill each cup with heaping teaspoonfuls of sugar.

The actor who could carry out this scene would have my unqualified indorsement for an academy award . . . if he lived to receive it.

The accident of time is raising havoc with Hollywood schedules in divers other ways. Just as unpredictably, it can bring about a lucky break. Warner's picture, "Casablanca," has been given enormous box-office impetus by the whirlwind military campaign in North Africa; the picture, with Humphrey Bogart, Ingrid Bergman and other name players, is finished but may be accorded a new, up to the minute ending. The same company reports that attendance at "Yankee Doodle Dandy" took a spurt immediately after the passing of George M. Cohan, its central figure.

In different manner, Errol Flynn's predicament has been reflected in upped receipts for "Desperate Journey" and "Gentleman Jim," his two most recent vehicles. The latter was rushed into release by the Warners more to insure them against the uncertain future than to capitalize on the wide notoriety accruing from the airing of Flynn's woes—for every studio has long since learned that success bought with unfavorable publicity is bound to boomerang sooner or later.

To the credit of the public, it must be noted that in the traditional American spirit of justice, they are remembering that a defendant is innocent until he has been proved otherwise.

Flynn's next, "Edge of Darkness," is now in the cutting stage. Its subject is occupied Norway's "passive" resistance. Practically every studio has a similarly localed drama in the making or completed—among them "The Moon Is Down," "The Commandos Strike at Dawn," "This Land Is Mine," etc. History, again, may make or break them.

The brief flurry over Lew Ayres, who resisted induction into active service, gave Metro, his employer, some bad moments. Hollywood, always quick at snap judgments, insisted that he was "through." But he was speedily vindicated in the nation's eyes and his last films, "Fingers at the Window" and a "Dr. Kildare," did nicely everywhere.

Divorces and deaths have ceased to loom as specters of despair at the box-office, altho in silent days they usually spelled finis to a celluloid career. Deaths, particularly. People felt funny about staring at Lilyan Tashman, Russ Columbo, Valentino, and many another idol after their passing; yet Valentino did have a profitable posthumous revival in latter years. In the talkies, when the first shock is over, fans generally exhibit no disposition to remain away in appreciable numbers. Witness the business done by Jean Harlow's "Saratoga" [good enough, considering the picture was mediocre], and Carole Lombard's "To Be or Not to Be."

His Book Is Fiction, but It's the Truth

By Lloyd Wendt.

Three years ago Stefan Heym was the rapidly starving editor of an anti-Nazi weekly newspaper published in New York. When the paper finally was engulfed by financial failure, the young editor took a job as a printing salesman with one of his creditors at $10 a week. He still had in his heart the story of Nazi oppression and cruelty. He wanted it to get to the people.

Stefan Heym.

Heym had been driven from his native Saxony soon after Hitler took power. His father had been held as a hostage for him. Young Stefan lived two years in Czecho-Slovakia, where he was befriended by the great Karel Capek; then he won a scholarship and came to the University of Chicago to study for two years. He had a brief experience as a bookseller in Chicago before going to New York as editor of the German language newspaper.

The story he wanted to tell encompassed many ideas, but chief among them was the problem: what makes the Nazis tick? As the German atrocities piled up in the occupied countries, particularly in the overrun land that had befriended him, he was irresistibly moved to write, and in the language that would reach the people who could be expected to end the Nazi menace.

Out of his experiences and his burning desire to spread the truth came a first novel, "Hostages." It is one of those clarion, honest novels that strike with the impact of a cannon shot. A publisher took it after seeing only two chapters. Hollywood bought the screen rights after looking at a half-completed manuscript. Heym wrote it at white heat, in the weary hours when he was selling printing, and it is published almost exactly as it came from his typewriter, the first and final draft. "Hostages" has rapidly pushed into the best-seller lists; it is one of the few books that have kept Chicago booksellers up all night reading it.

Young, tall and dark, Heym is a realist. He has no wish to help others escape the bitter experiences loose in the world today, for he believes that the general recognition of the realities will instill in just people the anger and determination needed to wipe out the wrongs of the Fascist régimes.

"'Hostages' is a novel—fiction—yet it is a true book in the highest sense of literary truth," the author says. "There is no basic difference between literature and reality. Truth is the taskmaster of the writer. The characters in my book, while not actual, are nevertheless true; their behavior, their reactions, their thoughts are true and human—not romantic inventions.

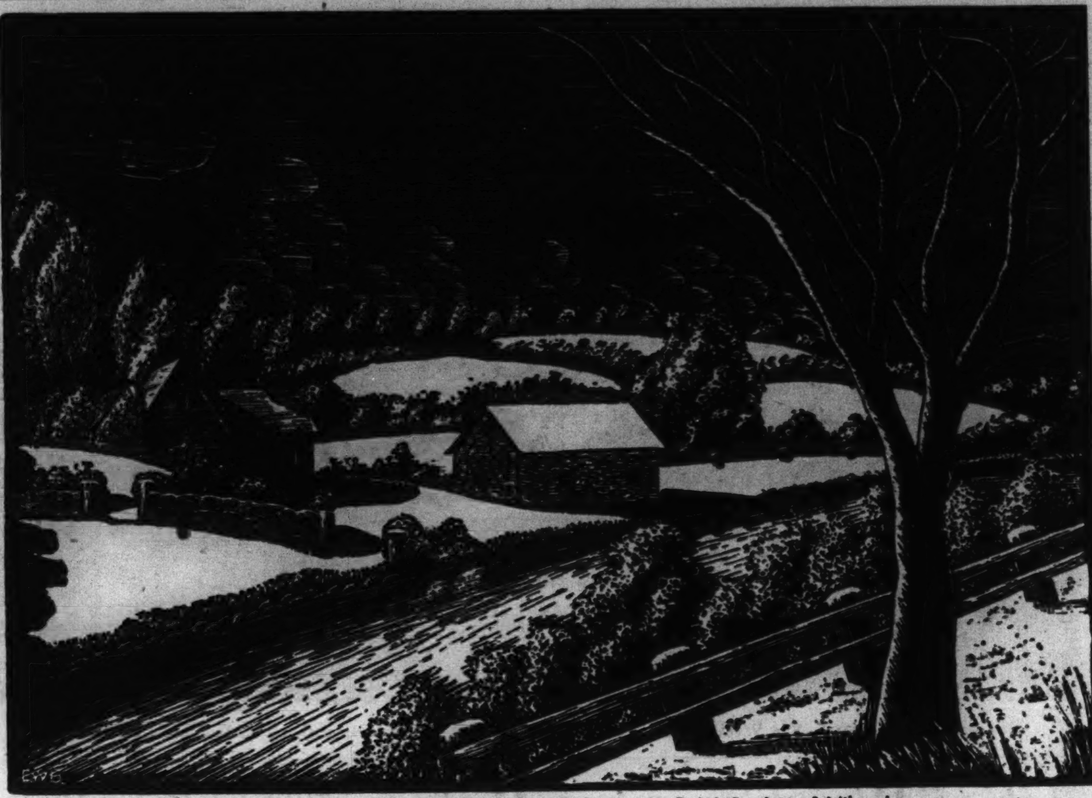
"Often the writer is tempted to swerve from it, to compromise. He flees into the past, into romance, and assorted fairy tales. It's so easy to escape—there is better pay for it and a much better chance of success. But such kind of escapism will not help us to win the war.

"I'm not saying that everybody should write books about the war. 'Hostages' happens to be one, but that is beside the point. But we should write, and read, honest books, sincere books, books which help everybody to recognize what we're living for and fighting for."

While Mr. Heym was writing "Hostages," which concerns the fate of a group of them in Czecho-Slovakia, Reinhardt Heydrich, the Nazi "butcher of Prague," one of the characters in the novel, was slain by Czech underground agents.

"It's a rare occurrence that one of the characters is killed, so to speak, from under the author's hands," he says. "However, altho I was on the eighth or ninth chapter of the book at the time, I did not have to change a single word of the finished material or a single sentence of my outline."

Heym admits that he must force himself to write. "It's more comfortable to have ideas and not write them down," he explains. But, once he is at his typewriter, he usually sets down at last 1,000 words at a stretch. When writing in English, he thinks in English. He had to correct his draft of "Hostages" because it contained too much American slang!"



"SNOWY HILLSIDE" is the title of this wood print by E. W. Bartlett of Milwaukee.

Kemmerer Warns America of Peril in Inflation Trend

"The A B C OF INFLATION," by Edwin Walter Kemmerer. [Whittlesey House, $1.75.]

For the business man with some knowledge of finance and for the intelligent citizen who at least did well in elementary economics, "The ABC of Inflation" offers an excellent chance to see what he once might have known marshaled in ABC order and brought up to date—that is, to August, 1942. It is an ABC book in the sense of ABC summarization and not in the sense of a primer.

E. W. Kemmerer is quite frankly a special pleader in this book—a pleader for his country. In such times as these, he observes, the modern term "economics" is less apt than the old phrase "political economy," for it is the POLITICAL part that is spelled with capital letters. Mr. Kemmerer pleads for courage in Washington, particularly on the part of the administration. Under present statutes, he points out, the President has substantially unlimited power over the nation's money, and enormous powers, too, over prices.

The politically easy thing to do, Mr. Kemmerer laments, is to refrain from sitting too tightly on inflationary tendencies, such as wage increases and farm price rises. He wrote, of course, before the recent legislation in these fields, but his picture of the situation is recent enough to be illuminating.

Of interest to business men is Mr. Kemmerer's view that bankers, so far as their own well-being is concerned, have less to fear from inflation than most business men. If the dollar gets cheaper they just pay off their debts with the cheap dollars paid to them. It's just about a stand-off. In the long run, to be sure, everybody suffers from serious inflation, but the business man and the employé get hit early in the action.

Since 13 governments have seen fit to consult Mr. Kemmerer about their money systems, what he says to the American people in "The ABC of Inflation" is eminently worth study. L. T. H.

BOOKMAN'S HOLIDAY

By Charles Collins.

THIS bookman has not yet holidayed with Ernest Hemingway's "Men at War," a compilation of famous passages from the literature of Mars, but he is betting that the editor's well-known thirst for realism in blood and tears has caused him to overlook the high romance of one-man fights against a multitude. Of such passages Andrew Lang, who was far more learned than Mr. Hemingway, has selected four as the world's greatest.

Mr. Lang's favorite examples in literature of epic heroism were the death of Grettir the Strong, the death of Gunnar of Lithend, the death of Hereward the Wake, and the death of Bussy d'Amboise. The first two may be found in the Icelandic sagas, Grettirsaga and Njalssaga, both available in excellent translations in the Everyman Library. Go to Charles Kingsley, author of "Westward Ho!" for "Hereward the Wake," a novel of the Norman conquest. Dig into "Chicot the Jester," one of the Books dealing with the war, from any point of view, are said to be selling like hot cakes in this country, but there is evidence from England that when people have been really "taking it" they want calmer forms of reading. The Countryman, a journal devoted to high-grade rustic life, has canvassed its subscribers all over the British empire for their current tastes in books. It discovered that many Englishmen are now re-reading Sir Walter Scott, Wordsworth, and Tennyson.

One of the Countryman's addicts, a prominent novelist, answered: "I seldom read a novel now. They seem always to be taking out their inadequate intestines to have a look at them, and why they put them back again, God only knows."

A cluster of German language experts was meditating about the possible meaning of Otto Eisenschiml's name, in talking over his new book, "Without Fame." It was agreed that "eisen" means "iron," and that "schimmel" means "white horse." The verdict was that it might be Austrian dialect for an iron-gray horse. But "schimmel" also means "mould"; so maybe it's Austrian for "iron-mould," which would be "rust."

The old gang at Schlogl's café, which founded H. L. Mencken's Chicago school of literature in the 1920s, is coming to bat again. Last week's list of books received for review included Harry Hansen's "The Chicago" [Farrar & Rinehart], dealing with the history of the creek that runs uphill, and Robert J. Casey's "Torpedo Junction" [Bobbs-Merrill], presenting his memoirs as a correspondent with the Pacific fleet from Pearl Harbor to the battle of Midway Island.

Mr. Biddle Writes of Mr. Holmes

"MR. JUSTICE HOLMES," by Francis Biddle. [Scribner's, $2.50.]

Reviewed by Harold C. Havighurst.

Justice Holmes seems to have been loved by all who enjoyed the privilege of personal acquaintance, and Attorney General Biddle, to judge by his book just published, is no exception. The strain of affectionate regard that runs thruout, however, has not detracted from the value of the very real, tho limited, contribution which this book makes to our knowledge and understanding of a remarkable intellect.

The form is biography and the sequence is chronological. But it is not a record of events, for in Holmes' life there were few events. Apart from birth, marriage, and death, a measure of excitement surrounds only the wounds of Civil war battles, the publication of his only book, "The Common Law," and the appointments first to the Massachusetts court and later to the United States Supreme court.

In large part Mr. Biddle has made his treatment a chronicle, based upon intimate contemporary expression, of the highly human thoughts of a mortal man, whose mortality was almost forgotten during the later years of his life. Interspersed, and contributing to the humanizing effect, are vivid and delightful close-ups—an April fool joke on the justice; a walk with his secretary along the towpath, with talk of thrift and women; tea for three at home, with conversation centering, but always with a sparkle, upon the cosmos.

These and other glimpses, altho told in the third person, are of course personal recollections of the author, for which we are much indebted. A few additions are also made to the store of revealing anecdotes which are in circulation and occasionally find their way into print.

Basic traits of character and thought stand out. These follow a fairly simple and consistent pattern and are well known at least to young lawyers, for most law schools in recent years have reared their students on a diet in which Holmes has bulked large. His was a joy of living that made life an end in itself, a philosophy of live-and-let-live that caused him to look with some disdain, if also tolerance, upon all efforts at reform, an eagerness for "self-improvement" that induced the voracious reading of books, a love for generalization and at the same time a profound distrust of it.

Since the book is written for the layman, references to judicial opinions are not profuse. The opinions dealing with freedom of speech are the only ones that are treated in any detail. Enough of Holmes' celebrated aphorisms are quoted to give to the reader their flavor. They will please the palate of all who have an appetite for the delight of the intellect.

The hope of the author is to convey to the reader "something of the essence of the man." Comparing him with Franklin, Washington, Jefferson, Marshall, and Lincoln, Mr. Biddle covets for Holmes a universality that cannot come from his contribution to law alone. In common with those other great men, Holmes, to use his own oft-repeated expression, "bore the fire in his belly." But Washington and Lincoln and the rest were men who, in greater or less degree, endured the heat and burden of the day. They burned with a desire to accomplish something which seemed to them to be good.

In the realm of the intellect, Holmes was superior to them all. But it is doubtful whether a life so devoid of struggle, so lacking in deep-seated conviction, so filled with skepticism as to the worth of any accomplishment, can ever gain for the one who lived it a place of first rank in the hearts of a whole people.

Short Story Has Come of Age in U. S.

"O. HENRY MEMORIAL AWARD PRIZE STORIES OF 1942." Selected by Herschel Brickell, assisted by Muriel Fuller. [Doubleday, Doran, $2.50.]

Reviewed by Tremaine McDowell.

The tremendous advance made by the American short story during the last 30 years becomes dramatically clear if one reads alternately from a volume by O. Henry himself and from this collection. After a half-dozen such comparisons, I laid O. Henry aside—gently and sadly. The editors and the publishers of this memorial anthology undoubtedly rejoice with me that, in technical proficiency and in human understanding, at least a baker's dozen of their authors [and others not represented here] are distinctly superior to the author in whose honor these prizes are awarded.

When O. Henry appeared on the scene, Stephen Crane, with his keen perception of human values and his rare gift for transcribing what he perceived, had already brought lasting distinction to the short story. During O. Henry's productive years, Henry James and Edith Wharton maintained Crane's high level of excellence with their subtly conceived analyses of human conduct. But these three exceptional figures were by no means representative of American short story writers as a whole; O. Henry was. In short, the general level of the short story in his day was his level.

This volume does not suggest that we are now all Stephen Cranes and Henry Jameses, but it does reveal that the short story has progressed far beyond O. Henry, the great popularizer. The reasons are not far to seek. These 21 stories are not written in his manner, but in modernization of the manners of Crane and James. That modernization has been accomplished with the aid of Proust and Joyce and, in certain instances, of Mark Twain and the folktale. In comparison with these stories of 1942, all except a handful of O. Henry's tales look antiquated and even amateurish.

The breadth of interest and of information, the cultivation and the sophistication of these writers indicate that today the road to excellence in the short story can rarely be O. Henry's route from drug store to bank cashier's window to Sunday supplement. The editors of "Prize Stories" so often record the college training of their authors and the latter's fecundity in the novel that I finally began gathering statistics. The average writer in this collection has attended 1.8 colleges [the range is from 0 to 5 and on to apparent infinity, namely, "most" of the colleges in New York City]; he has held .6 of an instructorship in English; he has published at least 2.4 novels; he has won .4 of an award from a variety of literary prizes and fellowships; and in a few instances he has even lived in Italy or in what seems to be its American equivalent, Vermont.

The four prize-winning stories, by Eudora Welty, Wallace Stegner, Wilbur Schramm, and Jeanne Wylie, are carefully calculated exercises in simplicity, which violate at every turn the stereotypes set up by O. Henry, perpetuated by mail-order courses in story writing, and long subsidized by the Saturday Evening Post. Other varieties of conscious simplicity are presented by William Faulkner [in his sentimental "Two Soldiers"], by John Steinbeck and Richard Sullivan. Behind all this simplification and also in the more elaborate narratives of Kay Boyle, David De Jong, and Eleanor Green, there is a wealth of implication and suggestion which would gratify James and Crane. This volume demonstrates that the American short story has come of age.

Tip to War Correspondents: Get That Book Written Now!

By Harry Hansen.

New York.

ALL foreign correspondents are in a big rush to get books published. Never before have they had such easy access to places where the bombs drop and the bullets fly. There is keen competition in the typewriter brigade, and many publishers have options on the future work of newspapermen now with the troops. The first book to use the name of Guadalcanal has just been announced; Random House says it will publish in January, "Guadalcanal Diary," by Richard Tregaskis, a newspaper correspondent who was in the first landing party. Such an author fights against time; he must see action and write it, and get his manuscript out, and then hope that nothing takes place to blanket it. For such books are perishable goods.

Just now the booksellers are holding their breath wondering whether they will get all the books about Nazi Germany off their shelves before the public is satiated. There are two classes of books—those dealing with personal experiences by such correspondents as William L. Shirer, Louis Lochner, and Frederick Oeschner, and those discussing Nazi war methods and strategy. The Shirer book still sells; the others have a good audience; the books on strategy are getting a little shelf worn.

Many booksellers and publishers believe this year will see the end of memoirs that do not deal with actual fighting by American troops. From now on the books about American campaigns will come into popularity, and the man who publishes the first accurate and well-rounded book about the African expedition will be fortunate.

Hazards of Authorship.

Gelett Burgess was telling me about the complications that came when he published his mystery story, "Ladies in Boxes." First, there was his fight with the reviewer who gave the plot away. This practice, says Burgess, is low and inexcusable. It breaks faith with the public, which doesn't want to be told how a mystery ends, but insists on finding out for itself. I think he wins that argument hands down.

Then there was the matter of keeping real people out of the story. "I said my characters were fictitious and I meant it," said Burgess. "It never occurred to me that while writing about one man I was accurately describing a photographer, well known to us, who would have recognized himself at once. That I did not discover until the book was in print. There, in my pages, was Arnold Genthe, who died a few weeks ago. It cost me more than $400 to make changes that would remove the identification."

The Correspondent Who Wasn't There.

John Gunther isn't sloshing around in the mud or picking sand out of his eyes these days. Since December, 1941, he has been in the United States. But he is a busy author; he broadcasts twice a week and is engaged in writing a book about the United States. He feels that he brings to the subject the freshness of a man who has seen a great deal of the outside world and little of his home land in recent years. There is no hurry about the book; possibly it will be published in the fall of 1943.

John is a big man who radiates health and good nature. There is nothing professional in his attitude, and his fresh interest in every subject is a welcome change from authors who talk only about themselves. He lives in New York City and is not lined up with parties or organizations that have axes to grind. The other day he told me the extraordinary story of what happened to him on Dec. 7, 1941. It is extraordinary be-

Morley's Latest Is Amusing, But It Hasn't Much of a Plot

"THOROFARE," by Christopher Morley. [Harcourt, Brace, $2.75.]

Reviewed by Paul Engle.

Christopher Morley has never written a dull book. Whatever the subject, however varied the people, of whatever time, place or weather the events are compounded, the pages always move with an unmistakable fluency and a constant wit. There is a quality of persistent fancy which few other writers can sustain for an entire book. The reader is continually being surprised by some cunning twist of remark, some deft turning of a situation into even humor. And this quality goes far back, straight to the first books Christopher Morley wrote.

It is amazing to find, in "Thorofare," that this pleasant jollity is sustained without any apparent staleness or difficulty. Indeed, I am not sure that the latest effort in this vein does not surpass some of the earlier books, both in abundance of human insight and in spontaneous pleasure in multitudes of common things.

The story is very simple—the life of an English boy, first in a small Norfolk village near the sea, then on a long sea voyage to America, then in Chesapeake, in Blue Ridge, and in the schools, Quaker meeting houses, farms and streets of America. There are, of course, many other men and women and children, but this is the story of Jeff Barton. The main street of Wilford, the Norfolk village, is called Thorofare, and gradually that word is built up into a wide symbol [even the projected Panama canal is called a Thorofare] until it means not merely the narrow street Jeff trudges first in England and then in America, but the turn and length and direction of his whole life.

Christopher Morley.

It is the story of an Americanization. Jeff's uncle, Dan, has been naturalized years before he brings the boy back with him. There are fights and indignities at first, and Jeff has to be beaten up daily for the sins of the cruel redcoats, but he endures it all and in the end without a conscious effort drifts over from being English to being American.

One of the special qualities of Christopher Morley has always been his accurate sense of the solid, gray taste of English life. As far back as his sketches in "Shandygaff" he caught that subtle and dangerously shy air of English days and of English people. He found the warm and welcoming heart under the chill hand and the suspicious eye. In that way the book becomes a study of the possibility of Anglo-American affinity, not by loudly asserting the need of such, but by quietly dramatizing its possibilities. This is the truest and most useful propaganda of all.

There is only the faintest structure of plot. The book depends for its continuity on a succession of more or less related episodes in Jeff's life. There is little cumulative force, the tone of gentle comedy and occasional irony running with only the slightest pulsations from beginning to end. There is little development of interest, the first 10 pages having actually as much force and attraction as the last 10. Interest is sustained by no devices of suspense or any created wonder as to future event, but by the careful aliveness of each conversation, each page, each small section. It is a piling up of equal blocks, all bright and shining and neatly smoothed.

It is a book of character. It doesn't matter what happens, but what people are concerned in the happening. It is remarkable how so many different men and women are introduced, with each one distinct and discernible.

There is almost a multitude of people, and of a surprising variety: Boxer, the cockney barber on ship with the parrot who announces to all who enter the barber shop, "Listen, blokes, it's bloody 'ot in 'ere. Ginger, you're barmy." [Jeff

Ornithologist's Adventures in the South Seas

"TRAIL OF THE MONEY BIRD," by Dillon Ripley. [Harper's, $3.50.]

Reviewed by Bob Becker.

In this chronicle of a 30,000 mile trip to the South seas and New Guinea the author, a trained ornithologist, has accomplished what few scientists have been able to do: tell in a light, entertaining way about innumerable personal adventures in a little known corner of the world and at the same time inject into the record a wealth of fascinating bird lore which is bound to intrigue any reader.

The charm of this book is twofold: Its simplicity of style, for Mr. Ripley tells his story in a breezy manner, and the many intimate little experiences which he wisely has included in it.

The author sailed a small schooner thru the Panama canal and into the South seas to islands which today are much in the war news. He touched many native villages. How he made this trip and collected birds for an eastern scientific institution is reported in a delightful manner.

Some of Mr. Ripley's accounts of the curious forms of bird life in the South seas are startling—for example, his description of the amazing bower birds of the New Guinea jungles. These birds build curious little huts of twigs, surrounded by gardens which they fill each day with fresh flowers.

This is a swell escape book for stay-at-homes who like travel, adventure, and a contact with a distant corner of the world.

'Halka' to Be Sung in Polish on Wednesday

By Claudia Cassidy.

Grace Moore, Helen Jepson, and the new dramatic soprano, Stella Roman, join the Chicago Opera company this week—Miss Moore to sing her first Chicago Marguerite in Monday night's repetition of "Faust," Miss Jepson to celebrate the Massenet centennial in Saturday afternoon's "Manon," and Miss Roman to make her debut as Desdemona in Saturday night's "Otello," with Giovanni Martinelli and Lawrence Tibbett. The other novelty of the week is the inclusion for the first time in the subscription répertoire of the Polish opera, "Halka," with Jan Kiepura and George Czaplicki singing their native language for the particular pleasure of the Polish Opera guild.

Miss Moore's Marguerite has been heard so seldom that it will be new to most of us. She added the part to her Metropolitan Opera répertoire back in 1930 when Trantoul, Pinza, Basiola, and Swarthout completed the major cast. Here she will have the Armenian tenor, Armand Tokatyan, as Faust, and the Russian basso, Alexander Kipnis, as Mephistopheles, a rôle he has not sung here since 1929, when he appeared with Edith Mason and Rene Maison. Richard Bonelli will sing Monday night's Valentine, and Margery Mayer will sing Siebel.

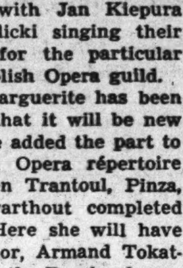
Wednesday night's "Halka" is new only as a subscription opera. The Chicago Opera staged it as a special attraction in 1937 and again in 1939. Written by Stanislaw Moniuszko in 1858, "Halka" opened an era of Polish national opera, and Poles grow up on "Halka" tunes almost the way we learn nursery rhymes. Moniuszko is considered second only to Chopin as a 19th century Polish composer, and his 300 songs place him in Polish esteem about where Schubert stands in lieder.



Jan Kiepura.
[Seymour Photo.]

"Halka" is a melodious peasant opera concerned with a Polish variant on the favoriate operatic theme, unrequited love. Halka, a mountain girl, refuses to believe in the perfidy of her aristocratic lover, Janusz, despite his betrothal to a girl of his own social rank. Ignoring the pleas of her faithful suitor, Jontek, she clings to Janusz until his wedding day. Then she throws herself into the river and drowns.

The fiery title rôle will be sung by Renee Treer, who has a background of operatic appearance in Vienna, Mayence, Saarbrucken, and at the Geneva music festival in Switzerland. Jan Kiepura sings the luckless hero, George Czaplicki the baritone villain. Others in major rôles are Valerie Glowacki, Alexander Kulpak, and Stefan Kozakevich. Jerzy Bojanowski conducts, the Filareci-Dudziarz chorus supplants the opera regulars, and Felix Sadowski is guest choreographer and ballet master of the Chicago Opera ballet.

Restoration of "Otello" to the répertoire takes an extra luster in the booking of the Rumanian soprano, Stella Roman, to sing Desdemona. Miss Roman comes to Chicago from the Metropolitan Opera, but her background is essentially European. She made her debut in "Andrea Chenier" at Bologna, and afterward sang in the opera houses of Naples, Berlin, Barcelona, Rome, and at the Salzburg festival.

The complete schedule of operas for the week follows:

Monday at 8—"Faust," with Grace Moore, Margery Mayer, Armand Tokatyan, Richard Bonelli, Alexander Kipnis. Ballet, Fausto Cleva, conducting.

Wednesday at 8—"Halka," with Renee Treer, Valerie Glowacki, Jan Kiepura, George Czaplicki, Alexander Kulpak, Stefan Kozakevich. Filareci-Dudziarz chorus. Ballet. Jerzy Bojanowski conducting.

Friday at 8—Board of education series at popular prices—"Aida," with Rose Bampton, Coe Glade, Sydney Rayner, Carlo Morelli, Virgilio Lazzari, Douglas Beattie. Ballet. Carlo Peroni conducting.

Saturday at 2—"Manon," with Helen Jepson, Richard Crooks, George Czaplicki, Douglas Beattie.

Saturday at 8—"Otello," with Stella Roman [debut], Giovanni Martinelli, Lawrence Tibbett.

Meanwhile, despite such minor [all right, Mr. Gallo, major] disasters as cancelations because of colds, interfering radio contracts, and the suspicion of indifference due to the salary freeze, the opera has kept going, on time, if not always on schedule.

Miss Albanese's Marguerite does not rival her Micaela in "Carmen," but it has possibilities. Her soprano is lovely in quality, tho small for Gounod's score. The Jewel Song was competent, but without the brilliance that gives it quality. Incidentally, that brings up a point raised by some letters about the review of Josephine Tuminia's Lucia. They said how could Miss Tuminia possess skill and not brilliance, didn't the one imply the other? Not necessarily. Skill means a deftness with tools, vocal or otherwise. An artisan has skill, being a trained, even a superior workman. But he may never achieve the brilliance of an artist.

Getting back to Miss Albanese, the Jewel Song was the least of her performance, while the church scene and prison scene were its cumulative peak. She proved, in race track parlance, that she can go the distance. And in that church scene, perhaps because it suggested St. Sulspice and because her great dark eyes and blonde wig suggested Bori, I wondered what kind of Manon she might be.

Education Is Not the Chief Requirement

By the Rev. John Evans.

If you want to know whether you will be a good teacher ask your friends, not your professors of education. Moreover, your marks of teaching ability have little relationship to your college grades, intelligence test records, knowledge of contemporary affairs, or your tolerance.

This, at least, is the summary of experiments made by Prof. Earl D. Bowman of DePauw university, Greencastle, Ind., in coöperation with the public schools of Greencastle. Dr. Bowman discovered that the rating of student teachers by their pupils, by the superintendent and the principal of schools had only slight relationship to the factors to which success is often attributed.

Dr. Bowman found that the best method of determining in advance the probable success of the prospective teacher was to secure expressions of opinions from eight friends and former instructors, with far greater weight going to the former. Dr. Bowman concluded that the quality of sympathetic understanding of pupils in their efforts to solve their personal problems, without solicitous sentimentality, probably goes further toward determining later teaching success than exceptional scholastic ability or executive brilliance.

Yes, you can sing the "Star Spangled Banner!" Dr. Thomas James Kelly, noted conductor of the Orpheus club of Cincinnati, O., and member of the University of Cincinnati music faculty, says so. If you think you can't sing it, even up there on the "rockets' red glare" high notes, it's because you think you can't, and Dr. Thomas calls your lack of confidence "psychological obesity." He excuses you a little, however, on the ground that most accompanists let you down on the "rockets' red glare" by playing softly just when you need support. Dr. Kelly said the practice of hiring a grand opera star to sing our great national anthem for us is not only foolish, but a thing no other great people does.

Hidden away about the house are forgotten things that may have little intrinsic value, yet have considerable sentimental value to collectors or museums. Most everybody knows the value of old coins and stamps, but other things bring ready money, such as: primitive American paintings, old needlework, crazy quilts; furniture that may have been painted, hiding its valuable rosewood or cherrywood; autographs, land grants, old prints, Indian relics, firearms, primitive kitchen utensils, china and glass that your grandmother had, old dolls and toys, books pertaining to local history, the first phonographs, bicycles and automobiles.

HOBBIES MAGAZINE contains an average of 1,850 advertisements a month wanting to buy, sell and trade such collectors' items.

Budgets Can Be Tuned to Wartime Needs

Thru the Looking Glass

A brand new perfume is a rarity these days, and when it's a fragrance that combines sweetness and sophistication, in just the right degree, it is doubly welcome. This newcomer will be heartily received by those women who like something new and perfect in scents.

Adventures in new perfumes, favorite indoor sport of many women, have been greatly curtailed these last months, but happily, a house of distinguished perfumes recently has added a new scent to its line, the first in over four years. The formula for it came to America from Paris, where it was compounded in brighter days, and its journey to this country was one of the dark, secretive affairs.

Made up here, the perfume reveals the sure, French touch. There's the typical, sophisticated note, but it's muted in favor of an overtone of sweetness with just a hint of spice. Nothing cloying about it, that's certain, just the gentleness that seems so fitting these days. It has no strident notes, and we believe that is especially welcome, since it may be worn for occasions when a woman doesn't want to be too perfumed and still likes to maintain the feminine touch. Another favorable characteristic is that it is definitely a dainty and clean smelling scent. There is none of the musky odor that sometimes is tiring to both the wearer and her public.

We think this is a perfume you'll want to wear often, for gay times especially, and for work and other occasions. A word of warning here for those who are inclined to hoard their perfumes: Once the bottle has been opened, you'd better start making good use of it, otherwise you'll be denying yourself the pleasure of wearing it and it will evaporate little by little. We haven't much sympathy for the woman who moans over the fact that she was saving her favorite perfume and, when she hauled it out for a state occasion, found there wasn't nearly as much of it left as there was six months before. Don't use perfume indiscriminately, or too lavishly, but do use it.

The flacon that contains the perfume is most attractive. Of clear crystal, beautifully and simply cut, it is the type that lends distinction to a dressing table.

There is a companion piece to this scent, a concentrated eau de toilette, and either version will delight the woman who likes quality and something new in perfume.

Wise Planning, Spending Buys More Bonds

By Doris Blake.

[Copyright: 1942: By News Syndicate Co., Inc.]

If there is anything in the world we women want to find out it is how to spend less and save more in wartime. Save to buy war bonds, of course! You know buying war bonds helps keep the cost of living down.

Why we have rationing is another thing we women want to know, in order to coöperate heartily so that we can help win the war on the home front. Getting along on what is left or on substitutes is eased with the knowledge that by doing without a definite contribution to the winning of the war is effected.

The housewife who enlists to help win the war on the home front will find that when it comes to planning future spending, many things have been decided for her. Family wartime budgets have less flexibility because of price fixing and rationing and other government controls. There are limits on style changes, charge accounts and instalment buying. More must be set aside for taxes and the government even suggests how much each family should invest in war bonds—10 per cent of its income!

Of the foregoing facts we are reminded in a pamphlet which can be obtained from the publications of the Bureau of Home Economics and Consumers' Counsel of the department of agriculture and from the Office of Price Administration. The Public Affairs Committee, Inc., a nonprofit, educational organization, offers the public in dime pamphlet form some constructive and comprehensive explanations of the way of rationing, price ceilings, and the like. Mrs. America can do her bit with a knowledge of food quality and standards; how to stretch the food dollar; how to keep food from spoiling; how to buy and care for clothes; care of household furnishings and equipment, and a hundred other tips relative to the moment's urgency.

In spite of the fact that women the country over are signing up for wartime activities, it is regrettable that in their native haunt, the home, not enough of them are familiarizing themselves with the wartime problems thereof. Until they know the whys and wherefores, they will not be the home front soldiers needed.

We plead for home women not to gloss over headlines in newspapers that introduce topics of food, clothing, taxes, war bond purchase. Their meaning should be absorbed in entirety, particularly as they apply to the individual home. To be a valuable home soldier, the more knowledge absorbed thru literature of this type, the better.

On the home front, the housewife must be able to tell where she stands not by looking at a map stuck with colored pins, but by looking at her budget and budgeting for victory, with emphasis on savings.

Savings, the pamphlet referred to above reads, have first place on the budget, right at the top. To save rather than to spend is the main purpose of a wartime budget. As an example, a hypothetical Mrs. Armstrong keeps a record of her last month's expenditures. Then she puts down the tentative amount by which she hopes to reduce each item. Say, she has food listed at $59. If she could cut that to $55, she could buy four $1 war stamps. So, she must study foods so that her family is given a balanced diet but that will cut her food budget by $4. The pamphlet is full of suggestions on how savings may be accomplished in every department affecting the home.

Loss of Vitamins.

Air stirred into fruits and vegetables while they are cooking causes the loss of part of their vitamins.

Clotilde Children's Patterns

In these two patterns are excellent ideas for Christmas gifts. One makes a doll with its own clever little dress, panties, and bonnet. The other dresses Cissy for the holiday.

The child's dress is a really splendid jumper model, with shoulder straps that "stay put," a round neckline to reveal the sweet little blouse beneath, and a moderately flared skirt. Buttons may have more than a merely useful rôle; they may afford trimming, too, if chosen with that in mind.

Style No. 2000 is designed for a 13 inch doll; it requires ⅜ yard of 35 inch fabric for body of rag doll; ½ yard of material with 2 yards of braid for dress and hat; ¼ yard for panties.

Style No. 3509 is designed for sizes 4, 6, 8 and 10. Size 8 requires 1¾ yards of 35 inch material for jumper; 1½ yards for long-sleeved blouse, or 1 yard of fabric with 1¼ yards of rickrack braid for short-sleeved model.

Each pattern costs 10 cents, plus 2 cents to cover mailing cost.

Address orders for Clotilde Children's Fashions to Chicago Tribune, P. O. Box 537, Grand Central Annex, NEW YORK CITY, inclosing 10 cents in stamps or coin (coin preferred—wrap it carefully), plus 2 cents to cover mailing cost, for each pattern ordered. IMPORTANT! Be certain to state clearly the number of the pattern and the size desired, and write your name and address plainly.

Household Forum by Louise Bargelt

[Have you some household help that lightens labor or conserves materials? Is there some comfort you could enjoy? We'll be glad to pass on your ideas to our readers. Address Louise Bargelt, The Chicago Tribune.]

Mrs. Lillie M., Chicago—When my smooth red brick fireplace gets smoked up, I remove soot with brush and then wash with solution of three pounds of washing soda dissolved in hot water. For just as good results I sometimes mix household ammonia with a little water and make into a paste with a scratchless scouring powder. This acts as a tonic to the bricks as well as cleans them. Then I rinse and dry.

Helen B., Rock Island, Ill.—I find I can keep rice from boiling over if I add a teaspoon of lemon juice to a quart of water.

Mrs. Edgar G., Chicago—I have always thought it would save on fuel and time and vitamins if we had sectional cooking pots in which meat and vegetables could be cooked.

Kitty M., Princeton, Ill.—I add a very little starch to rinsing water when I wash my curtains. It makes them easier to iron and they stay in place better, and soil more slowly.

• • •

Mrs. Julie Baker, Kirkland, Ill.—I have found that a small paint brush is very useful for dusting Venetian blinds, lamp shades, shelves and knickknacks and even the leaves of some window plants.

Adelaide B., Chicago—To keep a recipe card clean while I'm baking I insert it between the tines of a table fork and let it rest at a readable angle on the table.

Miss Clara Bowman, Byron, Ill.—In reply to the request of Mrs. Harry G., for a suggestion on what to place under flower pots, I buy pretty flowered oil cloth and cut it the size of the window sill. It looks very pretty, and is a protection.

"Watch on the Rhine" Success in Argentina

Altho Argentina's political position is delicate in such matters, Lillian Hellman's anti-axis play, "Watch on the Rhine" has been successfully presented in the German language in Buenos Aires. This Home-Mixed Cough Syrup Is Most Effective

Easily Mixed. Needs No Cooking

Cough medicines usually contain a large quantity of plain syrup—a good ingredient, but one which you can easily make at home. Take 2 cups of granulated sugar and 1 cup of water, and stir a few moments until dissolved. Or use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.

Then get from any druggist 2½ ounces of Pinex, pour it into a pint bottle, and add your syrup. This gives you a full pint of wonderful medicine for coughs due to colds. It makes a real saving because it gives you about four times as much for your money. It never spoils, and tastes fine.

This is actually a surprisingly effective, quick-acting cough relief. Promptly, you feel it taking hold. It loosens the phlegm, soothes the irritated membranes and makes breathing easy. You've never seen anything better for prompt and pleasing results.

Pinex is a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, a most reliable soothing agent for throat and bronchial membranes. Money refunded if it doesn't please you in every way.

Heavy Holiday Meal Calls for Light Dessert

Tart, Fluffy Chiffon Pies Are Just Right

By Mary Meade.

[Copyright: 1942: By The Chicago Tribune.]

If you must serve pie after a big Thanksgiving dinner, make it a not so heavy, one cruster, and cut the pieces small. Pie really should be reserved for lighter meals, but I am well aware of the American appetite for pie at Thanksgiving dinner.

A fluffy, chiffon type of pie isn't a bad choice. Lemon, lime, orange or grapefruit chiffon pie is excellent because of the tart, citrus flavor which helps alleviate that overstuffed with turkey feeling.

Cranberry chiffon pie is another good choice. Applesauce chiffon pie is economical, and "snow pie" is what you might call "scrumptious." There are many fine recipes for these and other luscious pies in my booklet, "Twenty-seven Choice Chiffon Pies," which may be obtained for five cents in stamps, by mail. Requests should be addressed to me, in the care of THE TRIBUNE.

Grapefruit Chiffon Pie.
[Nine inch pie.]

- 1 tablespoon plain gelatin
- ¼ cup cold water
- 1 cup sugar
- ½ cup tart grapefruit juice
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- 4 eggs, separated
- 1 teaspoon grated lemon or orange rind
- 1 cup cream, whipped
- Baked pie shell

Soften gelatin in cold water. Combine ½ cup of the sugar with grapefruit juice, salt, and slightly beaten egg yolks. Cook, stirring constantly, to custard consistency. Stir in gelatin and grated lemon rind. Beat egg whites until stiff and gradually add remaining sugar, beating constantly until you have a thick meringue which holds peaks. Fold into the cooled custard. Whip cream and fold in last. Turn into baked shell and chill until firm.

Snow Pie.
[Eight inch pie.]

- 1 tablespoon plain gelatin
- ¼ cup cold water
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- 3 egg whites, beaten until stiff
- ½ cup sugar
- 1 cup heavy cream, whipped
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- Graham cracker or cookie crumb crust

Soften gelatin in cold water and dissolve over hot water. Fold sugar into stiffly beaten egg whites and salt, and add dissolved gelatin slowly. Fold in whipped cream and vanilla. Pour into chilled crust and chill until firm.

Graham Cracker Crust.

- ½ cup butter or margarine
- ½ cup sifted confectioners' sugar
- 1½ cups crushed graham crackers

These ingredients are enough for a large, 9 inch pie shell. Melt butter and mix in sugar and crumbs. Press mixture over bottom and sides of a pie pan and chill until firm. Or bake for 8 minutes in a 350 degree oven, cool and chill. The baked crust has a very slightly different flavor, and often holds together better than the unbaked one.

Sherry Chiffon Pie.
[Nine inch pie.]

- 3 eggs
- 1 cup milk
- ½ cup sugar
- 1 cup sherry wine
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon nutmeg
- 2 tablespoons plain gelatin
- ¼ cup cold water
- 1 cup cream, whipped

Beat egg yolks slightly and combine with sugar and milk in top part of double boiler. Add wine slowly, stirring constantly. Add nutmeg and salt. Cook over hot water, stirring frequently, until mixture will coat a clean spoon. Remove from heat and add gelatin softened in the cold water. Stir until dissolved. Chill until partly thickened, then fold in stiffly beaten egg whites and whipped cream. Fill crust and chill until firm.

Eggnog Pie.
[Nine inch pie.]

- 1 tablespoon plain gelatin
- ¼ cup cold water
- 1 cup milk
- 3 eggs, separated
- ½ cup sugar
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- 2 or 3 tablespoons rum
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- ½ cup whipping cream, whipped and sweetened slightly
- Grated nutmeg or toasted chopped almonds

Soften gelatin in cold water. Heat milk in top of double boiler. Beat egg

A chilled, fluffy chiffon pie in a baked or graham cracker crumb crust will make a delicious Thanksgiving dinner dessert.

yolks until thick and light with sugar. Pour hot milk over them and return to double boiler. Cook to custard consistency, stirring constantly. Remove from heat and add softened gelatin, vanilla, and rum. Chill until thick. Whip until fluffy, and fold in stiffly beaten egg whites to which salt has been added. Turn into baked shell. Chill until firm. Spread sweetened whipped cream over the top and sprinkle with nutmeg or almonds.

Caramel Filbert Chiffon Pie.
[Nine inch pie.]

- 1 cup sugar
- 1 tablespoon gelatin
- 2 cups milk
- 3 eggs, separated
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- ½ cup chopped filberts [or other nuts]

Melt half the sugar to a golden brown sirup in a skillet, over low heat. Pour 1 cup of the milk into the skillet. Cook and stir until caramel lumps have dissolved. Soften gelatin in ¼ cup of the remaining milk. Add rest of milk to caramel sirup with the 3 egg yolks. Cook and stir over hot water until custard coats a spoon. Add dissolved gelatin, salt, and vanilla, and cool. Whip egg whites until light and gradually whip in the other ½ cup sugar. When mixture is stiff and glossy, fold into the caramel mixture. Stir in nuts and pour into baked shell. Chill until firm. Whipped cream may be spread over the pie before serving.

This pie is good in a baked shell, graham cracker, cornflake, or cookie crust.

Sarcer's Draft Deferred

Add signs of the times: David Sarser, 21 year old violinist of Kansas City, was deferred by his draft board long enough to play the New York recital which was his due as the first 1942 winner of the Naumberg award. Mr. Sarser did the army credit by being a success.

Buy Buy Baby

Every baby has his bed. It is one of THE essentials when preparing for his arrival home from the hospital.

The most interesting thing about this particular bed is the adjustable spring. At each end of the bed is a series of four notches. And by a simple adjustment the spring can be raised or lowered to any one of these four levels. While the baby is still small and not ambitious enough to stand up, it will be found more convenient to attend the baby if the spring and mattress are as high as possible. Not so much stooping or so far to stoop. It's a great help to the mother, too, when putting on fresh sheets to have the spring and mattress at a level that can be reached without back-breaking maneuvers. The frame of the bed is waxed birch, a very light colored wood. Under $16.

The little envelope of stars sketched just below the bed is something quite new. These are paper stars with a mucilage backing, and coverd with a luminous paint which is quite harmless. They can be used as decoration in the child's room. And since they glow in the dark room they help to soothe the small child who is afraid of the dark. The theory is that if they are pasted on the ceiling where the little boy or girl can see them from where they lie in bed they will find enough comfort in their private constellation so they will not mind the darkened room. 25 cents.

to bed with him. Around his neck he wears a narrow pink satin ribbon with a tinkly bell under his chin and a pink corsage on his neck.

A very masculine toy for the boy baby is a white plush reproduction of an English bull—broad chested and bow-legged, and a lower jaw that any English bull would be proud of.

The Stamp Collector

By Richard McP. Cabeen

Mr. Cabeen will answer questions about stamps, but not value. The column in this page, contains offers to buy and sell. Include a stamped, self-addressed envelope for reply.

Numismatics and philately, the appalling titles which have been given to coin and stamp collecting, have one thing in common in that neither has a very definite vocabulary. Either the writers have no desire to make their language precise or they fear criticism by others who may be less intelligent but more vociferous. It may be pertinent to cite an example in each hobby.

For about 70 years stamp collectors have known stamps on double paper but in the last 10 or 15 years the term has been perverted to apply to stamps printed on the pasteup joints where rolls of paper are joined for use in continuous printing rotary presses. Double paper is exactly what the term implies, sheets of printing paper formed of two lamina, and not necessarily thicker that a single sheet of paper. It was devised to prevent the removal of stamp cancelations, but probably proved too expensive to warrant its use. No one will allege that stamps printed on pasteups are less desirable than true double paper stamps, but with all of the words in our language, it seems unnecessary to purloin a term which has been in use so long.

As another case there is the word "overstruck" as applied to dates on coins. It is granted that there are such items as true overstruck coins where finished coins have been placed on a die for a second time and restruck with a new impression. The second striking may alter the whole design or may change a portion, but it would be a slow process fitting coins into dies so that a portion of the design could be retained and a portion altered.

What actually appears to be meant by the term "overstruck date" is that the date on the die has been altered by punching a new date over the old one. It may be that many dates are altered by punching to make the dies useful in succeeding years and that this does not become known except when traces of the old date show. Since "strike" is so definitely a word applied to the process of coining and is not used in speaking of work on a die, the misleading term should be changed to "recut date" or something of like nature. The term "altered date" cannot be used as this is pretty well established as meaning fraudulent alteration made to increase the value of a coin.

This Prisoner of War cover is shown thru the kindness of G. H. Sims of Indianapolis, Ind. It was directed to Mr. Sims by a British aviator in Italy, just prior to the entry of the United States into the war. Since the declaration of war correspondence between Italy and this country passes thru the Red Cross at Geneva, Switzerland.

The famous Grand Prix collection of the stamps of Uruguay which was formed by Emanuel J. Lee has been sold by H. R. Harmer for $35,200. This is an auction record for the stamps of one South American country only. A superb block of four of the first issue 80 centavos stamps realized $2,000 and the block of 15 of the same value sold for $7,100, the highest price ever bid for one lot of a South American issue in New York.

Following the completion of the Lee sale, Mr. Harmer offered the famous Lagerloef collection of Brazil. This was sold as a single lot and brought $5,650. This is the first time in the history of stamp collecting that a single large collection has been sold as a lot and in preparation for the sale the auctioneers issued a 16 page catalog with seven pages of photographs. Many of the prominent South American collectors were represented at the sales and one collector made the journey from Montevideo to attend the auction.

"On Oct. 26, the Office of Censorship issued an order stating that in connection with the exchange of postage stamps and other philatelic material, all traffic in censorship seals and labels is barred from the international mails." The above message from the Washington bureau of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE appears to indicate that the Office of Censorship is concerned only with the actual seals and labels, and that its ruling does not interfere with illustrations of covers bearing such material.

Lady of the House

Let Us Give Thanks.

The 153d anniversary of that first national day of Thanksgiving proclaimed by George Washington falls, as it did then, on November 26. It seems fitting that we give special thought to the closing paragraph of the original proclamation:

"And also that we may then unite in most humbly offering our prayers and supplications to the great Lord and Ruler of Nations, and beseech Him to pardon our national and other transgressions — to enable us all, whether in public or private stations, to perform our several and relative duties properly and punctually—to render our national government to all the people by constantly being a government of wise, just, and constitutional laws, discreetly and faithfully executed and obeyed—to protect and guide all sovereigns and nations and to bless them with good government, peace, and concord. . . ."

Thanksgiving.

I thank Thee Lord for this my bed
And for the roof I have o'erhead;
For family dear, for things I eat—
And friendly nods along the street;
For this my country that I love,
And for the skies serene above,
Let us give praise that will not cease
To Him, our Maker, Prince of Peace.

Depths.

[Written for the lads in the submarines—after reading "High Flight," by John Gillespie.]

I realized my Neptunian dreams,
And mingled with all creatures of the sea.
Darted thru feathery fronds of green,
All secrets of the deep were known to me.
I saw Nereids in golden caves.
Thru powerful currents swiftly raced.
Dipped and dived thru waters blue,
Speak not of dangers I had faced.
I viewed castles on a coral strand,
From my submarine upon the ocean floor,
I found the one and only superthrill,
I was content, I did not ask for more.
Grieve not because I have an ocean grave,
I do not wish to lie beneath the sod,
Down here mid beauty tongue can never tell,
Just know that I am very close to God.

Wild Geese.

Come from afar, and far to go,
They wing at lofty height,
And from the mists of space their cries
Float down from somber twilight skies.
Southward, along the lake shore they
Pursue the age-old trackless way
And on the placid brow of night
With quills the victory symbol write.

November Gray.

When autumn's made her crisp debut,
And brilliant summer's flown,
The earth stripped of her brighest hue
Stands dazed and alone.

The air betrays an empty hush
From insects humming by,
While gray and tattered rainclouds rush
Along the hem of sky.

Bereft of blossoms, flower stalks
With shaking, thin hands grieve,
A little frightened, insecure
Since summer took its leave

And left them there of beauty shorn
Where once gay petals curled,
Colorless, lifeless, alien forms
In even a stranger world.

Molly Johnson.

No Second Cup?

Well, didn't the government promise to "change your eating habits?" In the early days in America they didn't even know what to do with coffee beans, so they just boiled them whole in water, eating the beans.

"You have no idea how neighborly your 'House' has become," says one contributor. "I am forever meeting my friends there."

Rare Treasures of Many Lands Are on Display

By Edith Weigle.

This is a time when collectors of antiques and those who have a hobby of almost any kind can enjoy a field day, for there is now in progress an annual event, the Hobby show, which displays just about every article known to man—and a few that are strangers!

At the Palmer House from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m. daily until Thursday you may see all manner of treasures: Fine 18th century French and English furniture; chests and tables and cabinets of colonial America, and items of Victoria's day; china from all the famous English factories; Irish crystal and American Bristol and Sandwich glass as well as hundreds of pieces of lesser value; dolls of every age, size and description; curious old buttons by the thousands; Indian relics; stamps; fantastic old jewelry and silver; music boxes; old bird and flower prints; old coins, paper weights and many other objects of interest to hobby fans.

Collectors come from far and near both to display their wares and to buy. It is like a huge fair. Among some of the finest pieces on exhibit are a pair of 18th century mahogany urns which are seen on handsome cabinets flanking a sideboard of the period. Behind them is a gorgeous, rich red brocade used as a wall hanging. This display is part of the collection of a Chicago antique shop known for its rare treasures, among them being some beautiful examples of old Baccarat paper weights. The articles shown in the photograph today are also from this firm.

There is at present a great vogue for converting old oil lamps into present day table lamps. They're wired, of course, and often they are mounted on bases of wood, brass, or pewter. Shades are of paper with floral borders, or of plain, metallic paper. Vases, as well, of which the Hobby show has a great variety, can be made into interesting lamps, as can Parian figures, or old candlesticks.

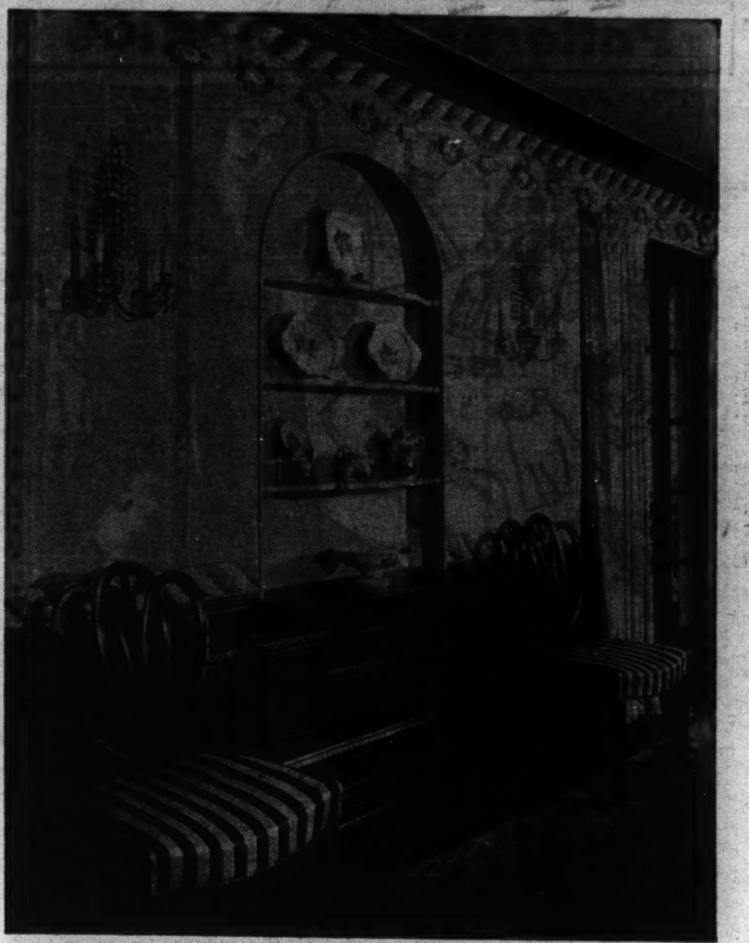
That there is a growing interest in antiques in this area is evidenced not only by the present exhibition, but by the permanent department given over to them in many of our Chicago stores. Most of these carry English and French furniture of the 18th century as well as some Regency pieces of the early 19th. Any number of beautiful mahogany chests are available, for example, ranging in price from about $200 to $400. There also are some mahogany dining tables and sets of a dozen chairs to be found in a variety of styles.

The stores, too, have special departments stocked with fine old china, porcelain, crystal and silver. So your interest in antiques aroused by the Hobby show can be indulged the year around, if you live in or near Chicago.



The Hobby show, now current at the Palmer House, stimulates interest in fine antiques such as these beautiful, original Hepplewhite dining chairs, and charming pieces of old Spode.

3 Revived Shows Have Brief Runs in New York

Revivals of former successes have not been doing so well. Three productions closed in New York after very short engagements—John Drinkwater's "Bird in Hand," the Cecil Holm-George Abbott "Three Men on a Horse," an an apparently ill conceived restaging of "The Time, the Place, and the Girl," a musical comedy staged with success in 1905 at the La Salle theater in Chicago.

Misdemeanors Are Just Part of Learning

By Gladys Huntington Bevans.

[Copyright: 1942: By News Syndicate Co., Inc.]

"I'm so afraid my little boy will be stubborn"; "My little girl says 'No' to so many things I ask of her, I'm afraid she will get to be stubborn."

Straws do show which way the wind blows. But we don't need to constitute ourselves a weather bureau, watching those straws to see if they presage a lasting nor'easter.

Too many parents, especially those whose little children who are just beginning to learn to live in this world, are pretty constantly "afraid" —afraid that their small son or daughter will get to be something they think undesirable. "I'm so afraid Billy will have an uncontrolable temper"; "I'm so afraid Doris is going to be selfish when she grows up." These are typical of often heard apprehensions.

Some of this fear is due to the high ideals we hold for our children's behavior. We keep measuring them up against adult standards of perfection and worry if they fall below.

What is perfect behavior for a grown person is not necessarily perfect or normal behavior for a child. A child is an immature being, getting accustomed to his environment. And "environment" means everything around him: Grown people and children, and his home and the world outside, not to mention himself and his own powers. Why should we expect him to act or react as we do? The world doesn't look the same to him that it does to us. It doesn't even sound the same.

We could say that a child doesn't yet know what it's all about. He will; he just needs time. But he's constantly trying hard to learn, making efforts that look to us like play and awkwardness, and even mischief or naughtiness.

A child has to learn as his own mind and muscles dictate. Also, he's learning all the time, spiritually or emotionally or whatever you choose to call it.

Last, he's trying to learn all the things that civilization and convention [that's you and I] inevitably require of him too. And these last are probably the most difficult, because they are the least understandable of all. This difficulty for him is partly because these demands of ours come upon him from outside himself while the other things he learns he is urged to learn from impulses within himself.

But besides understanding what a little child has to learn, we must keep remembering that the process is gradual. He isn't born knowing all these things, tho he is born with the capacity to know them. He must grow and develop and acquire them gradually.

And that is where our patience comes in. It is what we forget. So we worry about each phase of behavior he goes thru, forgetting that he's new at his job. We expect our young child to act like a miniature adult, just as in the old days people dressed children in clothes not suited to their age, small versions of adult garments.

Children simply are not miniature adults. They are flexible, immature, growing, learning human beings, gradually growing and learning beings, and therefore constantly changing.

Now if you can keep this whole picture before you, it will banish much of that "afraid" feeling. It will prevent you from seeing in each childish experiment the beginning of a permanent bad habit or character trait. If your Jack has a tantrum, you'll not visualize him at once as a man who will be prey to violent emotion tho you will decide what to do or not to do about it. Likewise if your small Jill says "No" to you many times a day, you're not going to at once picture her as becoming a blindly stubborn woman. You'll figure out why she has the impulse to repeat her "No," then cope with it. You will not be instantly apprehensive, because you will know that since children change constantly, their behavior changes constantly.

This advice doesn't mean, "Don't do anything about anything." Even tho you look with an optimistic and tolerant eye upon the children's ways, it still must be an understanding eye. For that's your job, to understand. If it's an understanding eye, it will see the "why" of their behavior. If it sees the "why" then it will know what to be blind to. Even if behavior needs correcting or a character trait needs modifying, you can still be an optimist. You don't have to live in a state of constant apprehension.

This is the 14th in our series of articles for parents of young children.

Dress Parade Clothes Should Cure Wartime Blues

Colors, Styles Are Unusual and Exciting

By Rea Seeger.

There are exciting clothes, and you can find them without frenzied shopping. There are clothes that will do more for sagging spirits than a shot in the arm, dresses keyed for wartime with enough color and sometimes glitter to shine thru the darkest day, mentally or literally because of the weather. These are the collections that frankly feature flattering costumes, good old time feminine fancies and ideas far, far removed from clanking uniforms and regimentals, in short the escape clothes that really assure escape from doldrums, or grim realities.

In these showings are the newest dress parade dresses cut with a simple short skirt and combined with an evening cut decolletage and no sleeves. Think of your simplest summertime sheath dress, minus the sleeves and you have the general idea. Dresses like this are the clever answer as to what is proper and good grooming to wear to opera, theater, downtown dinners, and Sunday night parties, dresses that could never be worn for anything else, dresses that are formalized with the off the shoulder decolletage and handsome accents of trim.

Most of these are made of rich looking materials preferably of dull crepe. Color and dramatics are added with double face satin ribbon, fat cabbage roses of either silk chiffon or velvet, beautiful handwork like beading, braiding, tassels, ribbons, bows, and feathers. It's the ingenious way these accents are managed that mark the dress of the new fashion vintage. Wear them under long or short fur jackets or coats, with the many diversified versions of the wool chesterfield models, or the glamor coats of dull wool flashing with nail heads or sequins and you have the dress parade costume of this war.

Similar dresses using soft, fine, nonscratchy woolens such as thin jersey, chiffon wool, and crêpy textured wools are treated to the same decorative embellishments, beads, tassels, embroidery, and plenty of contrast, such as black on beige, red on cinnamon, victory blue on silver grey, and so on. Many of these woolen dresses are made in the same simple sheathline with the addition of very short sleeves and higher, tho no less flattering, necklines of the so-called "short evening dresses." Printed challis and other printed thin woolens go dress parade with the designs outlined in twinkling jet beads or glinting sequins.

The third idea is, of course, the metallic parade, entire dresses made of shimmering silver, gold, or copper metallic brocades, or the sultry beauties made of sequins in lambent tones of deep red, copper, or brilliant green. These are exciting dresses to wear beneath the puritan plain, severely tailored, and fitted black wool coats and certainly are eye catchers at night or under artificial lights.

While these short beauties are the present rage of fashion, the floor length models have not been neglected. Some of the smartest, the most effective and beautiful costumes of this year's showings touch the floor. And because lace and chiffon net and ribbon have not been banned by the acquisitive priorities dictators, many of the most beguiling and feminine gowns are made of chiffon. Others are of eternally feminine lace and lots of picture book models use the swish of taffeta and yards and yards of net.

So if it is romance and beauty you crave to take you away from a few hours from more grim affairs, see these exciting new fashions ready for what's left of the gala winter season of 1942.

Five new finds are sketched. Others, equally enthralling to any appreciative feminine shopper and masculine escort, are included in the same high fashion showing. Most of them are brilliant examples of what American designers can do under stress and storm of war. For further information call Superior 0200.

Clean Freezing Units.

The freezing units of an electric refrigerator collects food odors, so wash it with care when the refrigerator is defrosted.

• A . . . Soft, thin wool jersey dress in a flattering tone of beige, simply cut and fashioned, the only contrast dozens of small, black tassels. The coat, of water repellent and water resistant black velvet, is lined with quilted satin. • B . . . Another short evening dress, draped in a fluid silhouette. Around the bodice top is swathed a wide band of vivid green, double faced, satin ribbon. Two huge cabbage roses touch off the dress. • C . . . New short evening dress, fitted to follow figure lines, and embroidered with clusters of blue beads. • D . . . Adrian's suave answer to the demand for sophisticated dinner clothes is of dull crepe in an almond green. Gold nailheads are the only contrast. • E . . . Most sensational of the collection, an evening gown which looks like a banked fire, in smoke gray chiffon over gold sequin-embroidered undersheath of crepe.

According to Culbertson

By Ely Culbertson.

[Copyright: 1942: By Ely Culbertson.]

At duplicate bridge, certain hands offer greater problems to the expert than to the average player. When the latter finds himself in a three no trump contract, for example, he is usually well pleased to fulfill the contract and then, if extra tricks are to be garnered, well and good. The expert, however, with the siren call of a top-score always ringing in his ears, is apt to "boot" a supersound contract because he is thinking of extra tricks first. Consider this case:

South, dealer.
Match-point duplicate.
Both sides vulnerable.

NORTH
♠ 9 6 5 2
♥ K J 5
♦ A 9 7 3
♣ Q 10

WEST
♠ Q 7 4
♥ Q 10 6
♦ Q 8 5 4 2
♣ K 7

EAST
♠ 10 8 3
♥ A 9 8 4
♦ J
♣ 8 5 4 3 2

SOUTH
♠ A K J
♥ 7 3 2
♦ K 10 6
♣ A J 9 6

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 no trump	Pass	2 no trump	Pass
3 no trump	Pass	Pass	Pass

West opened the diamond four, which was allowed to ride to the closed hand, declarer picking up East's jack en route. A quick count of tricks disclosed that if the opening lead was honest [and there was no reason to doubt it] there were at least nine tricks in sight—two top spades, four diamonds, and three clubs, even if the club finesse was wrong. Besides these tricks, there was the possibility of an extra spade or two, a heart, and another club with a successful finesse. Hence, from the declarer's point of view it was extremely difficult to decide how many tricks to play for. To use safety measures and thereby possibly come out with no more than nine or ten tricks would, of course, insure the contract, but what good would that do if most of the South players in the room brought home 11 or 12 tricks?

At the second trick South returned the diamond ten. West refused to cover—a good decision inasmuch as it cut down dummy's entries. Now that the diamond situation was cleared up, declarer got really optimistic. He could not afford to lead another diamond at this point because then he would have to cash dummy's fourth diamond and establish West's revealed fifth diamond. South decided to play the hand "wide open" on the theory that both the spade and club finesses might be right. As an effort to enter dummy, he led a heart, and when West played low, put in dummy's jack. East won with the ace and returned the heart nine, forcing the king. The spade finesse was now tried, and to declarer's disgust, it lost to the queen. West made a very good return. He sized up the spade situation and guessed that declarer now had the blank ace-king. If that were the case dummy's fourth spade would be established unless its only quick entry were taken out. To effect that end, West promptly returned a diamond to draw declarer's last card of communication to dummy. The diamond nine, of course, held the trick and the ace was cashed, but now the club finesse was needed for even nine tricks. As may be seen, it failed, and when West took his king, he cashed his fifth diamond and the high heart, thereby setting the contract.

What happened in this hand is the most difficult sort of thing to criticize fairly. Obviously declarer could have taken 10 tricks. But whether or not he should have been satisfied with 10 tricks at match-point duplicate is a question that I should not care to decide.

Bridge Problem.

♣ J 10 7 2

SOUTH
♠ K Q 4

♣ A K 5

The contract is three no trump by South. West leads the six of spades. Can the contract be made against the best defense?

Solution: The contract cannot be made against the best defense. Declarer's best play is to win the first trick in his own hand and try out the diamond break. When West fails, declarer needs two heart tricks for his contract. To get them he must enter dummy twice for finesses. He leads the spade four, intending to finesse dummy's nine, and if West merely follows suit, declarer will have clear sailing. But if West puts in the spade jack, dummy can never be entered more than once, and declarer cannot win two heart tricks.

It is every mother's duty to tell her daughter physical facts. How much better that she learn them from you, rather than from girls her own age. In feminine hygiene, facts may be distorted, or wholly untrue. As a result, many brides use over-strong solutions of acids for the douche which can actually burn, scar and even desensitize delicate tissue.

Today such risks are needless. Science has given womankind a safe—yet amazingly powerful—liquid for the douche, Zonite. So powerful is Zonite, it kills instantly all germs and bacteria with which it comes in contact. Deodorizes—by actually destroying odors, leaving no telltale odor of its own. Protects personal daintiness. Yet! Zonite is non-caustic, non-poisonous, safe for delicate tissues. Over 20,000,000 bottles already bought. Conservative Entertaining Is Best in Wartime

Campus Modes by a Co-ed

By Carolyn Ramey.

At this time of year wardrobes clamor for something with a hint of spring, a simple but dressed up model with an engaging holiday air. I, personally, am going to be singing carols in this dress and hat.

Fabric conservation becomes more than a patriotic gesture in this frock, because it uses an absolute minimum of material to the greatest advantage. I like the slim princess lines, with only deft shirring defining the slim waistline. The heart shaped neckline plays hostess to button-on flowers, more of which conspire to make something really grand of the simple pillbox hat.

Style No. T-8798 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, and 20 and 36, 38, 40, 42, and 44 inch bust measurements. Size 16 requires 3⅛ yards of 39 inch fabric for dress; ⅝ yard for hat; ⅛ yard for flowers.

HOME OWNERS' QUERIES

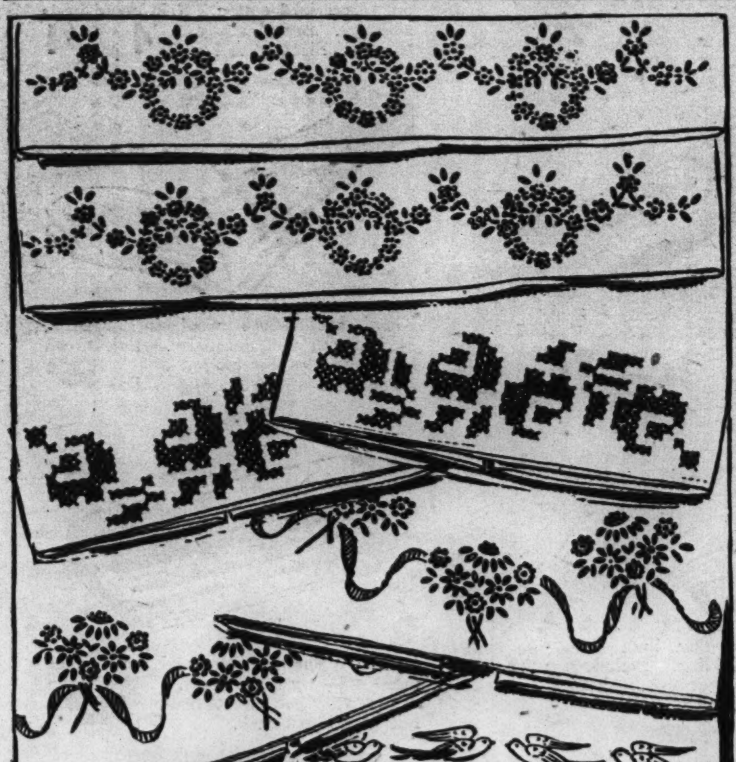
Evanston, Ill.—[To the Home Owners' Editor].—Can a fiber rug be dyed or should we paint it? And how?
HAROLD M.

Answer: You can dye it if you are going to use it inside the house. If you wish it for outdoor use, get house paint, thin with one-fourth turpentine, and rub well into fibers. [Don't just coat it with paint.] Be sure and have rug clean at time of painting.

Vincennes, Ind. — [To the Home Owners' Editor].—Are there effective wood bleaches that will lighten color of woodwork, furniture or floors?
MRS. H. G.

Answer: Definitely, yes. Inquire of expert at your local paint store, or send stamped addressed envelope to this department for manufacturers' names. Such bleaches can be ordered thru paint store or store that carries paints.

Embroidered Pillow Cases



By Nancy Cabot.

Embroidery motifs for pillow cases are in popular demand at this season when we all need pickup work. These four sets of designs afford various types of needlework ranging from cross-stitch to outline and satin stitch. Floral and bird motifs are an accepted choice for pillow cases when one wishes a change from a scalloped and initialed one.

For the hot iron transfer pattern of the four sets of designs for pillow cases, No. 555, send 10 cents in stamps or coin plus 2 cents to cover mailing cost to the Needlework Bureau, Chicago Tribune, 220 Fifth avenue, New York City.

Unpatriotic to Squander Big Sum on Parties

Is charm within your reach? How can you develop a more pleasing personality? These questions and many others about making yourself more attractive to others are answered in the booklet, "Charm and Self-consciousness," by Helen Bartlett, Tribune etiquet editor. On sale at Tribune Public Service offices, 1 South Dearborn street, and Tribune Tower, 435 N. Michigan avenue. Price, 3 cents. Postpaid, 5 cents.

By Helen Bartlett.

Wartime put a very different slant on the social activities of every community of this country. A people worried about the peace and welfare of its country and about the safety of family members who are in the service is not much interested in celebrating this or that occasion with gay parties of a formal sort. Neither is it patriotic to squander large sums of money on these expensive parties, money that would be much better spent on war bonds or some other war effort. After the war is won we can really celebrate.

But until then it is better taste and more becoming to be moderate in our social activities. Social gatherings will continue to gather, of course. And they should. Under the strain of war these diverting opportunities help to bolster the morale. Just so the expenses and the formality are restrained.

Parties should be informal, making it unnecessary to wear formal clothes. Dinner clothes should take care of the dressy evening affairs. That would allow a woman to wear a long skirted dinner dress and the gentleman a dinner jacket.

The same conservatism holds for weddings, too. Particularly is this true when the groom is in the service and wears a uniform. The poor bridegroom, during this emergency, has no dress uniform but has to wear the same one on his wedding day that he wears every other day of the year. It puts him at quite a disadvantage if his attendants in the wedding party wear white tie and tails. It is my personal opinion that a girl who is marrying a man in the service should plan an informal wedding as a kindness to him and as a means of keeping all the details consistent.

This is a personal opinion and not a rule of etiquet, however. If the bride insists on wearing a formal wedding gown and veil [many young brides would be desolated if they were denied this touch of drama, she may do so as long as she keeps it simple. The girl attendants must dress simply, too. And the groom's civilian attendants should wear dinner clothes for an evening wedding, or gray and black striped trousers and plain black or oxford gray sack coat [instead of the cutaway if it is an afternoon ceremony.

Fashions as I See Them

By Judith Cass

The Saturday matinée performances of the Chicago Opera company afford feminine Chicago the opportunity of sallying forth in her most glamorous afternoon clothes to a destination where they will be appreciated. The distinguished audiences which gather to hear grand opera in the afternoon at the Civic Opera house this winter will be gowned in the height of fashion, as usual, judging from the opening Saturday performance. Mrs. Frederic W. Upham and her opera guest, Mrs. Charles E. Yerkes, had luncheon at the Council on Foreign Relations meeting for Joseph C. Grew, former ambassador to Japan, before going to the matinée performance. Mrs. Upham's hat was a smart one of green felt with three little velvet bows across the front, one red, one green, one yellow. Her dress was of green crêpe. Having luncheon together at the Electric club were Mrs. Brode Davis, Mrs. Charles S. Davis, Mrs. Edgar Smith, and Mrs. Frank Dunn of Monticello, who descended to the opera house in time to see the curtain rise. Mrs. Charles Davis' black and green crêpe dress was dramatized by a black and green felt hat. Mrs. Brode Davis chose a handsome gown of green crêpe and brightened the effect with a multicolored flowered hat. Mrs. Matthew McCullough and a large group of ladies came to the opera after luncheon at the Woman's Athletic club, among them Mrs. Thomas Knight, Mrs. John F. L. Curtis, Mrs. Eckhart Williams, Mrs. Edwin Hulburt, Mrs. Olaf N. Tevander, Mrs. George Shuman, Mrs. Leroy A. Goddard, Mrs. Bennett Carrington, Mrs. Arthur Cutten, and Mrs. Allan Clement. Mrs. Clement's opera going frock was of brown crêpe, and on her head was a chic little hat trimmed with autumn leaves. Mrs. McCullough was wearing a wool suit of an interesting green-gray color, and with it a small gray felt hat trimmed with krimmer fur.

Mrs. Frederic W. Upham.

A stunning outfit at the opera matinée was worn by Mrs. Orville J. Taylor. It was a green wool dress trimmed with Russian embroidery, and a black velvet hat. Mrs. Ralph C. Otis' charming chapeau was a black felt saucer trimmed with two loops of fuchsia color, and Mrs. Thomas Hinde chose a becoming little turban of gray feathers which looked particularly well with her dark coat trimmed with a chinchilla fur collar. Mrs. Keith Preston's black velvet hat was trimmed with two roses of velvet, one in a rose shade, the other of dubonnet, to match her crêpe dress. Mrs. Guy Fox was another wearing a green frock, a color that seems to be more popular than ever this fall. Her dress was of reseda green, and her hat of brown felt was trimmed at the front by two little birds with spread wings, one green, the other brown. Her wrap was a mink coat. One of the most effectively dressed women at the council meeting was Mrs. Graham Aldis, whose costume was one of beige, tan, and brown. Her dress and turban were of the darkest color, and the variations were provided by her short jacket of wolf that had been dyed shades of beige and tan.

One of the best looking gray suits that have been seen around in many a day is worn by Mrs. Charles Garfield King. She wore it to the preview of Charles Dana Gibson's exhibition at the Historical society, and looked exceedingly smart. The suit is of wool and consists of a dress and a jacket. The neckline of the bodice is high and ends in a tailored bow of the material, and there is fine detail in the tailoring. With it at the exhibit Mrs. King was wearing a pearl necklace and earrings and a smart black velvet hat. Mrs. Arthur G. Cable, who poured tea at one of the tables set in high gay '90s fashion, brightened a dark skirt and hat with a sulphur yellow blouse and a yellow band on the hat. 1942 clothes were forgotten when guests gathered to admire a collection of 1890 and 1900 gowns on wax figures that are being shown in conjunction with the Gibson exhibit. One of the evening dresses, a luscious creation of Worth worn in 1903 by Miss Marie Rozet, could appear upon today's ballroom floors without seeming too quaint. The bell shaped skirt fell from a slender waist and was edged about the bottom with what looked like eyelet embroidered velvet. More of the velvet formed the bodice, and frothing up from it was chiffon and lace, making a modest neckline, just covering the shoulders. The whole was in off-white, and the body of the frock was heavy silk. A most remarkable dress was Mrs. Emanuel Mandel's white lace creation embroidered all over in black and silver. About the wax figure's neck was a feather boa of white tipped in black, and on the head was a black hat piled high with white plumes. A dress worn by Mrs. Bernard A. Eckhart in 1893 was a forerunner of the 1942 influence that has produced so many dresses draped to one side, the drapery held in place by bows. The gold velvet and lace and blue embroidery that made the dress, and the blue velvet ribbons that formed the bows, would not be fashionable in this year, however.

A FRIEND IN NEED

By Sally Joy Brown.

[Activities of the Sally Joy Brown department are sponsored by Chicago Tribune Charities, Inc.]

We hope that one of our south side readers can come to the aid of the child described in the following letter, sent to me by a case worker in that district:

"Dear Miss Brown: We are writing to request your assistance in obtaining a large, heavy stroller for E. M., a girl 14 years old.

"She has been handicapped since birth by a rare and incurable disease. Her bones are so brittle that she sustains fractures from ordinary bumps. Because the bones of her legs were broken and set so many times, she is now badly crippled and has never been able to walk. It is for this reason that we are asking your assistance in obtaining a stroller for her. Tho she is now 14 years old, she is small and weighs only 59 pounds, so that an ordinary child's stroller would do, altho it must necessarily be sturdy.

"The child's mother is unable to provide a stroller because the family income is very limited. The father is not living and one son supported the family. He is now going into the army, so that source of income will be cut off, for the time being, at least."

The worker will be glad to arrange transportation if some reader has a sturdy stroller to offer.

From a children's agency which cares for youngsters located in all parts of the city and state:

"We always need baby buggies. If your many readers could help us to obtain these for children who are dependent upon our organization for care we would be very grateful. It does not matter in what part of the city the carriages are found, as we will be glad to call for them in any section."

We hope that readers who have buggies which they no longer need will pass them on to this agency which cares for needy and neglected children. The agency will arrange transportation, so if you are able to donate a carriage, write or telephone to this department.

From another agency which strives to provide assistance for victims of cardiac disorders:

"My dear Miss Brown: You have always been so willing to help in the past that when we need aid we just naturally turn to you.

"We have five requests for adult wheel chairs which we are not able to fill, as we have none available at present. We own a number of chairs, but every one of them is now in constant use.

"Do you suppose one of your readers has a chair tucked away in a basement or attic and would be willing to give or loan it to our organization? If necessary, we can arrange to have the chair picked up. Thanks again."

This agency does excellent work for persons of all ages who are afflicted with heart trouble.

From a soldier stationed in the northwest part of the country:

"The men of this company, most of whom are from Chicago, would greatly appreciate a few coat hangers. We are all newly inducted, and have been here only about two weeks. As yet we have been unable to locate hangers, and they would be most useful to us."

The name and address will be supplied upon request.

Color Prints Beautify Rooms

By Claire Winslow.

We'd like to address this article not to the women who can afford to have originals in their homes—oil paintings, water colors, pastels, etchings, etc.—but to those whose budget is slender this year, and who yet feel very keenly the need of beauty in their environment.

For it is possible to achieve excellent results with good substitutes. And we might add, with substitutes of good paintings! True, one can get any number of inexpensive pictures, but the danger here is that they are not good art.

Good reproductions of fine paintings, on the other hand, cost no more [sometimes they cost much less] and will bring the endless satisfaction that always derives from skill and perfection. Nowadays one can easily obtain beautiful colored prints of most of the world famous works of art owned by museums and in great collections.

Now current at the Art Institute is a unique exhibition of great Dutch masters: Rembrandt, Frans Hals, Vermeer, and others, the greatest showing of Dutch paintings ever held in Chicago. Many of the finest examples are from Dutch national collections in Holland, here for safekeeping during the war, and a value of five million dollars has been set on the assemblage. It would be impossible for any but a favored few to hope to own even one of these magnificent canvases, were a single one for sale.

Yet in the reproduction room on the first floor of the institute are a great number of exquisitely colored prints of pictures by these same artists, which are obtainable for from 60 cents to $25. Many of them are priced at $2, $3, and $5, and all are imported. Also, many of the larger are one of a kind and will be impossible to duplicate.

They were gathered together especially for the Dutch Masters' show and prove the point we are trying to make: That it is possible to have really fine pictures in your home at a relatively small cost. The Art institute also sells many colored prints of works in its own permanent collection and these range in price from 15 cents to $18 each. As proofs of the color work must be submitted to the director of fine arts of the institute for okay before any prints are made one is assured of getting the highest grade of reproductions.

There are a number of Renoirs and Cezannes, several Winslow Homers, one of W. Russel Flint's charming water colors, a Gari Melchers, and a number of others in this group, and some are already framed.

Also, there are several stores in Chicago that sell both domestic and European colored prints of paintings. Artists represented are: Audubon, Benson, Bundy, Daumier, Degas, Dufy, Gainsborough, Goya, Hassam, Henri, Homer, Hopner, Inness, Lawrence, Monet, Rembrandt, Renoir, Rivera, Stuart, Vermeer, and many others.

"Selecting, Framing and Hanging Pictures," a booklet by Claire Winslow, answers a number of the most perplexing questions on this subject of wall decoration and will be helpful to the amateur decorator. Gadgets Make Your Household Tasks Simpler

By Angela Petesch.

In the housewares department there is no end to the stream of tricky gadgets that keep sprouting up thru American ingenuity. There seems to be no limit to masterpieces of inventiveness and the cleverness of ideas. These tricks that provide shortcuts, or make the general household or kitchen chores easier, more efficient, and more fun, are sure things to separate us from our two-bitses. None of them are big investments.

To take care of the shopping problem for housewives which has become acute and will be even more so after Dec. 1 [the latest announced date for gas rationing], when private cars with their partly filled gas tanks will have to be saved for more urgent errands and store deliveries will be less frequent and less dependable, there are shopping carts of all shapes and sizes. One we liked in particular, and for the following reasons: Being made of plywood it is particularly light, and therefore easy to push or pull. It has a broad foot which assures its standing upright and not spewing its precious contents over the countryside when left to its own devices. It is tall enough and has a long enough handle to be comfortable for the tall woman. It has a striped soft canvas bag which is tied to the frame and easily removed for washing or turning inside out to brush. And it is small enough to tuck away conveniently in the corner of the pantry or the broom closet between trips to the corner grocery. This turnip trundler is illustrated in an adjoining column.

Such household tasks as washing woodwork, mop boards, floors, windows are facilitated by the glove-sponge combination. It is a canvas glove with a small wrist gantlet to protect the wrist and hand from the water . . . much like a canvas garden glove. This has been covered with a rubberized coating to make it waterproof. It would appear to withstand greater abuse than the fragile rubber gloves which we used for dishwashing and other hands-in-water drudgery. In the palm of this glove is fitted and fastened securely a large rubber sponge. No more chasing the mop rags around the bottom of the scrub pail. It is fastened right to the glove. After saturating the sponge in the soapy water you have only to rub your gloved hand over the surface to be cleaned. And when the woodwork is fresh and spotless wipe it off quickly with a dry cloth. Under $1.

This same rubber glove—only in a larger size to fit a man's hand—with the rubber sponge snuggling in the palm is made for the man who does his own car washing. Directions say to wash just a small portion of the car at a time, such as one side of the hood, and then the fender, and dry each section with a chamois or cloth before going on to the next. Car owners who are not the owners of a hose should find comfort in this glove, with a bucket of clean water on the side.

The old French custom of frying potatoes in deep fat is simplified by a neat little potato cutter. It is nothing more than a metal frame, like a picture frame. Within the frame a fine wire [fine enough to be sharp enough to cut when pressure is applied] is strung back and forth in a criss-cross, making little half inch squares. The peeled potato is placed on the board or table top, the cutting frame laid flat on top. Then as you press downward on the frame the half inch strips of the potato fan out on top. Each potato is uniformly cut by one simple operation. 60 cents.

Fashions . . . . By Angela

Hats make headway these days, mostly skyward. The tendency continues to be tall crowns. And if the crown itself doesn't reach toward the stars there is usually a feather or a bow or a fluff of veiling that creates the same effect.

For glamor and luxury drape yourself in furs. Or just stud your costume with fur accessories like the matching hat and muff of fox illustrated at the top of the adjoining column. Only the high curving brim of the hat is fur trimmed. The crown is a close little skull cap of felt. In addition to fox, this hat and muff can be had in any one of 20 different pelts.

Morocco makes a good headline whether you are talking about hats or the war news from Africa. The next model is a high close turban which fits behind the pompadour, a long looped tassel dangles at the side, and the felt is studded with large French knots of contrasting wool. The hat we sketched was black with an accent of light blue, but you can get it in a wide variety of colors. Under $3.

Sueded fur felt that looks like a fine suede or antelope is used in making the tall turban, sketched third. It is soft and pliable. Comes in black or dark brown. And there's a matching silk jersey drapery that hugs the ears.

Fur felt has a rich depth of texture. It is used in black or brown in making this high crowned postillion. Coq feathers grow out of the top of the crown and flutter down the side. Under $6.

Pompadours must be considered when you are buying a hat. Here is one that fits snugly behind the upward sweep of your hair. It's a little flat felt with felt ribbons tied into a crisp bow. Blobs of chenille dot the veil.

This is the perfect hat to wear with your fur coat. It is winter white and will give life to the dark winter costume. Made of fur felt with a double brim, it is trimmed with a black grosgrain band and black veiling. Under $8.

Here's a Baby Doll and Carriage That Will Delight Girls

As complete a gift for the little girl in your family as you ever saw is the baby doll, completely dressed, with the additional wardrobe of five pieces, AND a collapsible carriage.

The doll is about 12 inches in stature with real eyelashes and eyes that move and a voice that speaks.

The wardrobe consists of an organdy dress in a dainty floral pattern, a flannelette coat and bonnet, a lace trimmed slip, printed cotton rompers, and flannelette sleepers. You have a pink or blue color scheme to choose from.

The carriage is black, made of a leatherette type of material. It is just like the little folding buggy the little girl may have traveled around in.

Crocheted Caps Trimmed for Dressy Appearance

The untrimmed, boyish characteristics of crocheted caps for the young are disappearing. The calot, which was popular because of its flat, bare skull appearance of other seasons, has taken on a strong desire for trimming. Bows, rosettes, and feathers give this comfortable type of headgear a flippant and dressy appearance. Crochet ornamented hat pins are used for fastenings.

Tavern Club Has Party to Honor Navy

By Cousin Eve.

The Tavern club, an eagles' eyrie at 333 North Michigan avenue, is having a series of Sunday breakfasts. Last Sunday's, in honor of the American navy, was the first, and there was a full house for the dejeuner and the films of Pacific sea battles following.

The Tavern club president, John R. Winterbotham, one of Chicago's best liked men, is carrying on the tradition of this unique organization where the literati mingle fraternally with business, the arts, and sport. The Tavern preens itself on a wonderful cuisine, good service, and a cozy atmosphere entirely masculine, where ladies are permitted only evenings, Sundays, and holidays. The club's configuration in the high tower is such that none of its rooms is large yet they are adequate for the membership. There is a delightful terrace facing west for outdoor dining in mild weather, which, in summer, is the coolest place in town. I don't remember whether it was John Root or Andrew Rebori, or a combine, who built the great window in the north wall of the lounge but Chicago's towers and lovely blue lakescape by day and night's spangled fabric are a perennial mural, need no interior decorator.

The buffet breakfast tables stood in the long corridor heaped high with fruits, hot meat pies, cold turkey, and all sorts of good food. A long line formed and in it were navy officers headed by Capt. B. B. Wygant of Thorne hall, and four young sailors, back from the Solomon Islands only six days. One of these lads, W. W. Lindstrom, an air mechanic, had had four ships shot out from under him. Each had been decorated—you can imagine for what heroic conduct in battle! These boys came from all over the country and were sent home for advance study in aviation.

The great specialty at these Sunday breakfasts is hotcakes with sausage and there is a big waffle iron working overtime. After chow Mr. and Mrs. Winterbotham started the trek to the upstairs lounge where the crowd was dense when the magnificent films were shown. Capt. Douglas Johnson announced that they would be in four parts—first "Anchors Aweigh"—the battleships setting out in a thrilling parade for the far east. Ther a closeup of our plane carriers and naval units passing thru the Panama canal. Next pictures of the Midway Island and Coral Sea battles with the sinking of one of our plane carriers, and finally various phases of the present long drawn struggle in the Solomons.

The touching part—that left one reduced to pulp—were the sailors from the Solomons and their boyish stories of what it was like. Cecil Shaw had never known a buddy to leave a battle station. Another, a boy named Lindstrom, was thrilled by the leadership of Vice Adm. W. F. Halsey and had fought four major sea battles under him.

A third said the most terrible moment of his life was returning from a flight to find the plane carrier afire, the sea full of his mates trying to avoid burning oil—his own ammunition and gas gone. The plane turned back and glided down upon a desert island. Another remembered the horror of the explosions—magazines and gas tanks bursting, and all the boys yearned to get back to the job in the Pacific and not to abandon their buddies.

• • •

But all the heroism isn't at sea. Hardly a woman I know who hasn't sons or a husband in our fighting forces. Mostly mothers know only that their boys are east or west, and yet go about their duties serenely—but with what anguish in the long watches of the night.

"Thousands at his bidding speed
And post o'er land and ocean without rest;
They also serve who only stand and wait."

Courtships and weddings go merrily on, and today Arthur H. Bunker of New York is announcing the engagement of his only daughter, Adele Enloe, to James Aubry Hynes, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dibrell Pryor Hynes of Evanston. The young Adele is one of the most beautiful girls I know—tall, willowy brunette, almost a counterpart of her mother, Mme. Augusto Rosso, wife of Ambassador Rosso. James Hynes will soon be graduated from Tower Hall as an ensign in the navy. Christmas eve is the date of the graduation exercises, and the wedding will follow shortly after.

MARRIED ON OCTOBER 24

Mrs. Donald Hough, who is the former Margaret Kelly, and the son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hough of Belle Plaine avenue, were married on Oct. 24 in St. Giles' church, Oak Park. The bride is the daughter of Lieut. Thomas A. Kelly of the state's attorney's office and Mrs. Kelly of North Mayfield avenue.

[Koehne Photo.]

Miss Bunker has chosen an exceptionally good looking, hard working young man—one whose Virginia ancestry is evident in his slim, towering physique and handsome features. The bride-to-be is staying with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. George Lawrence Wilkinson, in Evanston.

Frances Rosso's Clipper letters come regularly from Florence, where she and the ambassador have a villa, a very elegant and delightful one, in this most beautiful of all hill towns. After four years at Moscow the Rossos are enjoying a well deserved rest. Mme. Rosso came home to Chicago from Russia in the spring of 1941, bringing a fund of ready cash from women in the diplomatic circle to buy clothes for them—for they were out of everything. The Italian ambassadoress spent most of her vacation filling orders, according to size and shape, until she had 12 trunks full of finery. With these she set out for Russia, via Japan, China, and Siberia, and had arrived in Tokio when suddenly Hitler invaded Russia. Rosso had to fly to Italy by plane with his staff, and Mme. Rosso was obliged to return to America with all the trunks of clothes, also her own luggage, plus an Italian lady sent out to meet and travel with her.

Mme. Rosso writes cheerfully of Florentine life, and of practically sitting on top of the logs in their living room. The houses are desperately cold and damp, being so old, and with thick stone walls and marble floors.

Adele Bunker is one of the few girls who refused to make her debut last season in Washington, finding it rather footless in wartime, with dancing partners gone and all.

On Tuesday afternoon the atmosphere was definitely Dutch at the Art institute. Daniel Catton Rich had contrived a notable setting, almost classic, for the reception of the Dutch ambassador, Alexander Loudon, and Mrs. Loudon, and the opening of the Dutch exhibition of old masters. A magnificent Rembrandt and the American and Dutch flags were the decor for the ceremony of dedication which took place in the area between the sweep of the two grand staircases. Officials of the institute, headed by Chauncey McCormick with Charles Worcester and Mr. Rich, were grouped with Ambassador Loudon, Gen. L. H. Van Oyen of the Dutch air forces, and Maj. W. Th. Carp of the Dutch army in Canada, and Consul Jan Noest. Back of them was the a cappella choir in uniform, and there was a prelude of organ music.

Opposite and facing these men across the rotunda was Mrs. Loudon, a tall, slim blonde with patrician features, who had lunched with Mrs. R. T. Crane, and came in with her and Mrs. Noest, Mrs. Walter Brewster, Mrs. Philip Miller, Mrs. Chauncey McCormick, and several others.

Back of this group were a dozen strapping Dutch girls of the Queen Wilhelmina fund in the lace caps and aprons and big gold ornaments of Holland. And still in the reserved area various ladies of our society—Mrs. Frank Hibbard, Mrs. John Chapman, Mrs. Henriques Crawford, Mrs. Charles Renshaw, Mrs. John P. Cohane, Mrs. Byron Harvey, Mrs. Fletcher Durbin, Mrs. Silas Strawn, Mrs. Frank Mulford, Mrs. Charles Goodspeed in chic blue-gray uniform, and various of her young cohorts of the American Woman Volunteers.

The ceremony lasted a half hour and included short speeches by the ambassador, Adm. G. W. Stoeve, the several military men, in good English, and Chauncey McCormick, who also read a very charming letter from Princess Juliana.

An interesting political note was sounded by the ambassador apropos his future queen and her absence from Chicago at the moment—there was nothing more galling to Berlin than another heir to the House of Orange, said the Dutch envoy.

After the dedication, some of the guests rushed to the reception, and others crowded forward in a mass to view the old masters. There was a long line waiting to meet Dr. and Mrs. Loudon who were standing at one side with Mrs. McCormick, Dr. Rich and Jan and Mrs. Noest—when finally we achieved the corner gallery where the reception was held.

On Thursday afternoon from 6 to 8 the Dutch consul and Mrs. Noest had a "cocktail" in honor of the Loudons, when their friends met the delightful couple in a more intimate way. The Noests have a pretty house in Astor street, with many souvenirs of their residence in Brazil—including two remarkable portraits of Mrs. Noest by the celebrated Brazilian painter, Portinari.

Mr. and Mrs. Potter Palmer were called away from Chicago at the time of this important ceremonial by the death of an aunt, the widow of Judge Lockwood Honore—"Peg Honore" they used to call her. Mrs. Honore had one daughter, Bertha, named after the late reigning social queen of Chicago, Mrs. Potter Palmer, a sister of Judge Honore. Bertha married Warren Ripple and is herself a widow now, and living in a West Virginia hunting center, in a nice old house which she shared with her mother, Mrs. Honore. They had an agreeable life of the outdoor English horsey kind—and the community itself is even more attractive than the Virginia horse regions, which for some reason they say are greatly changed—especially the ownership of the houses. It's a long distance between estates down Middleburg way, and I know one family who moved in with all their van loads, and in two months had moved out again from sheer loneliness. They were in no sense horse loving people and total misfits for that country.

Settled there very happily is Eleanor Durbin Porter, who belongs to the horsey group who spend long days hunting. Also a new member of that set is young Martha Moon, who stayed at the Porter house while she was moving her Lake Forest furniture into her new abode in the valley. Peter Moon is training nearby—in Quantico, I believe—and Prentice Porter has been in service on the Pacific since last February.

Ambassador Joseph Grew, formerly of Boston, was by far the greatest magnet the council on foreign relations has yet picked for its fastidious membership. Two thousand sat down that day to bouchées à la Reine served in the Palmer House ballroom. The table of honor was very imposing with Mrs. William J. Calhoun on President Woodward's right and Mrs. Paul Welling on Mr. Grew's left and Mr. and Mrs. William McC. Blair and Russell Tyson among those in the seats of the mighty. Mrs. Woodward was there for the first time as "first lady."

Guests that day came bouncing in as if they were going to a Thanksgiving football game and might miss something. Every important family in Chicago was represented and many from Great Lakes. Mrs. John Downes was present, also Capt. and Mrs. Wolleson and Capt. and Mrs. B. B. Wygant and other staff officers and their wives. Some of these were invited later that day to meet Mr. Grew at the Barrett Wendells, in Astor street; they also had seats down in front near the speaker. Mrs. Stanley McCormick was there, Mrs. R. T. Crane, Mrs. A. H. Patterson, Mrs. Howard Phillips, Robert and Mrs. Dunham, Miss Elizabeth McCormick, Mrs. P. A. Valentine, Mrs. Edmund Russell, Mrs. Robert Peck, Mrs. J. H. Lewis, Mrs. Donald McPherson, Lady Stamp, Mrs. Henry Dawes, Mrs. John A. Carpenter, Chauncey McCormick, in short tout Chicago. Mr. Grew's set speech was a historical résumé of Japan. At the end he spoke again for a half hour entirely off the record, mincing no words about Japan, as he had known the Nipponese during 10 years in Tokio and what was to be expected of them. The council members had their money's worth that day.

When Chicago Was Young

By Herma Clark

Letters from Martha Freeman Esmond to her friend Julia Boyd of New York.

Chicago, Nov. 15, 1894.

Dear Julia—Last evening I had a real thrill, when I attended a banquet of the Two Million club at the Lexington hotel, Michigan avenue and 22d street. Why a thrill, do you ask? I'll tell you. It was the very first banquet in Chicago, so it is said, at which ladies were asked on equal terms with the gentlemen—that is, as individuals, not as wives of the diners. This recognition was, I am sure, a result of the many votes cast by women on Nov. 6, for trustee of the University of Illinois. Many were the fine toilettes displayed by the feminine banqueters, for they wanted to make a good impression and be invited again. I wore a new gown made by Madame Caroline. I had seen one made for young Mrs. Erich Gerstenberg and I asked Mrs. Gerstenberg if she minded the dressmaker's using the same design on my new gown. She graciously assented, and I feel that it has added to the beauty of the costume, a fawn-color broadcloth, light and warm.

Anthony Tomaso.

The Two Million club is the creation of Robert C. Givins, its president, who says it was formed to estimate the city's population and to promote its interests. Extravagant praise of Chicago is always the order of the day at such meetings, and there was much of it on this occasion, but there were good, serious talks, too. The Rev. Ernest M. Stires, popular rector of Grace Episcopal church, delighted the audience, as did Judge John Barton Payne, whose subject was "Women at the Polls." He won applause by the prophecy that women would soon have full suffrage. "They have broken thru the outworks," he said, "and they will now storm the citadel." And I believe he is right. Frank O. Lowden, one of Chicago's brilliant young lawyers, contributed what Will and I thought was more valuable than boasts about Chicago's size, when he lamented the apathy of the average citizen about elections. "The citizen looks without tremor," he said, "into the mouth of the cannon, but he will not meet the professional thug at the polls. The result is inevitable. We are governed, not by the people, but by the crooked politicians, how badly, let the great cities of America attest."

On Thursday evening, we took Sandy and Martha Jr. to the Union League club where we like to go for the weekly dinner recently inaugurated there. It has become very popular, for Albert E. Glennie, famous for his management of the club, knows how to create a warm and friendly atmosphere so that diners remain to visit after eating. A dainty menu card is provided, which most of us like to keep as a souvenir and Tomaso's mandolin orchestra always plays, the music issuing from behind a screen of palms like a summer breeze, or the flutter of a humming bird's wings. O, yes, the flutter of a humming bird's wings is the right simile for this delicate music. Will was so pleased with the program tonight, especially with the "Union League Polka," composed for the occasion by Anthony Tomaso, the leader, that he brought him to speak to us.

Signor Tomaso is a handsome young fellow, with the graceful bearing and suave manners of the born Latin. He surprised us by telling us that his orchestra originally played the violin. A band leader who heard them in Petoskey wanted them to come to Minneapolis for the opening of a summer hotel, but needed mandolin players, so these musical brothers [there are five of them in the orchestra] quickly learned that instrument. "Ever since, we play only the mandolin," he added.

Tomaso's orchestra is all the rage. It has played for two presidents, Harrison and Cleveland. Our charity ball isn't complete without it. Johnny Hand plays for the dances, but Tomaso for the promenade. And all the prominent families have him for their parties—the Armours, Swifts, Cudahys, Fields, and so on. He is giving lessons to young Joe Cudahy, he told us, and he played for Ethel Field's wedding. Mrs. Potter Palmer likes to have him dress in Neapolitan costume, when he plays at her house, he says.

Then Will, who likes to recognize those who work behind the scenes brought up Mr. Glennie himself and a young fellow named John Enright, his assistant, for a little chat. And when we went home, we felt we had had an unusually nice time. With love. Ever your devoted

MARTHA FREEMAN ESMOND.

FOOT NOTES.

Signor Anthony Tomaso, whose orchestra delighted Chicagoans of the Nineties and later, lives with his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Emmet J. Cleary, at 1259 North Shore avenue. His famous orchestra played for Theodore Roosevelt and for McKinley, so that his record includes four Presidents of the United States, instead of the two reported as having heard him, in 1894.

The Charles Dana Gibson Exhibit.

Miss Carolyn D. Tyler, Chicago, writes: "The Charles Dana Gibson exhibition at the Chicago Historical society, augmented by the collection of gowns and hats of the period, brings Martha Esmond to almost living reality, and one wonders which ensemble she might have worn. How well I remember the 12 inch hat pins needed to anchor the plateaus and mountains of plumes to our pompadours, reinforced, tho they were, by 'rats'! The portraits and landscapes in the picture gallery lead us from that earlier, gracious period, when garlands of smilax draped the tea table, and candles were delicately shaded, to the streamlined present, but there is no break in the quality of Charles Dana Gibson's work thruout the years. . . . Much fun has been poked at the 'Gay Nineties,' but this collection shows us its charm. I am sure Martha Esmond would feel at home among the delightful people pictured in the exhibit."

[Editor's Note: Readers of this column will particularly love this exhibit, which will be open till Dec. 6.]

Founder, Author to Be Honored by Conference

By Irene Steyskal.

No more distinguishing characteristic does the conference of club presidents and program chairmen have than that of the graceful gesture which comes into play again this week with the publication of Margueritte Harmon Bro's new book on the conference, "Thursday at Ten."

Tuesday afternoon the members and invited guests will gather at the home of Mrs. Charles R. Walgreen, 4441 Drexel boulevard, for a tea in compliment to the author and to Mrs. Charles S. Clark, founder president of the conference which last spring celebrated its silver jubilee.

Mrs. Bro's book was completed for the 25th anniversary, but printing problems due to war conditions delayed publication.

It was the increasing number of inquiries from women's clubs "as far afield as Buenos Aires and Sidney" for the blueprint of the unique "talent clearing house," which the conference is, that induced the writing of "Thursday at Ten," Mrs. Bro explains.

• • •

It was inevitable, she points out, that the story of the conference also should be the story of Mrs. Clark, for the members of the conference board were unanimously agreed that the requests could not be answered adequately by anything short of a biography of the woman who has been the president and "guiding spirit" thruout its 25 years.

That Mrs. Bro was as completely captivated by Mrs. Clark's personality as the conference president's associates is evident in the portrait she has painted in her pages.

In one chapter, Mrs. Bro explains the simple mechanics of the conference, which is exactly what its name implies. Sixteen hundred women, present or past presidents and program chairmen of women's clubs, federated and nonfederated, coming from the Greater Chicago area, Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana, and Illinois, meet together on Thursday mornings [hence, the book's title] in Fullerton hall of the Art institute "in order to see, hear and evaluate samplings of the best available program talent before they sign on the talent for appearance before their own clubs.

"The conference," writes Mrs. Bro, "is a simple and exceedingly reliable piece of machinery run on high test spirit by a resilient set of rules. In a quarter century the machinery has never broken down or creaked audibly. Around a hundred thousand dollars has passed thru the treasurer's books on its way to many destinations, scores of sound and worthy causes have been given a boost, and close to 10,000 artists have met more than 20,000 club presidents and program chairmen to their mutual edification and glee." So much for the machinery.

If the early chapters of the chronicle indicate that Mrs. Bro might have profited from the excellent coaching of the auditions committees, whose gallant work in priming the artists for their conference appearances she so gaily describes [for her straining at the light, humorous touch has produced frequent duds], she eventually sweeps into an account of personalities and anecdotes worthy of the story she is relating.

Many outside club circles will delight in unforgettable thumbnail portraits of the great and near great who have had their moments upon the conference stage—Caruso, Abbe Dimnet, Julian Arnold, Charles Wakefield Cadman, Sir Wilfred Grenfell, Eunice Tietjens, Carl Sandburg, Frederick Stock, Edgar Lee Masters, Gutzon Borglum, Katherine Cornell, Maurice Evans, Flora Robson, Eugenie Leontovich, Ruth Byron Owen, and most unforgettable of all, Carrie Jacobs Bond, and Edwin Markham.

ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCED

Miss Renee Dorothy Mendelsohn's engagement to Pvt. First Class Thomas Goodkind has been announced by her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Jacob Mendelsohn of Lake Shore drive. Miss Mendelsohn is a graduate of Northwestern university. Her fiance, a graduate of the University of Michigan, is in the officers' training school of the United States Marine corps at Quantico, Va. His parents are Mrs. Harold Lachman of Highland Park and Harold Goodkind of New York.

Tucson May Be the Winter Tennis Capital

TUCSON, ARIZ. It looks as if Tucson might become the winter tennis capital of the United States; 107 players competed in the 30th annual southwestern tennis tournament which wound up here last week. Most of the honors went to the fabulous Falkenburgs, brothers of handsome Jinx. Tom, the elder, has moved to Tucson where he will continue his schooling both on and off the courts, and Bob, national junior singles champion, will join him shortly. Both were so pleased with their reception here, the climate, and opportunities to play tennis, that they decided to establish themselves here for the season.

Tonight's will be the final performance of the Manhattan Players' production of "Arsenic and Old Lace" at the Temple of Music and Art. Oscar Colcaire, formerly of Chicago, where he was associated with the Chicago Civic opera, plays a minor rôle with distinction. Don De Jaeger and Harry Young of Grand Rapids, Mich., and Pauline De Crocker of Kalamazoo are other middle westerners in the cast. Early next month the Tucson Little theater, the president of which is Homer Lininger, a former Evanstonian, will present "Here Comes Mr. Jordan." The Rev. Richard A. Dawson, another former Evanstonian, is cast for the rôle of Mr. Jordan in this forthcoming production.

Guest ranches near the old Pueblo are doing a better fall business than usual. Out at the Sign of the Wild Horse, on Picture Rocks road, Richard M. Lamport of Chicago and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Carroll of suburban Beverly Hills are riding cayuses across the sun drenched desert and into the foothills beyond. The Carrolls will be here a fortnight more, and Mr. Lamport will remain until mid-December. Recent arrivals at Silver Bell ranch include Mr. and Mrs. Edward Gartz of Chicago, Mrs. John Metcalfe and Mrs. Raymond Durham, both of Winnetka. Nelson Hartwick of Chicago is a faithful equestrian at the Desert Grove ranch on Grant road. Desert Grove, formerly the Conrad ranch, is this year under the direction of Frederick Lee, who operates a popular Greenwich, Conn., beach club in the summer time.

Social secretary at Desert Willow ranch on Tanque Verde road this year is Mrs. William J. Murray, formerly of Chicago. Mrs. Junis Richard Mulvey of Arlington Heights arrived there this week to spend the season, accompanied by her daughters, Susan and Mary Elizabeth, and her infant daughter, Julie. Susan and Mary Elizabeth are riding double on "White Cloud," exploring the lower reaches of Sabino canyon and the desert surrounding the Willow oasis which is to be their winter home. Mr. and Mrs. Carl H. Lutterloh of the north side have been horseback riding from their headquarters at Zed Francis' Picture Rocks ranch; they left yesterday for El Paso and will return home next week.

The Pepper Tree inn, near the University of Arizona campus, is host to August Dolan of Chicago; and among recent arrivals at Christopher square is Mrs. Orvis T. Henkle of Chicago. Mrs. Henkle, who had planned an automobile trip to Mexico this week with another Chicagoan, Mrs. Everett Easton, wintering at her home in the Tucson mountains, has postponed the trip due to the temporary incapacity of Mrs. Easton's automobile. They hope to take the trip sometime this week, accompanied by Mrs. E. Clyde Schryver of Chicago, a guest of the North Gate inn. They plan, in the course of their journey, to visit the Buel Hutchinsons at the Little Outfit school near Patagonia. The Hutchinsons are also formerly of the south side.

Program Will Honor Memory of Dr. DeLee

Former patients, associates, and friends of the late Dr. Joseph B. De Lee will meet with the Mothers' aid of the Chicago Lying-In hospital in Mandel hall at the University of Chicago tomorrow night to commemorate the life and achievement of the distinguished physician. President Robert M. Hutchins of the university, Dr. Morris Fishbein, and Dr. M. Edward Davis will speak. Dr. Davis is chairman of a $100,000 Joseph B. De Lee memorial trust fund which is being raised to provide fellowships at Lying-In hospital for research in obstetrics and gynecology.

The aid has contributed $20,000 to the fund. It is anticipated that total contributions will have reached the $50,000 mark before the memorial progam.

With Christmas near, the Illinois Children's Home and Aid society has begun its Santa Claus helpers' task of purchasing gifts for each of the 1,400 dependent children whom the society has placed in foster homes.

More than 50 case workers are at the task of getting the preference of each child in regard to his or her Christmas gift. Each worker, when she has contacted the youngsters on her list, turns in the selections of her charges. Mrs. Philip S. Conrad is in charge of the completed lists. Boys and girls have ordered hundreds of dolls, mechanical toys, sleds, games, doll carriages, and other toys. By Christmas morning each of the gifts will be gayly wrapped, labeled, and ready for delivery to the child for whom it was selected. The gifts are provided by volunteer contributions to the society's Christmas fund. Mrs. Jacob Baur is chairman of the woman's board.

The Infants' aid, which maintains the Michael Reese premature station, will sponsor a program of professional entertainment tomorrow evening in the Hamilton hotel. The show, which will be followed by dancing, will benefit the organization's community hospital work.

Women in War Work

By Kate Massee

The opening of women's national war bond week today has more than ordinary interest for Mrs. Charles S. Dewey, wife of Congressman Dewey. In World War I. Mrs. Dewey purchased for her youngest child, little Peter Dewey, the first Liberty loan bond sold in Cook county. Yesterday,

Then—Mrs. Charles S. Dewey, holding son, A. Peter Dewey, now a lieutenant in the ferry command. The baby is holding the first Liberty loan bond sold in Cook county in 1917. Peter's father, Congressman Dewey, was in the navy at that time.

just before leaving for Washington to join Rep. Dewey, she bought the first bond to be sold in the week's campaign.

The executive committee of the women's division, Chicago and Cook county war savings staff, United States treasury, today launches a full program to establish a new record for Chicago in the sale of war savings bonds and stamps. Under the direction of Mrs. Walter B. Wolf, chairman of the women's division, preparations have been under way for weeks, with every department of the staff contributing its part.

Pastors of churches in the Chicago area will announce the drive's purpose today, and from then on every hour of each day will be busy ones for those engaged in the program.

Members of the women's committee will speak over the radio daily at the treasury center, and will appear elsewhere at times and places to be announced later. Classes have been held to instruct those women who will be qualified to handle applications for war savings bonds, and for speakers to cover daily meetings in all parts of Cook county. Booth committees already operating also have had special instructions to be prepared for the heavy buying of bonds and stamps anticipated during the week.

Tomorrow's campaign is in charge of Mrs. Thomas J. Fleming, chairman of retail stores for bond week, and of the committee which will have war stamp saleswomen on hand to try to sell extra stamps to every one entering a store. Employés will wear armbands reminding customers that purchasing bonds and stamps comes first in holiday buying. As part of the day's program, Marshall Field and company will have a fashion show at 3 o'clock in the walnut room, and Mandel's will have an evening show for business and professional women.

Five hundred club presidents have been invited to report war savings sales made thru their individual organizations on Tuesday, club day, at 2:30 o'clock at the Chicago Woman's club, 72 East 11th street. Mrs. Jacob Baur is war bond chairman for the women's clubs. The speaker will be Mrs. Charles Gates of Denver, Colo. Mrs. Gates saw the bombing at Pearl Harbor, and she will give an eyewitness story of the scene. She first came to Chicago as the guest of the women's division of the war savings staff last spring, and she is returning at the request of those who did not hear her then.

Theaters and movies will give special attention to the campaign on their day—Wednesday. Thursday, Thanksgiving, will be home day, and no special effort has been planned. There will be radio appeals, however.

Mrs. Leo Cummings, assisted by the American Legion auxiliary, will supervise activities on Friday, stamp tag day. Stamps will be sold on every street corner. Theaters and movies will have the day again on Saturday which will also be the date for special parties, teas, luncheons, and dinners.

If women are going to take men's places they should also learn a few of men's rules for working, one woman personnel director of a Chicago industry thinks. She writes that her company is employing women on shop jobs for the first time. She adds that the women have an aptitude for the work, appear to like it, and are satisfactory—but . . . Criticism No. 1 is that the women are not wearing sufficiently warm clothing under the coveralls the company provides. Chillier weather means more colds. Colds mean poorer work on the job or loss of time altogether.

When the women were first employed in the plant some of them wore only the scantiest underwear beneath the coveralls. Now a few have been converted to wearing wool slacks underneath. Shops are only partially heated. Men workers have always worn honest to goodness

Now—Mrs. Dewey purchasing from Mrs. Orville Cost the first war bond to be sold in an intensive program planned for Women's National War Bond week, starting today, and sponsored by the women's division, Chicago and Cook county war savings staff, United States treasury.

underwear—cotton knit, fleece lined, or wool. They also wear heavy socks. And they keep moving.

A little heavier covering for feet is wise for two reasons: it helps to keep out cold from shop floors and afford protection from possible chafing from heavy safety shoes.

In entering industry, women are often assuming much harder physical work than they have ever done before. They can only succeed in maintaining production on the home front by keeping on the job and keeping well. It may not be nifty, our correspondent informs us, but underwear with long legs and sleeves is most comfortable under coveralls.

Chicago Catholic University Club to Hold Devotions

On the ecclesiastical calendar the season of Advent, a period of spiritual preparation for Christmas, begins next Sunday, and members of the Chicago Catholic University club plan to gather at St. Vitus church, 1818 South Paulina street, for a "day of recollection." The Rev. Gregory O'Brien of the Servite order will be the celebrant at a 9 o'clock mass, opening the special devotions, and will conduct conferences thruout the day.

With accommodations limited, the committee has requested that reservations be made before Wednesday. Arrangements are being made for breakfast after mass and a noon luncheon. Dr. Robert Heger-Goetzl, vice president of the club, is arrangements chairman and Mrs. Heger-Goetzl, Mr. and Mrs. John J. Farrell, Henry Robison, Miss Georgette Thoss, and Miss Mary Leyden are the assisting members of his committee.

Three Current Art Exhibits Outstanding

By Eleanor Jewett.

(Picture on page 1, roto.)

New exhibitions apparently are blossoming on every hand, tho not many of them throw Chicago's three important current November shows into the shade. The three exhibitions which have been on view since the first of the month, and each of which is too fine for any lover of good pictures to neglect, are, of course, the exhibit at the Chicago Galleries association, 215 North Michigan avenue, where Frank Myers, Dirk Smit, and Shirley Friend are represented; the Charles Dana Gibson stunning retrospective show at the Chicago Historical society, and the charming miniature etchings show, by members of the Chicago Society of Etchers, in the Club Woman's bureau, Mandel Brothers.

The most imposing of the new exhibits is that of the Dutch Masters at the Art institute. The exhibition opened last Tuesday and will continue to Dec. 16. We found most likable two beautiful still life paintings, one of peaches and grapes by Abraham van Beyers, and the other of a jam jar, a lemon and a mounted shell [how little these cold words hint of the beauty of the workmanship, composition, and treatment!] by William Kalff; two portraits of Frans Hals, "Nicolaes van der Meer" and "Cornelia van der Meer," and his laughing "Merry Lute Player; the piquant "Terrace" by H. van der Burch; the fine "Woman Selling Fish" by A. van Ostade, and Rembrandt's striking "Christ with Folded Arms."

The exhibition is by no means as beautiful as that of the Italian masterpieces, an event at the Art institute a few years ago, but it is solid, and has behind it the merit which time gives to most of its survivals. The collection is valued at $5,000,000, which is a large sum even in this day of fantastic figures, and many of the canvases are refugees for the duration from museums in Holland, both of which facts increase its interest.

A most unattractive show is now hanging in the Room of Chicago Art at the Art institute. There are huge, raspberry tinted females by Salcia Bahnc [who herself is slight and tiny, making her penchant for painting overweight women all the more curious] and stiff and hackneyed modern compositions by Julio de Diego. The exhibit is one of those unfortunate affairs that it is better to miss than to see, unless you enjoy being agonized.

• • •

In an adjoining gallery are water colors and drawings by men in various branches of the armed forces. Much of the work is nonprofessional, but all of it is worth seeing. The soldier's point of view in this war so far is shown clearly and with humor.

• • •

An exhibit of strong and colorful water colors by Charles W. Schonne, a young Chicago artist, is hanging in the Paul Theobald gallery, 5 North Wabash avenue.

Salvatore Salla, who was painter in chief to the Chicago Opera company for several years and had a studio in the Civic Opera house, has now a most delightful studio at 745½ Rush street. The touch of blue to his railings outside lights up the whole block. Mr. Salla has recently started a class in painting and has a number of promising pupils. His studio is large enough to make an attractive and well lighted gallery and he plans in the near future to give an exhibit of his students' work. Later he will show the paintings and drawings of other gifted Chicago artists. He himself has a portfolio of beautiful sketches from Gloucester and several portraits on view, one of the most effective is the portrait of a man, just the head, the result of an hour's work.

Mr. Salla is holding his classes three evenings a week and on Sunday mornings. He has both advanced and beginning students.

The 53d annual exhibition of the Chicago Society of Artists opened Nov. 14 in the Findlay galleries to continue thru Dec. 1. This is always one of the most varied and colorful of the fall shows. There are paintings, water colors, prints, and sculpture on view. For the most part the work is in the modern vein and there are a number of attractive pieces. Rowena Fry is one of the artists who invariably contributes something decorative and animated in the field of water color.

• • •

The Chicago Woman's Aid, 185 North Wabash avenue, has opened an exhibition of recent paintings by two of Chicago's veteran and best loved painters, Adam Emory Albright and Frank G. Peyraud. Both men started their painting careers 60 years ago, but their palettes are as bright, their vision as keen, their taste as impeccable as in their young manhood. They easily give competition today to many a painter who can number his years at half theirs. The exhibition is well worth seeing. Mr. Peyraud has a number of beautiful landscapes and Mr. Albright a group of his sensitive and lovely studies of children. The exhibit is being held in connection with the 60th anniversary of the club.

The Benjamin galleries, 154 East Superior street, present a first exhibition of paintings in enamels and casein. The galleries are open Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday from 11 o'clock to 6 o'clock, and Monday and Wednesday evenings from 8 to 10.

• • •

The Musarts club of Chicago, 70 north side women interested in art, music, and literature, is holding its annual fall exhibit in the tea room galleries, Mandel Brothers. The exhibiting artists are Fannie Fremmel, June Cannon Brown, Lucile Leighton, and Jane Steiner.

• • •

J. W. Young, 424 South Michigan avenue, opened last Wednesday an exhibit of water colors by Mrs. M. Robert Deo of Escanaba, Mich. It will continue one week.

The annual exhibition and bidding sale of the Palette and Chisel academy, 1012 North Dearborn street, is one of the intriguing exhibits not to be missed this month. The paintings will hang to Dec. 4 and the exhibit will come to an end, as usual, with an auction. This is one artists' affair that the public would do well to patronize. It is amusing and exciting and often one carries home a most decorative and delightful picture as the result of a few minutes of exciting hagging. James Topping, Oskar Gross, Arnold E. Turtle, Maurice Greenberg, Leo Marzolo, C. Curry Bohm, J. Jeffery Grant, Othmar Hoffler, and Holger Jensen are among the artists whose paintings make up this unusual show. No one who enjoys good painting should miss it.

The Art institute school announces the opening of an exhibition of modern designs, the work of instructors of the school, Kurt Ekdahl and George Mendenhall. New York, Nov. 21st. Almost a year since December 7th,—with Thanksgiving bringing a bountiful "harvesting"! True, your second cup of coffee may be missing, . . . the sugar bowl is often low, . . . we are forced to walk more, . . . you may face a meatless day, . . . some of our cherished fashions are hard to find. But each civilian sacrifice is helping to give people in all corners of the globe the hope of a real and permanent Thanksgiving. So let's rejoice on Thursday, make it a full-hearted day of thanks for every sacrifice we're enabled to make! And remember to invest only in BUY-LINES that will give you real service,—here are two I especially recommend . .

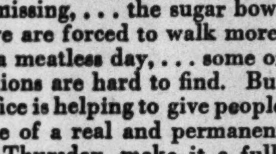
Pilgrims had to make their own soap—today all we have to say is SWAN—and there's a pure white floating soap "at your service!" There's no limit to the soap-tasks SWAN performs; it's pure as castile for baby's bath and your complexion, a hearty "latherer" to please the men in your family, and a sudsin' whiz for fine laundering, washing dishes and cleaning woodwork! You'd imagine that all these SWAN services would cost a lot, but listen to this! SWAN'S thriftier than easy-to-waste package soap. And it gives more soap per penny than any leading toilet soap tested —costs only a few cents for the large size bar that snaps easily into two smaller cakes.



Between Thanksgiving and Christmas we're gayer than at other times of the year . . . so heed my advice about AMOLIN deodorizing protection! Palm Beach Regulars Are Doing KP Duty

By Helen Van Hoy Smith.

PALM BEACH FLA.

The opening of the 1942-'43 season sees social butterflies transformed into wheel horses and the favorite resort mode, a Red Cross uniform. Former Glamor Girl Gloria Baker Topping sweeps up cigaret butts in the Volunteers for Victory canteen, while Mrs. Aksel C. P. Wichfeld, the former Fifi Widener, has learned to wash a pie pan. Others have been inducted into the gentle art of opening a can without a casualty.

Palm Beach has been accused of nourishing a stuffed shirt attitude, but this war has proven that this is a fallacy. Not a single brass hat may be found in the canteen or beach casino operated by the socially prominent "volunteers." Only private soldiers are welcomed, and their money isn't any good either. A nickel for the use of a towel is the only charge made at the beach casino, and if the soldier brings his own towel he may go bathing and have the use of a locker "for free." At the canteen he is served by women who have stepped directly out of the social register of New York, Chicago, Detroit, and Philadelphia.

Mrs. George Alexander McKinlock of Chicago, who arrived in October, is one of the prime movers in V. for V. and civilian defense activities. Young Mrs. Orville E. Babcock Jr., whose husband is in the army, has been working at the canteen all summer.

Other Chicagoans already here include Mr. and Mrs. James E. Baum, who have opened their home on North Ocean boulevard. Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Newton have been down some time, and Col. and Mrs. LeRay Berdeau are expected early in December.

Mrs. John T. H. Mitchell and Miss Ann Mitchell will probably come down for a short stay this season. Their boulevard home has been leased to an attractive army couple, Capt. and Mrs. Jerre Sass, formerly of Oklahoma City. Capt. and Mrs. Sass are popular with the Palm Beach colony and entertain frequently, their parties being marked by originality. The Sasses will be joined late this month by their respective mothers, Mrs. Morris and Mrs. R. H. Sultan of Oklahoma City.

A bird's eye view of the winter season situation at this time indicates that practically all the regular winter colonists will be here. Many stayed down all summer. These hardy souls encountered the hottest summer this section has known since 1879, yet nobody seemed to mind. All were too busy with war activities. In fact, when the humidity was highest, they put on a "midsummer madness" party at a cocktail bar and cleared $3,000. It takes more than a war and summer heat to quench the spirit of Palm Beach.

Resorters who stayed here also experienced the manner in which a tropical summer merges gently and almost imperceptibly into fall, a fall with no falling leaves, sighing winds, or meadows brown and dead. Instead, bright blue skies embroidered with white, poinsettias growing scarlet at the tips, and the purple and crimson bougainvillaeas taking on added richness and glory. For autumn foliage, Florida offers hundreds of varieties of crotons, with leaves varying in size and shape, color, and structure, but all as colorful and glossy as ribbons or silk quilt pieces. The mercury has slipped down to a perfect 75, and thereabouts it will remain all season. There will be a few hot days and an angry cold snap or so for variety.

Early in November there was a hurricane scare, but it had subsided by Armistice day, which was bright and clear, and the Palm Beach civilian defense ambulances stole the parade.

In addition to the ambulances in the medical corps there are also four first aid stations equipped so that major emergency operations could be performed in any one of them. There are two mobile canteens, one a trailer from which 500 can be served, and the other a regulation army kitchen. Frederick Johnson of New York and Palm Beach is chairman of the civilian defense council. The civilian defense service corps is directed by ex-Actor Hugh Dillman, president of the Everglades club, who is assisted by Mrs. Margaret Emerson, mother of Mrs. Gloria Baker Topping.

Finds Capital Wives Can Keep State Secrets

By India Moffett.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Women in Washington are wonderful. Of course women everywhere are wonderful, but they have more chance in the nation's capital to show their mettle than they do at home. They're definitely men's helpmates here. They're the powerful silent partners, and we mean silent, too, for here women learn how to be silent when silence is golden, as it is now when wagging tongues are more dangerous than silly or amusing. It's the husbands in ninety-nin cases out of a hundred who carry the titles, but if there's a wife in the background you may be sure she is just as deserving of credit and honor.

There are, to be sure, some wives of public men who never become anything more in Washington than printed names in newspapers, but these are few and far between, for seldom is a woman eager or even willing to forego shining in the reflected glory of the spotlight that is on every public servant while he is a Washingtonian.

But Washington wives never admit their interest in things political; no, indeed. Smart women find that the more deviously they work the better the results, so to talk to the wife of any one in official life here would give one the impression that that particular wife, at least, was interested only in her home, her children, and the newest recipe for making soy bean mush taste like beefsteak. But this is only a protective camouflage; she's probably sizing you up as she talks, wondering where you fit into the picture and what you could do to help her and her husband in their upward climb.

Every man elected by the people to come to Washington is, to hear his wife tell it, here only because the people back home were so insistent upon his running for office; he and his wife are just living for the day when they can retire and forget this mad and artificial whirligig! But did you ever see the face of a woman whose husband just has lost his seat in the house of representatives or the senate before she had had time to don a nonchalant mask? It's a sorry sight.

Women in Washington are truly remarkable, tho, in keeping secret things that must not be told. There are only a few who even hint at the stupendous things they know, plans and facts that are of such importance that their husbands must wish they didn't have the responsibility of making and guarding them. For, make no mistake, men almost always share their secrets with the women nearest and dearest to them. There may have been times in the past when women were not safe repositories for state secrets, but this is not true today. The only women who gabble in Washington are those who have no men in their families.

• • •

Security was the word heard most often in the first press conference Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, director of the women's army auxiliary corps, held after she returned from a three-week tour of England. Most of the questions that were fired at her were not answered by the charming, poised chief of the WAACs because the answer "would jeopardize security." She did admit that some WAACs were going to England and that a recruiting campaign would be started soon to enlist more women into the new army, which is expected to number 18,500 by next March.

Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby.

"Why are women so reluctant to enlist in the WAACs and WAVES?" some one asked, adding, "Is it because all women want to be officers?" Mrs. Hobby indignantly denied both questions. She said that it would be no disgrace if women had to be drafted for necessary war work, industrial or military, but she avoided answering a direct question as to whether she anticipated the drafting of women. "You wouldn't want to get me in bad with congress," she admonished smilingly, "by having me get out of my own ballwick, would you?"

No one present wanted to get Mrs. Hobby in bad with congress or any one or anything, for she is popular with the press and the consensus of the men and women who write about her activities is that she is a clever and sincere woman who is doing her job well. Even the man reporter who said later, "Three weeks in England has made Hobby so aware that there is a war that she wouldn't buy a new hat!" wasn't being nasty, just characteristically masculine about what is supposed to be a feminine frailty. Mrs. Hobby did say that it was difficult to think normally about new hats and such fripperies after seeing what English women had undergone and were undergoing.

We've always thought that the autumns in Chicago were superior to other seasons in that city and consequently probably better than autumns anywhere else, but Washington has rivaled Chicago this fall. The sun is bright and the air is crisp and invigorating. A shortage of gasoline and a scarcity of taxis are not minded, for walking is a pleasure in such weather.

Even here, where gold braid and brass buttons are seen in such quantities that they occasion little comment, it was a colorful and notable gathering that assembled in the ballroom of the Shoreham hotel last Sunday afternoon to celebrate the seventh anniversary of the commonwealth of the Philippines. By radio we listened to President Roosevelt and President Camacho of Mexico, and in person we heard our valiant but ill host, the president of the Philippine government in exile, Manuel L. Quezon, give a thoughtful speech that ended on a high note that made you realize what a firebrand he must have been in better and healthier days. Enya Gonzalez, whom we heard sing last winter at the Arts club, contributed a song or two to the program, which ended with a preview of a splendid moving picture, "Pledge to Bataan," showing the Philippines in happier days.

Enya Gonzales.

Mrs. Quezon and the vice president of the Philippines, Sergio Osmena, received the 900 guests, among whom were many high officials of our government, army and navy, and representatives of all the united nations, and the neutral ones. The British ambassador, Lord Halifax, who, in spite of his personal grief in the recent loss of a son, carries on, was there, sitting near Ambassador Litvinov of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and Mme. Litvinov, a countrywoman of Halifax's. "I just saw the wife of a three-star general curtsey to Otto. Imagine!" the minister of a foreign republic now under Nazi domination whispered to our companion, protocol authority from our state department. "She had the grace to be embarrassed when she saw me watching her," the minister continued. Otto, of course, is the archduke pretender to the nonexistent throne of Austria.

Miss Ann Frances Stapleton's engagement to Jewell F. Thornton was announced at a farewell party for Mr. Thornton preceding his departure for the navy as a radio technician. Palm Springs' Desert Vista Is Relaxing

By Dorothy Johnson.

There's something about a vista of limitless desert, overshadowed by aloof mountains, which calms frazzled nerves instantaneously. Film stars who, before the advent of war workers, probably were the most harried people in the United States, learned this long ago, and made Palm Springs, Cal., a popular between-picture rendezvous. They're still going there, resting from movie making and bond selling tours, and the war workers are following their example, as well as busy executives burdened with war responsibilities.

Of course, it wasn't filmdom which first discovered Palm Springs. It was the native Indians. They bathed in the springs, and were doing so when the Spanish explorers, headed by Juan de Anza, came upon them in 1853. From that time forward, white men gradually took over, and thru the decades Palm Springs has grown in favor with vacationers seeking relaxation, diversion, and eye filling beauty.

One of the chief attractions of the spa is the climate, which is fortunate in furnishing a maximum of possible sunshine each year, and the best of temperature readings. The village owes its enviable climate to the tall western wall of mountains which shelters it from coastal storms. Often one can see the rain clouds lurking over the top of Mount San Jacinto, while above the desert the sun shines from a clear sky. Palm Springs is situated at the foot of the San Jacinto mountains, on the western edge of the southern California desert, known as the Colorado desert, which extends south and east to the Colorado river and the Mexican border, 125 miles away.

It's all very well for us to dwell at length on the scenic, sports and recreational facilities of this famous desert community, but we know from personal experience that behind every successful vacation is a good hotel, so before we mention the many things to do and see around Palm Springs, we want to stress that the accommodations are superb and varied, from luxurious hotels to modest ranches, to suit every taste, purse, and desire, and so far, demands of the armed services have made no noticeable inroads.

First, what to see. In the Palm Springs area is Tahquitz canyon, a spectacular gorge. Traveling south on the Palm canyon drive, a right turn on Ramon road will take the visitor up the alluvial fan to a space within the canyon mouth. From this point a foot trail follows the canyon stream for a quarter of a mile, culminating in a 60 foot waterfall.

Andreas canyon is on the Agua Caliente Indian reservation. Here remain ample evidences of ancient Indian occupation, in the form of grinding holes in the rock and fire blackened caves under granite slabs. Picnickers find rare charm in Palm canyon, and the more venturesome hiker will have only his endurance to limit him. The Palm canyon stream runs clear and cold between a fringe of palms. The Devil's Garden plateau has an elevation well in excess of Palm Springs', and the plants growing there are of a different type. The most noticeable is the barrel cactus, which grows in profusion.

Approximately 15 miles southwest of Palm Springs are the so-called "Sahara Dunes," an area of sand hills whose barren, rippled surface resembles that of the Africa desert.

Things to do include riding, of course, with breakfast rides, an old Palm Springs custom, well to the front in preference. Several mornings a week, by horse and by coach, a good company sets out for piping hot breakfast prepared by cowboys. Polo and horse shows are prominent on every Palm Springs calendar, too, and the set which isn't especially horsey goes in for badminton, tennis, golf, cycling, scooter riding, skeet shooting, and swimming in beautiful pools.

The gas rationing and rubber conservation situation has been met resourcefully by Palm Springs hostelries. Coaches and horses carry on the service formerly furnished on tires.

Is the Grand Canyon open at any time other than summer? I'm going west on business and thought I'd take it in, weather permitting.—R. B. S.

Grand Canyon National park is open the year around. It's a good stop for a "civilian furlough" on a western trip at this time of year. During the last five years the south rim has been visited by nearly two million persons. The park covers 1,009 square miles. Its western boundary extends to Grand Canyon National monument. Eastward the area runs to the mouth of the Little Colorado river and the Navajo reservation, within which lies the Painted Desert.

Please tell me some details of the Mesa Verde.—G. D.

Mesa Verde National park, in southwestern Colorado, preserves some of the most extensive evidences of prehistoric human habitation to be found in North America. There is Cliff Palace, a little city built into a gigantic shallow cave high up in the canyon wall; the Sun Temple, and other curious dwellings and communal structures of a race that attained a high plane of development and culture many centuries ago, and then slipped into oblivion long before the coming of the first white men. The great ruins of Mesa Verde, built in a setting of primitive grandeur, are as fascinating to the layman-traveler as they are to archeologists, whose painstaking studies have revealed most of what we now know about the early Indian inhabitants of the mesa.

Everything changes but Christmas

Now, once more, comes the familiar yearning to give something wonderful to somebody else. As you walk beneath the great vaulted aisle at Marshall Field & Company, beneath the pine boughs and the candles, Christmas—and all it has meant since you were little—comes over you with a rush. You know that Christmas mustn't change—for your children, for those who are away, for you. Though the earth rock, these things remain—stockings by the fire, carols sung with the folks, the memory of sleigh bells in the snow. And so, with whatever gifts you give, now and ever after, will go the unchanging, unchangeable Spirit of Christmas which you hold so infinitely dear.
